FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

the people of the whole country in order that land might be acquired for the purpose of giving free homes to a very small proportion of them." This language and the idea are almost identical with those used by Mr. Buchanan in his veto of the first homestead bill passed by Congress. In that message he said: "This bill will prove unequal and unjust in its operations, because from its nature it is confined to one class of our people." That is true, but it is a class without restriction and discrimination, and the class to whom the lands rightfully belong—the class whose labor adds so much to their value, while contributing so largely to the development and growth of the country and its general welfare.

What property rights did the Government acquire from the Indian by these later treaties different from those acquired by all other treaties heretofore made? The Government paid him or has agreed to pay him for what? Just what the Government has always acquired heretofore in the treaties which have been made from time to time since the landing of the Pilgrims.

The Government secured by such treaties the willing consent of the Indian to move onward, leaving the pioneer settler to rear his cabin home on his receding footsteps, without fear or danger of torch or tomahawk. No matter how much money the Government pays or agrees to pay for such a purpose, it is far better and more humane thus to secure his willing consent to leave his old hunting grounds and find new ones than to drive him forth with powder and ball.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman permit an interruption and a question?

Mr. GROW. Certainly.

Mr. FARIS. I desire to preface my question with the admission of my great interest in what the gentleman has said, and call attention to the fact that we have witnessed a remarkable scene in this House by the gentleman incorporating in his remarks utterances that were made by him in this presence longer ago than many of us have been living, in substantial harmony with his present views. I desire to ask the gentleman, as an incident in his distinguished career, if he has in all these years espoused with the same fidelity and the same consistency other great public questions so happily maintained by him in the matter he is now discussing? I ask him this as a matter for our information.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any inconsistency in my public career. As the gentleman has appealed to my egotism, I will say that if I had my life to live over I would not change my action on the great political questions upon which I have been called upon to act, whether as Representative or private citizen.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Chairman, I interrogate my distinguished friend as a matter of information to us who are enjoying his speech, and without the least reflection that he was inconsistent in his public career. My thought is respectful and deferential.

Mr. GROW. I so understand the gentleman. I may have been wrong; but there is no vote I ever gave in this Hall as a representative of the people that I would change if I was called upon to vote again under like circumstances. [Loud applause.] My maiden speech as a Representative in Congress was made on the right of the pioneer settler to his home, without money and without price, for the reasons stated in part in the extract just read. I have continued in that same sentiment.

In my early boyhood that portion of northeastern Pennsylvania immediately around my home was somewhat of a wilderness. The first settlers there were, most of them, just building their log cabins, with tall forest trees in close proximity on every side. A sled path winding among these trees led out to the grist mill, post-office, store, and blacksmith shop of the neighborhood. By the labor of the settler alone the forest was to be felled, the land cleared, a family supported, and the claimant to the soil was to be paid. So long years of ceaseless toil must intervene before the settler could call his humble cabin home his own. As I passed along these winding sled paths, not infrequently would the query arise with myself, Why should this man for years contribute all his earnings, save a scanty support for his family, to some person living miles away, whose only claim to the land was that years before the claimant or his ancestors sent a surveyor and axman, and by blazed trees marked a surveyor's line through the forest?

At a later period, as a student in the schools the query came, as it comes to all in the course of historic reading, What was the cause of the unexampled prosperity and greatness of some nations at one period of their existence and their subsequent decay and utter ruin? This question, under the head of the Rise and the Fall of Empires, is the great puzzle of all philosophizing on the real causes of national decay. I closed my course of historic reading in the schools with the firm conviction that no nation ever yet died or ever will, no matter what the extent of its territory or how vast its population, if governed by just laws and its people are imbued with a spirit of humanity as broad as the race.

On reading in Hooke's History of Rome a description of the condition of Italy more than two thousand years before, as given in a speech by Tiberius Gracchus, then a tribune of the people, my early, crude idea was greatly strengthened that the true policy for a government was to secure its unoccupied public lands in limited quantities to the landless of its people, and to prevent by law so far as possible the earnings of labor from being absorbed in any other way than the making of the laborer's home comfortable and his fireside happy. After leaving school and entering a law office, I read in Blackstone's Commentaries—the first book given to a law student—that—

> There is no foundation in nature or natural law why a set of words on parchment should convey the dominion to land. The use and occupancy alone gives to man an exclusive right to retain in a permanent manner the specific land which before belonged generally to everybody, but particularly to nobody.

From that time forth the crude idea and shadowy opinion which had flitted through my brain in casually observing the labor and trials of the early settlers near my home became a fixed conviction as to one of the fundamental rights of man. The other conviction is equally fixed—that governments are bound to see to it, so far as possible, that none of the earnings of labor are taken from the laborer without returning an equivalent for those earnings alone are all he has to make his home comfortable and his fireside happy. The pillars of empires and states rest upon the comfort and happiness of the fireside of labor. [Applause.]

Why should the settler be required by his Government to pay for the privilege of occupying a portion of an uncultivated wilderness, just as it was when created by the God of nature and in the same condition in which it was when the morning stars sang together? What equivalent does the Government return to him when it takes $1 or $3 or more an acre from his hard earnings, which he needs to make his home comfortable, to build the church and the schoolhouse, to develop all the elements of a higher and better civilization? This legislation, which was begun in 1889, is a greater wrong to the settlers upon those lands than was ever perpetrated by the Government under the old system of selling the public lands to the highest bidder, and for that reason I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is a bill pending to correct this wrong. Pay the Indian whatever the Government agrees; I care not what the amount is. But what rightful claim of ownership can he have or anybody else in the soil of a wilderness without cultivation? The only evidence of the occupation of the land by the Indian is his moccasin trail through the forest or along the banks of its winding streams. He bounds his claim of ownership by rivers and mountain ranges, and within these circumscribed limits he claims ownership not only to the land but to the wild beasts that hide in its jungles; to the fish that swim in its running waters, and in the birds of the air that disport in the foliage of its green forests.

The evil spirit standing beside our Saviour on the high mountain, overlooking the kingdoms of this world and the glories thereof, had just as good title and rightful ownership in them all as has the Indian standing on the highest mountain peaks of a continent, and claiming ownership as monarch of all he surveys, because his ancestors, in the years of the bygone, roamed over it with fishing rod and bow and arrow, and at a later period with shotgun and rifle, their only implements of husbandry and civilization. But their claim of title and ownership in the soil of an uncultivated wilderness is just as good as the claim to a continent by the mightiest monarch of the nations because a subject of his was the first white man to gaze upon its shores, or to sail across one of its flowing rivers. The right of discovery, so long recognized by the nations, is well enough when applied, as it should be, to the dominion over the institutions—the social organisms—that may be established by or for the inhabitants of the newly discovered country. But how can discovery confer any rightful ownership to the soil, any more than to the atmosphere that floats over it, or to the waters that rush from its mountain sides to the sea. How can the Indian, any more than anybody else, acquire a rightful ownership in the soil, when the only evidence of his habitation and occupancy is the smoke that curls from his wigwam, covered with the skins of wild beasts.

Since the delivery of the speech in the old Hall, from which I have just read, the pioneer settler has crossed the great central valley of the Mississippi, and scaling the snow-crowned summits of the Sierras, has built a mighty cordon of free States on the shores of the Pacific, rearing everywhere along his pathway through the wilderness temples of science and civilization on the ruins of savage life. The achievements of the pioneer settler since he first overleaped the Alleghanies in his march westward has been the achievements of science and civilization over the elements, the wilderness, and the savage.

Under the old land system the Government by its regulations permitted the speculator to exact from the settler from $3 to $5 or more per acre, without rendering any equivalent. By this new system which this bill, if passed, would supplant, the Government itself takes directly from the settler from $1 to $3.75 per acre, and returns no equivalent, any more than did the speculator under the old system. What justice can there be in legislation which thus absorbs the earnings for long years of these hardy sons of toil who contribute so much to the greatness and glory of the Republic?

There is no excuse for such a policy. Take from the white settler, who is struggling to make a home for himself and his family and to educate his children—take from him his earnings, for what? To keep the Indian tramping around in moccasins and idleness! The white man working to maintain the Indian in idleness is equally bad with the old land system which permitted the speculator to take from the settler four or five dollars or more an acre.

Mr. Chairman, the present law of Congress compels the settler, who cultivates the soil, developes the resources of our country, and is a brave soldier in the hour of peril, and bares his bosom in defense of the Republic, to pay out of his hard earnings to support the Indian in idleness, because the Government of the United States has to pay the Indian for these lands. Let the Treasury pay. The willing consent of the Indian to leave is of more consequence than any amount of money that is paid to him; but there is no reason why the Government should, by an independent act of legislation, compel the settler to pay from his earnings into the Treasury for these lands any more than there was in the old times, under the old system, which has been repudiated by the American people.

Mr. Chairman, in 1860 the Republican party adopted as one of its cardinal principles and embodied it in its party platform, "Free homesteads for the settlers on the public domain." To-day it is in the platform of every political party that had a candidate for the Presidency in the field at the last election except our gold Democratic friends who met at Indianapolis, and the glare of the yellow metal, I suppose, so dazzled their vision that they overlooked the homestead settlers. [Laughter and applause.]

In 1860 the Republican party platform was almost identical in words with those in its platform made at St. Louis, and on which it was victorious at the last election.

Six homestead bills, substantially the same, passed the House of Representatives before the final enactment of the law. The first three never received any action in the Senate. The fourth was supplanted in the Senate by a motion to lay it aside to take up a bill to purchase from Spain the Island of Cuba. Had that been done, then we might have been spared the sad spectacle witnessed now of a people struggling through heroic deeds for the inalienable rights of mankind. [Applause.] That ended all efforts to take up the homestead bill in that Congress.

The next Congress, beginning in December, 1859, consumed over a month in electing a Speaker. As soon as the House was organized, early in January, 1860, the homestead bill, which had been defeated in the Senate in the preceding session, I again introduced, and it passed the House. Some time in March or April following it was taken up in the Senate, and a substitute offered by Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, was adopted. The House refused to accept the substitute, which was merely a graduation in price of the public lands, making it 25 cents an acre to the settler on five years' cultivation and 62½ cents for preemptors. After some weeks the committee of conference of the two Houses agreed to the Senate's substitute, which the House finally accepted on the principle that "half a loaf is better than no bread." This bill President Buchanan vetoed in June, 1860. At the extra session of Congress convened by President Lincoln July 4, 1861, the same old homestead bill, which had previously passed the House five times, was introduced, and at the following regular session of the Thirty-seventh Congress passed both Houses and became a law, as I have stated.

I call attention to the history of these transactions to show that while it was a cardinal doctrine of the Republican party at that time, even when it was in its cradle, it has been adopted by every political party and embodied in the platform of all excepting the party that met at Indianapolis last year. Now, while a party platform may have or may not have merit, those who adhere to the party are bound to see that its pledges are carried out faithfully. The will of the people is to be respected according to the verdict at the ballot box. [Applause.]

But, sir, to return to the point I had in view, I claim that the Indian should not be forced from the old hunting grounds of his fathers without his consent; and that should have been the policy of the Government from the beginning. Never was so unwise a policy adopted by a government in reference to any people as that which was adopted by ours in reference to these people—recognizing them as an independent nation, owning a part of the earth's surface, with whom we must treat. They had just as good a right perhaps as the mightiest monarch of any nation has in his claim of ownership to a continent, because one of his subjects was the first white man to look on its shores or sail across one of its navigable rivers. I know that this is the doctrine of the books and of international agreement. Nations who have discovered new lands have the right to control the social organisms, institutions, and governments that may be built upon them. But how can they gain a title to the soil by a mere act of discovery any more than to the atmosphere that floats over it or the waters that leap from its mountains to the sea?

But, sir, I have no desire to trespass upon the patience of the committee. I have done what I wished to do, and called their attention to a bill now pending in this House, as an amendment to a House bill, that provides for relieving these settlers from these unjust and excessive burdens and restore these lands to the same provisions as all other lands of the Government under the free-homestead law.

Why should the Government continue this innovation upon the homestead policy, by which greater injustice and wrong is perpetrated upon the settler than was ever perpetrated upon him under the old system of selling the lands to the highest bidder? If the homestead policy is to be discarded, why double and thribble the amount ever before exacted of the settler? The passage of this bill would place all the public lands alike, no matter how or when acquired, under the provisions of the free-homestead law, which, previous to this innovation, has existed uninterruptedly for more than a third of a century, and under which the wilderness has been made "to bloom and blossom as the rose."

I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I thank the gentleman very much. I am not quite so proud as my respected friend from Pennsylvania, who would not take time from me. I will take time from him.

Mr. GROW. Because it is worth nothing to me. [Laughter.]

APPENDIX.

Free Homes for Free Men.

SPEECH OF HON. GALUSHA A. GROW,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

February 29, 1860.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. GROW said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: At the close of the Revolution the colonies claimed dominion, based upon their respective colonial grants from the Crown of Great Britain, over an uninhabited wilderness of 220,000,000 acres of land, extending to the Mississippi on the west and the Canadas on the north. The disposition of these lands became a subject of controversy between the colonies even before the Confederation, and was an early obstacle to the organization of any government for the protection of their common interests.

The colonies whose charters from the Crown extended over none of the unoccupied lands claimed, in the language of the instructions of Maryland in 1779 to her Delegates in Congress—

> That a country unsettled at the commencement of this war, claimed by the British Crown and ceded to it by the treaty at Paris, if wrested from the common enemy by the blood and treasure of the thirteen States, should be considered as a common property, subject to be parceled out by Congress into free, convenient, and independent governments, in such manner and at such times as the wisdom of that assembly shall hereafter direct.

The propriety and the justice of ceding these lands to the Confederation, to be thus parceled out into free and independent States, having become the topic of discussion everywhere in the colonies, Congress, in order to allay the controversy and remove the only remaining obstacle to a final ratification of the Articles of Confederation, declared by resolution on the 10th of October, 1780—

> That the unappropriated lands which may be ceded or relinquished to the United States by any particular State * * * shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, and be settled and formed into distinct republican States, which shall become members of the Federal Union and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States, etc. That the said lands shall be granted or settled at such times and under such regulations as shall hereafter be agreed on by the United States in Congress assembled, or nine or more of them.

In pursuance of the provisions of this resolution, New York, Virginia, Massachusetts, Connecticut, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Georgia ceded their claims, including title and jurisdiction, to the waste lands, as they were called, outside of their respective State limits; all of them, except Georgia and North Carolina, without any conditions annexed to their respective grants save those contained in the resolution of Congress just referred to. The reservation in the grants of Georgia and North Carolina were not, however, as to the future disposition of the lands, but a condition that slavery should not be prohibited therein by Congress. The territory thus conditionally granted is contained within the States of Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama. With the exception of the grants of North Carolina and Georgia (and the reservations even in those relating only to the form of their future government), the public lands claimed by the colonies at the close of the Revolution were ceded to the General Government, to be settled and disposed of "under such regulations as shall hereafter be agreed on by the United States in Congress assembled."

Since that time the Government has acquired by treaty—of France, the Louisiana purchase; of Spain, the Floridas; of Mexico, Utah, New Mexico, and California, containing all together over 1,200,000,000 acres of land. So the General Government, by cessions from the original States and purchases from other nations, has acquired, exclusive of water, as computed by the Commissioner of the Land Office, 1,450,000,000 acres of public lands, of which there have been sold to September 30, 1859, 147,088,274 acres, and otherwise disposed of in grants and donations to individuals, corporations, companies, and States, including grants since June 30, 1857, 241,770,052 acres, leaving of public lands belonging to the Government, undisposed of on September 30, 1859, 1,061,141,675 acres.

What disposition shall be made of this vast inheritance is a question of no small magnitude. Three times within seven years a homestead bill has passed this House and been defeated each time by the Democratic majority in the Senate. On the vote on the homestead bill in the House last Congress, out of 130 Democrats, but 31 voted for it; and in the Senate, on the test vote between taking up the homestead bill, after it had passed the House and only required the vote of the Senate to make it a law, so far as Congress was concerned, or to take up the bill for the purchase of Cuba, but 1 Democrat voted for the homestead, and only 8 at any time; while every Republican in the Senate and every one in the House, with a single exception, was for the homestead. Of all the Representatives of the slave States, but 3 in the House voted for it, and but 2 at any time in the Senate. So the Democratic party, as a party, arrayed itself in opposition to this beneficent policy. The Republican party, on the other hand, is committed to this measure by its votes in Congress, by its resolves in State conventions, and by its devotion to the great central idea of its existence—the rights and interests of free labor.

Early in this session I introduced a bill, which now awaits the action of the House, providing that any person who is 21 years or more old, or who is the head of a family, may enter 160 acres of any land subject to preemption, or upon which he may have a preemption claim, and by cultivating the same for five years shall be entitled to a patent from the Government on the payment of the usual fees of the land office and $10 to cover the cost of surveying and managing.

The land policy, as now conducted, permits the President in his discretion to expose to public sale, by proclamation, any or all of the public lands, after the same are surveyed. Every person settled on the lands so advertised for sale must before the day fixed in the proclamation of the President pay for his lands, or they are liable to be sold to any bidder who offers $1.25, or more, per acre. During the days of sale fixed by the President, anyone can purchase at $1.25 per acre as many acres of land not before preempted as he desires, selecting his own location. The lands that remain unsold at the expiration of the days of sale fixed by the President are subject to private entry; that is, any person can enter at the land office any or all of the lands that are at that time unsold at $1.25 per acre, if the same have not been offered for sale more than ten years; if for a longer period, then at a less price, according to the length of time they may have been in the market. Thus, under the existing policy, there is no restraint on land monopoly. The Rothschilds, the Barings, or any other of the world's millionaires may become the owners of untold acres of our public domain, to be resold to the settler at exorbitant prices, or to be held as an investment for future speculation.

Congress, as the trustee of the whole people, is vested, by the condition of the grants from the States and by the Constitution itself, with the sole discretionary power of disposing of these lands. But, in the exercise of a sound discretion, it becomes its duty to dispose of them in the way that will best promote the greatness and glory of the Republic. And how can that be accomplished so well as by a policy that will secure them in limited quantities to the actual cultivator at the least possible cost, and thus prevent the evils of a system of land monopoly—one of the direst, deadliest curses that ever paralyzed the energies of a nation or palsied the arm of industry? It needs no lengthy dissertation to portray its evils. Its history in the Old World is written in sighs and tears. Under its influence you behold there the proudest and most splendid aristocracies side by side with the most abject and debased people; vast manors hemmed in by hedges as a sporting ground for the nobility, while men are dying beside the inclosure for the want of land to till. Under its blighting influence you behold industry in rags and patience in despair. Such are some of the fruits of land monopoly in the Old World; and shall we permit its seeds to vegetate in the virgin soil of the New? Our present system is subject to like evils, not so great in magnitude perhaps, but similar in kind.

The Government, by its existing land policy, has thus caused to be abstracted from the earnings of its hardy pioneers almost seventeen hundred million dollars for the mere privilege of enjoying one of God's bounties to man. This large amount has been abstracted from the sons of toil without rendering any equivalent, save a permit from the State to occupy a wilderness, to which not a day or hour of man's labor had been applied to change it from the condition in which the God of nature made it. Why should governments seize upon any of the bounties of God to man, and make them a source of revenue? While the earth was created for the whole human family, and was made its abiding place through the pilgrimage of this life, and since the hour of the primal curse, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," man has been forced to the cultivation of the soil to obtain subsistence for himself and the means of promoting the welfare of the race, why should governments wrest from him the right to apply his labor to such unoccupied portion of the earth's surface as may be necessary for his support until he has contributed to the revenues of the state any more than to permit him to breathe the air, enjoy the sunlight, or quaff from the rills and rivers of the earth? It would be just as rightful, were it possible to be done, to survey the atmosphere off into quarter sections and transfer it by parchment titles, divide the sun into quantum of rays and dole it out to groping mortals at a price, or arch over the waters of the earth into vast reservoirs and sell it to dying men.

In the language of remarks heretofore made on this subject, why has this claim of man to monopolize any of the gifts of God to man been confined by legal codes to the soil alone? Is there any other reason than that it is a right which, having its origin in feudal times—under a system that regarded man but as an appendage of the soil that he tilled, and whose life, liberty, and happiness, were but means of increasing the pleasures, pampering the passions and appetites of his liege lord—and, having once found a place in the books, it has been retained by the reverence which man is wont to pay to the past and to time-honored precedents? The human mind is so constituted that it is prone to regard as right what has come down to us approved by long usage and hallowed by gray age. It is a claim that had its origin with the kindred idea that royal blood flows only in the veins of an exclusive few, whose souls are more ethereal, because born amid the glitter of courts and cradled amid the pomp of lords and courtiers, and, therefore, they are to be installed as rulers and lawgivers of the race. Most of the evils that afflict society have had their origin in violence and wrong enacted into law by the experience of the past and retained by the prejudices of the present.

Is it not time to sweep from the statute book its still lingering relics of feudalism, to blot out the principles ingrafted upon it by the narrow-minded policy of other times, and to adapt the legislation of the country to the spirit of the age and to the true ideas of man's rights and relations to his Government?

For if a man has a right on earth, he has a right to land enough to rear a habitation on. If he has a right to live, he has a right to the free use of whatever nature has provided for his sustenance—air to breathe, water to drink, and land enough to cultivate for his subsistence; for these are the necessary and indispensable means for the enjoyment of his inalienable rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." And is it for a Government that claims to dispense equal and exact justice to all men, and that has laid down correct principles in its great chart of human rights, to violate those principles and its solemn declarations in its legislative enactments?

The struggle between capital and labor is an unequal one at best. It is a struggle between the bones and sinews of men and dollars and cents. And in that struggle is it for the Government to stretch forth its arm to aid the strong against the weak? Shall it continue, by its legislation, to elevate and enrich idleness on the wail and the woe of industry?

For if the rule be correct as applied to governments as well as individuals, that whatever a person permits another to do, having the right and means to prevent it, he does himself, then indeed is the Government responsible for all the evils that may result from speculation and land monopoly in the public domain. For it is not denied that Congress has the power to make any regulations for the disposal of these lands not injurious to the general welfare. Now, when a new tract is surveyed, and you open the land office and expose it for sale, the man with the most money is the largest purchaser. The most desirable and available locations are seized upon by the capitalists of the country who seek that kind of investment. The settler who chances not to have a preemption right, or to be there at the time of sale, when he comes to seek a home for himself and his family must pay the speculator three or four hundred per cent on his investment or encounter the trials and hardships of a still more remote border life. And thus, under the operation of laws that are called equal and just, there is taken from the settler three or four dollars per acre and put in the pocket of the speculator—thus, by the operation of law, abstracting so much of his hard earnings for the benefit of capital; for not an hour's labor has been applied to the land since it was sold by the Government, nor is it more valuable to the settler. Has not the laborer a right to complain of legislation that compels him to endure greater toils and hardships, or contribute a portion of his earnings for the benefit of the capitalist? But not upon the capitalist or the speculator is it proper that the blame should fall. Man must seek a livelihood and do business under the laws of the country; and whatever rights he may acquire under the laws, though they may be wrong, yet the well-being of society requires that they be respected and faithfully observed. If a person engage in a business legalized and regulated by the laws, and uses no fraud or deception in its pursuit, and evils result to the community, let them apply the remedy to the proper source; that is, to the lawmaking power. The laws and the lawmakers are responsible for whatever evils necessarily grow out of their enactments. What justice can there be in the legislation of a country by which the earnings of its labor are abstracted for any purpose without returning an equivalent?

In order to secure to labor its earnings so far as is possible by legislative action, and to strengthen the elements of national greatness and power, why should not the legislation of the country be so changed as to prevent for the future the evils of land monopoly by setting apart the vast and unoccupied territory of the Union and consecrating it forever in free homes for free men?

Mr. MAYNARD. May I be allowed to ask my friend from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. GROW. Certainly.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is this: Whether he is in favor, or otherwise, of allowing the old soldier or his assignee to locate his land warrant on the public domain——

Mr. GROW. I would provide in our land policy for securing homesteads to actual settlers, and whatever bounties the Government should grant to the old soldiers I would have made in money, and not in land warrants, which are bought in most cases by the speculator, as an easier and cheaper mode of acquiring the public lands. So they only facilitate land monopoly. The men who go forth at the call of their country to uphold its standard and vindicate its honor are deserving of a more substantial reward than tears to the dead and thanks to the living; but there are soldiers of peace as well as of war, and though no waving plume beckons them on to glory or to death, their dying scene is oft a crimson one. They fall leading the van of civilization along untrodden paths and are buried in the dust of its advancing columns. No monument marks the scene of deadly strife, no stone their final resting place; the winds sighing through the branches of the forest alone sing their requiem. Yet they are the meritorious men of the Republic—the men who give it strength in war and glory in peace. The achievements of our pioneer army, from the day they first drove back the Indian tribes from the Atlantic seaboard to the present hour, have been the achievements of science and civilization over the elements, the wilderness, and the savage.

If rewards or bounties are to be granted for true heroism in the progress of the race, none is more deserving than the pioneer who expels the savage and the wild beast, and opens in the wilderness a home for science and a pathway for civilization.

> Peace hath her victories,
> No less renowned than war.

The paths of glory no longer lead over smoking towns and crimsoned fields, but along the lanes and by-ways of human misery and woe, where the bones and sinews of men are struggling with the elements, with the unrelenting obstacles of nature, and the not less unmerciful obstacles of a false civilization. The noblest achievement in this world's pilgrimage is to raise the fallen from their degradation, soothe the broken-hearted, dry the tears of woe, and alleviate the sufferings of the unfortunate in their pathway to the tomb.

> Go say to the raging sea, be still;
> Bid the wild, lawless winds obey thy will;
> Preach to the storm, and reason with despair;
> But tell not misery's son that life is fair.

If you would lead the erring back from the paths of vice and crime to virtue and to honor, give him a home—give him a hearthstone, and he will surround it with household gods. If you would make men wiser and better, relieve your almshouses, close the doors of the penitentiaries and break in pieces the gallows, purify the influences of the domestic fireside, for that is the school in which human character is formed, and there its destiny is shaped; there the soul receives its first impress and man his first lesson, and they go with him for weal or for woe through life. For purifying the sentiments, elevating the thoughts, and developing the noblest impulses of man's nature, the influences of a moral fireside and an agricultural life are the noblest and the best. In the obscurity of the cottage, far removed from the seductive influences of rank and affluence, are nourished the virtues that counteract the decay of human institutions, the courage that defends the national independence, and the industry that supports all classes of the State.

It was said by Lord Chatham, in his appeal to the House of Commons, in 1775, to withdraw the British troops from Boston, that "trade, indeed, increases the glory and wealth of a country; but its true strength and stamina are to be looked for in the cultivators of the land. In the simplicity of their lives is found the simpleness of virtue, the integrity and courage of freedom. These true, genuine sons of the soil are invincible."

The history of American prowess has recorded these words as prophetic. Man, in defense of his hearthstone and fireside, is invincible against a world of mercenaries.

* * * * * * *

Even if the Government had a right, based in the nature of things, thus to hold these lands, it would be adverse to a sound national policy to do so, for the real wealth of a country consists not in the sums of money paid into its treasury, but in its flocks, herds, and cultivated fields. Nor does its real strength consist in fleets and armies, but in the bones and sinews of an independent yeomanry and the comfort of its laboring people. Its real glory consists not in the splendid palace, lofty spire, or towering dome, but in the intelligence, comfort, and happiness of the fireside of its citizens.

> What constitutes a state?
> Not high-raised battlement or labored mound,
> Thick wall or moated gate;
> Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crowned;
> Not bays and broad-armed ports,
> Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride;
> Not starred and spangled courts,
> Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride.
> No; men, high-minded men—
> * * * * * *
> Men, who their duties know,
> But know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain;
> Prevent the long-aimed blow,
> And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain:
> These constitute a state.

The prosperity of states depends not on the mass of wealth, but its distribution. That country is greatest and most glorious in which there is the greatest number of happy firesides. And if you would make the fireside happy, raise the fallen from their degradation, elevate the servile from their groveling pursuits to the rights and dignity of men, you must first place within their reach the means for supplying their pressing physical wants, so that religion can exert its influence on the soul and soothe the weary pilgrim in his pathway to the tomb.

But as a question of revenue merely, it would be to the advantage of the Government to grant these lands in homesteads to actual cultivators, if thereby it was to induce the settlement of the wilderness, instead of selling them to the speculator without settlement.

* * * * * * *

The settlement of the wilderness by a thriving population is as much the interest of the old States as of the new. The amount now received by the Government of the settler, for the land, would enable him to furnish himself with the necessary stock and implements to commence its cultivation.

For the purposes of education, building railroads, opening all the avenues of trade, and of subduing the wilderness, the best disposition to be made of these lands is to grant them in limited quantities to the settler, and thus secure him in his earnings, by which he would have the means to surround himself with comfort and make his fireside happy; to erect the schoolhouse, the church, and all the other ornaments of a higher civilization, and rear his children educated and respected members of society. This policy will not only add to the revenues of the General Government and the taxable property of the new States, but will increase the productive industry and commerce of the whole country, while strengthening all the elements of national greatness.

The first step in the decline of empires is the neglect of their agricultural interest, and with its decay crumbles national power. It is the great fact stamped on all the ruins that strew the pathway of civilization. When the world's unwritten history shall be correctly deciphered, the record of the rise, progress, and fall of empires will be but the history of the rise, development, and decline of agriculture. Hooke, in describing the condition of agriculture among the Romans more than two thousand years ago, the process of absorption of the lands by the rich, and their consequent cultivation by slaves, furnishes the student of history with the secret causes that undermined the Empire and destroyed its liberties.

Had the policy advocated by the Gracchi, of distributing the public lands among the landless citizens of the nation, been adopted, the Roman fields would have been cultivated by free men instead of slaves, and there would have been a race of men to stay the ravages of the barbarian. The Eternal City would not then have fallen an easy prey to the Goth and Vandal, but the star of her empire might have floated in triumph long after the ivy twined her broken columns.

With homes and firesides to defend, the arms and the hearts of an independent yeomanry are a surer and more impregnable defense than battlement, wall, or tower. While the population of a country are the proprietors of the land which they till, they have an interest to surround their firesides with comfort and make their homes happy—the great incentive to industry, frugality, and sobriety. It is such habits alone that give security to a government, and form the real elements of national greatness and power.

National disasters are not the growth of a day, but the fruit of long years of injustice and wrong. The seeds planted by false, pernicious legislation often require ages to germinate and ripen into their harvests of ruin and death. The most pernicious of all the baleful seeds of national existence is a policy that degrades or impoverishes labor. Whenever agricultural labor becomes dishonorable, it will, of course, be confined to those who have no interest in the soil they till; and when the laborer ceases to have any interest in the land he cultivates, he ceases to have a stake in the advancement and good order of society, for he has nothing to lose, nothing to defend, nothing to hope for. The associations of an independent freehold are eminently calculated to ennoble and elevate the possessor. It is the lifespring of a manly national character and of a generous patriotism; a patriotism that rushes to the defense of the country and the vindication of its honor with the same zeal and alacrity that it guards the hearthstone and the fireside. Wherever freedom has unfurled her banner, the men who have rallied around to sustain and uphold it have come from the workshop and the field, where, inured to heat and to cold and to all the inclemencies of the seasons, they have acquired the hardihood necessary to endure the trials and privations of the camp. An independent yeomanry, scattered over our vast domain, is the best and surest guaranty for the perpetuity of our liberties; for their hearts are the citadel of a nation's power, their arms the bulwarks of liberty. Let the public domain, then, be set apart as the patrimony of labor, by preventing its absorption into large estates by capital, and its consequent cultivation by "tenants and slaves," instead of independent freeholders.

The proposition to change our land policy, so as to accomplish so desirable a result, by securing to the pioneer a home on the public domain at the bare cost of survey and transfer, is often rejected by those who have given but little thought to the subject, as leveling and agrarian. When was there ever an effort made, since the world began, to wrest from power its ill-gotten gains or to restore to man his inalienable rights but it has been met with the shout of leveling and agrarian? That is the alarm cry of the devotee of the past, with which he ever strives to prevent all reforms or innovations upon established usages. Behind such a bulwark old abuses intrench themselves and attempt to maintain their position by hurling against every assailant terms of odium and reproach, made so by the coloring of the adherents of prerogative and power. Until within a very recent period, the chroniclers of the race have been, for the most part, sycophants of the reigning classes; and, being allied with the State, have glossed over its contemporaneous despotism and wrongs, while they have branded the true defenders of the rights of the people and the champions of honorable labor as outlaws of history.

Because the Roman Gracchi proposed to elevate the Roman citizen, by dignifying his labor and restoring him to the rights of which he had been unjustly deprived by the oligarchy who controlled the State, their name was made synonymous with infamy and as arch disturbers of all that was good in society, till Niebuhr tore off the veil of two thousand years of obloquy and vindicated to future times their memories as true defenders of the rights of the people and advocates of the best interests and glory of their country. Such has been the fate of the world's reformers. Is it not time to learn wisdom from the chronicles of the past and cease a blind reverence for customs or institutions because of their gray age? Why should not American statesmen adapt the legislation of the country to the development of its material resources, the promotion of its industrial interests, and thereby dignify its labor and make strong the prime elements of national power?

Let this vast domain, then, be set apart and consecrated as a patrimony to the sons of toil; close the land office forever against the speculator, and thereby prevent the capital of the country seeking that kind of investment, from absorbing the hard earnings of labor without rendering an equivalent. While the laborer is thus crushed by this system established by the Government, by which so large an amount is abstracted from his earnings for the benefit of the speculator, in addition to all the other disadvantages that ever beset the unequal struggle between the bones and sinews of men and dollars and cents, what wonder is it that misery and want so often sit at his fireside, and penury and sorrow surround his deathbed?

While the pioneer spirit goes forth into the wilderness, snatching new areas from the wild beast, and bequeathing them a legacy to civilized man, let not the Government dampen his ardor and palsy his arm by legislation that places him in the power of soulless capital and grasping speculation; for upon his wild battlefield these are the only foes that his own stern heart and right arm can not vanquish.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10329, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be considered as now closed, except that the bill may be read through under the five-minute rule for debate and amendment; that when we reach the Southern Pacific Company item, that we will pass it over until after the bill has been finished, and then return to that provision with the understanding that an hour and a half debate on each side shall be had, or so much of that time as is necessary, after which a vote shall be taken.

Mr. SAYERS. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman that there will also be an amendment to except from the audited claims the payment of any amount due to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman now state his request?

Mr. CANNON. That general debate be considered as closed in Committee of the Whole upon this bill, with the exception that the bill shall be read through under the five-minute rule, passing over the item covering the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and that at the close of the bill we may recur to that item, and that there shall be general debate upon it, and a motion that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] gives notice of, for an hour and a half on a side; and that at the end of that debate a vote shall be taken.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question before the agreement is made.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does that proposition exclude the offering of proper amendments as the bill is being read under the five-minute rule?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. GROUT. There are several of those Pacific railway items, are there not? I suppose the understanding refers to them all.

Mr. CANNON. The Union and the Southern Pacific. The gentleman can have that passed over if he desires.

Mr. GROUT. There are several items relating to the Southern Pacific.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that the general debate be considered as closed; that the bill be read through under the five-minute rule, omitting the paragraphs relating to the Southern Pacific Railroad and Union Pacific Railroad, and that after the bill has been read through the committee may recur to these items, and after an hour and a half of general debate on a side these items shall be open to amendment and action of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by sections.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Amounts due Union and Kansas Pacific railroad companies: To pay the amounts due the Union and Kansas Pacific railroad companies, and settlements in favor of the Central Branch, Union Pacific Railroad Company, as fully set forth in House Document No. 183 of this session, $16,277.91.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this is one of the items to which I propose to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. That is right; it may be passed over.

Mr. SAYERS. Let that item be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks to have this item passed over, to be returned to later. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Public schools: For amount required to pay for care of schoolrooms at Miner School building for the current year, $140.93.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the item which has just been read, lines 5 to 7, inclusive, on page 21, passed over until the bill is finished, and that we may return to the item then.

Mr. SAYERS. What item is that?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] wishes to offer an amendment when he gets the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that the paragraph indicated be passed over, to be returned to again. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Defending suits in claims: For defending suits in the United States Court of Claims, $2,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois what the nature of the claim is for which this appropriation is made? The language is:

For defending suits in the United States Court of Claims, $2,000.

I want to know what class of claims is referred to.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that this is a general fund for the defense of suits involving all claims against the District of Columbia. But, as I understand it, the deficiency arises mainly from the defense of suits under the law that we, so far as the House by its action could do so, repealed the other day, on the District bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I find later on in the bill an appropriation to pay judgments of the Court of Claims.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not know why it was necessary to have a separate item.

Mr. CANNON. Well, this is entirely different. This is for defense of suits.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, I understand; but I did not know what class of suits was referred to.

Mr. CANNON. Well, everything; generally.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, inasmuch as I do not see any provision in the bill to pay the findings of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act, if he will object to an amendment paying a portion of these claims when we reach that portion of the bill?

Mr. CANNON. The Bowman Act!

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I think these claims ought to pass. I want to say that for years we paid these claims upon the warrant and certificate of the Quartermaster-General. Now, when we have a court organized to try the preliminary question, first, the question of the loyalty of the claimant; and when we have found this favorably, then you have a second investigation, to prove that the property was taken from this loyal claimant, that it was for supplies, and not for use and occupation of property, not for damages to property, such damages as were necessarily incidental to occupation of the States in rebellion by the Federal Army during the war, but that they were for supplies taken for the use of the Army, upon a contract that the Government would pay for these supplies, and when it is found that the claimant was loyal, it seems to me, at this late day, these claims ought to be paid without objection.

Now, I ask the gentleman, inasmuch as the Fifty-first Congress, the last Republican Congress, paid $550,000 of the findings of the Court of Claims in this class of cases, what objection can there be to the payment of similar claims now—claims that have been found favorably by this Court of Claims, composed of five Republican judges, the fact of loyalty having been pleaded as a plea in bar of the jurisdiction of the case, the judges finding on this plea in favor of the claimant, the case having again been remanded to the court, and proof taken not only of the loyalty of the claimant, but having shown the justice of the claim, and shown the fact that the property was taken, that the claimant was loyal, and the supplies were for the Union armies? It seems to me we ought not, Mr. Chairman, to be banking up these claims without paying some of them.

Now, I understand there is a bill ready which appropriates $400,000 or $500,000 for these claims, and I appeal to the committee and to the gentleman not to make a point of order when we reach that portion of the bill, but to let these claims be put upon this bill and be provided for. I would like my friend to answer me if I am not right about this.

Mr. DOCKERY. You are wrong.

Mr. CANNON. You are wrong. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that whatever merit or demerit there is in these claims, I will not discuss it from either standpoint now. Under the rules of the House they do not belong to a general appropriation bill. It is true that an appropriation was made in the Fifty-first Congress——

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). To pay a block of these claims; but it was made by an act entirely independent of a general appropriation bill. Now, there are many claims eminently just, but under the rules of the House they do not belong on general appropriation bills, and I do not care to discuss the merits of them.

Mr. MEREDITH. If they are just, what is the objection to letting them go into an appropriation bill?

Mr. CANNON. Simply because we do not intend to do justice for all the world, and, to use the language of a former President, "the rest of mankind," under the rules of the House, on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. MEREDITH. But you do bring in a rule to repeal some as a rider on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. I have not the honor to be on the Committee on Rules, but I will let each bill and each subject take care of itself and will cross the stream, if I have to, when I come to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman from Illinois has had the floor.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to tell us how we are ever to reach the stream that is before us and mighty near us?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have great respect for the House of Representatives, and I think it would be impudent to make any suggestions to it. It is quite competent for the House to make rules, modify rules, and do in an orderly way whatever it chooses to do. I am always proceeding under the direction of the House and its rules.

Mr. STEELE. Read!

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It is all well enough to "read;" but there are creditors of this Government, her own citizens, that want to be paid now. Will the gentleman inform us some way by which we can reach this stream, so near and yet so far?

Mr. CANNON. I will tell the gentleman one way by which it can not be done. It can not be done against the rules of this House, out of order, on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. MEREDITH. But you have repealed them on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is not my question. My question was how could it be done?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is just as competent as I am to answer that.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. But he has considerably less power.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I offered the pro forma amendment in order to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he would consent to an amendment, when we reach the proper place in the bill, for the payment of these Bowman claims. Now, the gentleman did not answer me exactly yea or nay, but I am persuaded to think he meant nay; but I will reserve my right, withdrawing the pro forma amendment, to offer it at that time.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman knows his rights as well as any gentleman on the floor, and is quite able to maintain them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know how to get them.

Mr. DOCKERY. No gentleman on the floor is more familiar with the rules than the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

State or Territorial Homes for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors: For continuing aid to State and Territorial Homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888: Provided, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State Homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, $65,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer, at the end of line 21, page 27, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add after line 21, page 27, the following:

"That all funds and property, real or personal, except bequests or donations from individuals, now held or that may hereafter be acquired for or on account of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any interest or business connected therewith, shall be held to be public funds or property, to be used, set apart, and disposed of for and on account of the objects for which said money or property was received; and all officers responsible for such money or property shall render to the Secretary of War direct, full, and complete vouchers, accounts, and returns for the same, to be approved by him, and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, further, That the money accounts shall be rendered monthly and the property returns at least once in six months."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pension Office: Salaries, Pension Office, 1893, payment to Louis Garesche for eighteen days' service as clerk, at $1,000 per annum, May 2 to 19, 1892, inclusive, being the amount disallowed that date but subsequently allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, June 28, 1894 (balance of appropriation went to surplus fund before voucher was presented for payment), $49.45.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after line 18, on page 37.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 37, after line 13, insert:

"For stationery and other necessary expenses at pension agencies, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, to show the necessity for this amendment, I send up to be read a telegram which I have received from the Commissioner of Pensions.

The telegram was read, as follows:

PENSION OFFICE, February 19, 1897.

Hon. WILLIAM A. STONE:

The deficiency bill reported to the House yesterday does not provide for deficiency of $4,000 for contingent expenses of pension agencies. This amount is essential to meet demands to June 30 next, otherwise the service will be crippled. What will be done in the matter? Answer.

D. I. MURPHY,
Commissioner of Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., at $167 per annum each, and for general repairs and improvements, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1896, $2,572.08.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My purpose is to ascertain if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, having this bill in charge, can furnish the items which constitute the amount mentioned in this provision, and particularly to ascertain if among those items is included two months' salary for the superintendent, which is in arrears.

Mr. CANNON. All I know about it is this: The amount in the bill is just what was estimated for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the clerk from the Indian Office, when questioned about it, said this:

It comes in this way: Last year the superintendent absconded, taking all the public funds and leaving a good many employees and bills unpaid. One thousand eight hundred dollars of that $2,300 is to pay employees, and about $300 of it is to pay for medical attendance by local physicians. The balance is for supplies furnished the schools, and so on.

The amount in the bill is the full amount of the estimate submitted by the Secretary. That is all the knowledge I have upon the subject.

Mr. GRIFFIN. My information is that the proper deficiency there is $3,300; so that this item is between $700 and $800 less than sufficient to discharge the obligations.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the simple way is to proceed upon the estimate, and if it should turn out in the future that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is wrong about the amount and that the gentleman's informant is correct, the error can be cured in another deficiency bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to Special Assistant Attorney John A. Marshall for services rendered under appointment, notwithstanding the fact that he failed to take an oath of office, as required by law, being for the fiscal year 1896, $300.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I find appropriations in this bill to pay special attorneys of the United State $9,509.45 in one paragraph and $4,450 in another. These appropriations are for special attorneys employed to defend the very suits to which I called attention a few moments ago, cases in which judgments have been rendered. We are proposing now to pay these attorneys for defending those suits——

Mr. CANNON. No; the gentleman is mistaken. These are amounts now due by the accounting officers of the Treasury for pay of attorneys of the United States courts in special cases.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Special attorneys employed in the United States courts, attorneys who have been employed to defend the cases to which I have referred, the Bowman Act cases.

Mr. CANNON. No; those cases only come before the Court of Claims, and these appropriations are not for the payment of attorneys employed to go before the Court of Claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, Mr. Chairman, it seems these particular appropriations are not for paying the assistant attorneys who have defended these Bowman Act claims in the Court of Claims; the gentleman from Illinois says so, and he is sustained by his two able lieutenants on this side of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

But these gentlemen will certainly not deny that they have appropriated $25,000, if I am not mistaken in the sum, to pay assistant district attorneys of the United States to defend the United States in these cases under the Bowman Act. For years that sum has been expended for that purpose, and simply the purpose of paying attorneys to defend these very cases that we decline to furnish the money to pay when we lose them.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman is mistaken in that. These attorneys receive a regular salary, and the appropriation is necessary to pay for depositions and other matters in connection with the defense of the suits.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman says that this appropriation is to pay the expenses of witnesses.

Mr. SAYERS. No; the expense of taking depositions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, that is the expense of witnesses.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no. There is a difference between paying the expenses of witnesses and the expense of taking depositions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It takes a witness to make a deposition, does it not? However, we will not quarrel about that.

But the point is that we are paying $25,000 a year for the expenses of these litigations, and thousands of dollars a year to attorneys to defend these suits against the United States.

Now, these suits go into the Court of Claims, and the best defense possible is made by able attorneys; and notwithstanding the court finds the claimants loyal and that their property was taken for the use of the Army of the United States, yet we can not get an appropriation to pay a single cent of the money due to them.

Mr. Chairman, the question in these Bowman Act cases for the court to consider is not whether the claimant was loyal when his property was taken, but the question is, Was the claimant loyal throughout the war to the Government? And that fact must be found affirmatively by the court before the court will take jurisdiction. It is not the man who becomes suddenly loyal after his property is taken by the United States Government, and for which he hopes to get paid; not the man from "whose eyes the scales fall" when he loses his property by misfortune or the adverse circumstances of war, but the man who is found to be affirmatively loyal to the Government throughout the whole war.

You appropriate thousands of dollars here to defend the Government from liability for taking the property of the people, and yet you do not appropriate a dollar to pay the judgments when they are ascertained.

I submit, sir, if we will not pay them we ought to stop this expenditure of thousands upon thousands of dollars for defense of these suits. If we are not to pay them when we lose them, we had better save at least this much. That is the true principle. My friend from Illinois ought not to put into the bill this expenditure to defend the suits if he will not agree to pay the suits when the Government loses.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that I would be quite content, in the proper way, to repeal the Bowman Act if he chooses to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But that issue is not here now. That is not the question before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOATNER. Now, before the gentleman proceeds, I would like to ask him a question in connection with this matter, whether this amount, payable to these attorneys, as appropriated in this bill, is not a payment for the suits that the Government wins, and we are not paying anything for the cases against the Government, either to the claimant or to the attorney?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why, the Government has to pay the costs in the cases that go against the Government; but it must pay its cost anyway, when it loses or gains the case——

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman does not understand me. I mean is this not a payment, not for the cases that go against the Government, but these are for the cases that the attorneys for the Government win?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, be that as it may, I do not want to be diverted from the point I am making. The gentleman from Louisiana can discuss that point himself. I think he agrees with me very fully on this question.

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that they did not pay anything. I will take that back. In the Forty-ninth Congress we paid $8,627.97; in the Fiftieth Congress we paid $119,510.75; in the Fifty-first Congress we paid $573,763.30, without one word of opposition, when the House was strongly Republican.

Mr. LOUD. How much did the Fifty-second Congress pay?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Only $597; and the Fifty-third, which was Democratic also, paid $48,000, in round numbers. If these two Congresses had paid one-half as much as the Fifty-first Congress, there would be but a few hundred thousand dollars left of all these claims to be considered. But the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses refused to pay anything, practically.

It seems to me that the only way for this class of claims to secure payment is through a Republican House. I come, then, to appeal to the Republicans of this body to do justice to these loyal claimants and to this class of claims. Do right at least once.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend from Tennessee expect to be more powerful with a Republican House than he was with the Democratic House when he advocated these claims in the Fifty-second Congress? These gentleman were then sympathizing with you——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be diverted from the point I am pursuing. I will say in response to the gentleman that I am not powerful anywhere. I did all I could in the Fifty-second Congress to secure the payment of all of this class of claims, and made the same effort in the Fifty-third Congress, when it was Democratic. I appealed to the Speaker and other members in authority, but gentlemen who directed the public sentiment in both bodies were unwilling to take what I regarded as the necessary steps to secure the payment of these claims. I thought they ought to have paid the few hundred thousand then found favorably by the Court of Claims, and if they had, as I state, there would only be about $100,000 or $200,000 for this Congress to pay.

But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is foolish to appropriate $50,000 to $75,000 a year to meet the expenses incident to the defense of these claims and then, when you lose, refuse to pay the judgment, like a dishonest gambler who refuses to pay his bet. The Government makes the very best defense that it can make. It loses upon both grounds, and then it says, "Oh, well, we will repudiate the debt," the solemn finding of its own court.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is not right. I appeal to the majority here, because my appeals were made to the majority of the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses in vain. I appeal to the majority here to do justice to this meritorious class of claims. We can do it. We need not pay all at this time. If there are too many, divide them, but make an earnest of attempting to do right by paying a portion of them if we can not pay them all at this time. There never was a more honest or just lot of claims presented. I said a moment ago that prior to the passage of this Bowman Act we paid from half a million to a million of dollars every year of what were called Fourth of July claims, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] knows. What were they? Nothing in the world but these claims for supplies taken from loyal men in the South during the war to feed the Army.

As I said a moment ago, these claims are not "for the use and occupation of property," because under the usages of war the Government had a right to occupy property there in order to suppress the rebellion; but for supplies taken from the loyal people of the South you agreed to pay, and you did pay thousands of dollars year by year upon the simple report of the Quartermaster-General of the Army. He sent his captains and his lieutenants and his other officers to the South. They found what was due, and upon the simple finding of one of these agents of the Quartermaster-General, agents who were not lawyers, upon the recommendation of the Quartermaster-General, you paid out half a million to a million dollars a year, and these bills when they came here passed this House unanimously. They were called up by unanimous consent and passed without objection on either side. Now, when you come to pay this same class of claims for supplies taken from loyal men during the war to support the Union soldiers, objection is made to their payment, and Congress refuses to pay them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have three minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say we paid these quartermaster claims without objection, verified as they were only by the finding of an agent of the Quartermaster-General who was sent into the country where this property was taken. But now, under this Bowman Act, for the same kind of property, taken at the same time, under exactly the same circumstances, instead of paying, as you did under the 4th of July act, upon a finding of the agent that the party from whom the property was taken was loyal, you refuse payment when you have a solemn adjudication of a Republican Court of Claims, composed of five Republican judges. After there is a trial, after the issue is made up and witnesses are subpœnaed and arguments are heard pro and con on the part of the attorneys for the claimant and the able attorneys of the United States Government, after the finding that the party was loyal and that his property was taken and used for the support of the United States Army—after all this you ignore that solemn finding of this Court of Claims, when formerly you were willing to pay twice or thrice as much upon the simple report of an agent of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to this. It may be claimed that it is a little out of order perhaps, but at the proper time, when the point is reached in the bill, I am going to offer a proposition to pay these Bowman claims to the amount of about $500,000. There are seven or eight hundred thousand dollars of them, found, I am told, since there was any payment. But I am going to offer to pay $500,000 of them, and I am going to beg the able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] not to make the point of order against them. I do not believe he will. He may suggest to some of his friends to make it, but I do not believe he will make the point of order. If any gentleman does make the point, I shall simply beg him to withdraw it and let us do justice to these long-neglected claims. [Applause.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8926) to correct the war record of David Sample;

A bill (H. R. 9168) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the city of McKeesport to the township of Mifflin, Allegheny County, Pa.; and

A bill (H. R. 10102) to remove the political disabilities of Col. William E. Simms.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 621) for the relief of the legal representative of George McDougall, deceased; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman: and

A bill (S. 1694) to increase the pension of Maj. Gen. Julius H. Stahel.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who has given notice of what he intends to do. I want to say to him, first, that I generally have the courage to make a point of order, if I am in charge of a bill, without asking somebody else to make it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not think you would be afraid, but I thought you would be too clever to do it.

Mr. CANNON. I feel quite sure that, if nothing happens, I will make the point of order, if the gentleman insists on offering the amendment. Now, a word upon this subject. I do not want to get into a discussion about these Southern claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope my friend will not call them Southern claims, because they come from Northern States as well.

A MEMBER. Call them war claims.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, wherever they come from. They are claims arising out of the late war, and principally come from the gentleman's State. I say this in answer to his confident statement.

At a proper time, when, under the rules of the House, legislation is pending to pay the findings of the Court of Claims, I will support or oppose it as I may deem right and proper; but I beg the gentleman to recollect one thing, and the House to recollect one thing. Notwithstanding the gentleman's statement, it is almost a generation since the close of the war. Now, every one of these claims has had a status before commissions or officials with jurisdiction to pass upon them. First, the Southern Claims Commission. That is the first day in court. Second, before the Quartermaster-General of the Army. That was the second day in court, running through many years. And, in addition to that, there was money appropriated from the Treasury to agents of the Quartermaster-General to go all through the country where the witnesses of these claimants were and investigate and report to the Quartermaster-General. There were large sums of money appropriated to pay the findings of the Southern Claims Commission. There were large sums of money appropriated to pay findings of the Quartermaster-General. These claims, with two chances in court, were rejected not once, but twice.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt my friend——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But of course he wants to be correct. Many of these claims, I will state to him, were pending in the Southern Claims Commission, and the gentleman knows that the Southern Claims Commission was terminated without having heard more than one-half of the claims brought before it. Those not heard when the Southern Claims Commission expired on the 1st day of January, 1880, were dumped into the committees of this House and the other branch of Congress, and the claimants were denied a hearing. One further fact. I hope the gentleman will pardon me. He knows that the Southern Claims Commission was limited to a certain amount—that is to say, if the claim did not exceed $10,000, if I remember correctly, the Southern Claims Commission did not have jurisdiction. I think at one time persons presenting their claims before the Southern Claims Commission were required to bring all their witnesses to Washington, and those poor claimants who had claims for $1,000 or $2,000 could not bring them here, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I say again, they had their day in court before the Southern Claims Commission. But if the gentleman be correct, then before the Quartermaster-General of the Army, with a corps of clerks numbering hundreds and with special agents that were paid from the Treasury, who went upon the ground and investigated. Having their day there, and hundreds of thousands of dollars being paid, these claims in the main were turned down and rejected by the Quartermaster-General. Then comes the Bowman Act. In the meantime the years have passed by. Under the Bowman Act they got a status in the Court of Claims for the Court of Claims to find. The years had passed by, the witnesses had died, the knowledge of people as to the loyalty and many other matters had faded out, prejudices had gone, and these findings were had. Now, maybe they are proper; I will not at this time say they are not proper, because it is not material to us. I say under the rules of the House they have no place upon this bill.

Mr. MEREDITH. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say at the outset that I have no sympathy with these claimants. I believe that my friend has called them Southern claims. If a man lived in the South, I think that he ought to have been loyal to his State. But I am not controlled, Mr. Chairman, by any such sentiment as that; and I am not in sympathy with the gentleman who is at the head of this committee, who attempts to do what the Government will not permit one of its own citizens to do, and that is to plead the statute of limitations; for, while he says he is not willing to say that these are not just claims—some of them—he claims before this House that they are stale, and the inference from his argument is that they ought not to be paid because the people have slept upon their rights.

I do undertake to say to him, and I do undertake to say to this House, without having any sympathy for these claimants, for God knows that while everything that I expected to inherit had been taken by the Government of the United States when I was a mere child, I would not make affidavit that I was loyal to this Government at that time if it would give me the possession of the United States. I believe that these people ought to have been loyal to their State, and therefore, I repeat, I have no sympathy with them. But when the Government establishes a court, and when these people are permitted to go before the court established by the Government itself; when the very first thing to prove is their loyalty, because it was a bar and pleaded in bar; when they have taken that step and proved that they were loyal to the Government; when they had taken the second step required and proved that their property had been taken for the uses of the Government, and the amount of its value had been ascertained by that court, I do maintain, upon principle and upon equity, upon justice and upon right, that wherever they may have lived, whether they were in the South or in the North, those gentlemen ought to be paid by this Government, and the Government ought not to be permitted to plead, as my friend has attempted to do, the statute of limitations.

The Government is a thief not to pay a just claim when it has been ascertained and determined by a tribunal composed of members selected by the Government itself. If the claims are honest and just, they ought to be paid. And, Mr. Chairman, what matters it to the Government whether payment is made on an appropriation bill or by a special bill? My friend from Illinois, who is a member of the Committee on Rules, found out a few days ago a way by which a law could be repealed which gave certain claimants against this Government the privilege of going into the courts and having their claims determined. As a member of the Committee on Rules, he ascertained that that law could be repealed by a rider upon the District appropriation bill, and the Committee on Rules brought in a rule by which it was repealed, so far as this House is concerned, in that way.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MEREDITH. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he was. My friend from Texas, however, is.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEREDITH. Then I beg my friend's pardon, also. But it still remains true that the Committee on Rules did ascertain a way by which a law passed by the last Congress could be repealed by a rider upon an appropriation bill, and my friend from New Jersey whom I see before me [Mr. PITNEY] will justify me in that statement, because he was a leader in that transaction.

Mr. PITNEY. The House passed the rule. The Committee on Rules did not pass it.

Mr. MEREDITH. Yes; the House passed the rule, but it did it on the suggestion of the Committee on Rules. Now, I agree with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that it is of little consequence to the Government whether it pays these claims by special bills or by an amendment to an appropriation bill. The only question that should be considered here is: Are these honest claims? Have they been ascertained and determined in a legal way? Does the Government of the United States owe these sums of money, as ascertained by the Court of Claims? If it does, it ought to pay them. It seems to me that, having ascertained the facts in these cases, if this House is convinced that the court has investigated and determined the cases honestly and fairly, and that these claimants were loyal to the Government during the war, then they ought to be paid; and, I repeat, what difference does it make whether they are paid by special bills (which we shall never be able to get up before the House) or by an amendment on an appropriation bill?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] desires to be heard five minutes, and I yield to him. After that I do hope that we shall go on more rapidly with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BOATNER. I shall want about three minutes.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is anything that illustrates and impresses more strongly upon this House, and that ought to impress more strongly upon the country, the condition of our fathers but a short time ago, when they were under the tyranny of perhaps the best men that ever lived, than the action of the Committee on Appropriations in its treatment of the honest claims of citizens of this country against the Government of the United States, and, furthermore, their treatment of this House in the favoritism which they manifest. [Laughter.] The favor which they show in all matters in which they are interested, and the absolute impossibility of getting a hearing on matters that they are not interested in, is emphasized beyond measure, and becomes a question of human liberty. [Laughter and applause.] Why, Mr. Chairman, what a mockery it is for the chairman of this Committee on Appropriations to stand on this floor and say that he "would be very glad to consider this legislation when it is before the House!" In God's name, how are we to get such legislation before this House? Will anybody tell me how you are going to get the payment of just claims and the awards of the Court of Claims before the House? How are you going to get this or any legislation before the House, however much members of this body or the people of the country may need it or desire it?

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer his question. I will tell him how he can get it before the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. How?

Mr. SAYERS. When the House is organized in the next Congress, frame your rules so that you can get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts (derisively). Oh, yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; it will then be within your power; you and your party will constitute a majority of the House. But so long as the present rules stand and constitute the rule of conduct for the guidance of this House, no appropriation of the kind which you desire to put upon this bill will be in order.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that under the rules of this House the members get mighty few rights. [Laughter and applause.] You go before the Committee on Appropriations and they refer you to a subcommittee, and you may cool your heels there day after day. [Laughter.] When the subcommittee meets, there is perhaps one member out of the five present, and he tells you that he knows all about the matter, and intimates that you are boring him if you longer stay, and, practically, that you had better leave and attend to your especial business. Then when he reports against you and you request a hearing before the full committee, busy as it necessarily is, maybe you will find one or two members there, and you feel that you had better leave. [Laughter.] That is all it amounts to. [Laughter.]

I have some figures in my hand, but before I present them let me say I do not imagine that there are in this country the same number of men who are any more fair minded or any more honest in their intentions than the members of the Appropriations Committee; but, with the immense amount of business that crowds upon us here, and with rules that give nobody any rights on any subject whatever, we have grown into a system of tyranny, gross tyranny, upon the members of this House generally. [Laughter and applause.]

This condition is not chargeable to one party more than the other, or to any one individual. It has rapidly grown up, beginning in its present form under Speaker Randall.

Legislation! Represent your district! Represent your district; how? I ask members of this House who hear me now what chance any of us have to present here anything our districts want? How many have done it in the last ten years, in the last five, the last four years, or even in the last two years? Present matters of interest to your constituents! How?

Mr. Chairman, the way that our public business is being conducted with reference to the erection of public buildings alone shows a loss of 25, 33, and even 50 per cent on the expenditures made. It ought to be exposed to the House and to the country.

Why? Because it is impossible under present conditions for the House to do anything to correct it until the light is turned on. These men assume that this Government must not, shall not, pay its honest debts. They claim we have not the money to do so, and that the Congress and the people ought not to know what the honest debts of the Government are, for if they did know it would be scandalous. It will be a greater scandal if they can not find it out. If they ask for information, if they seek to ascertain what their Government actually owes its citizens, they are told that the items are in this document, a part of them in that document, and in a dozen other documents, and so on. [Laughter.]

Ah, Mr. Chairman, this has got to come to an end some time. Our people are essentially honest. Finding the items of our indebtedness is a good deal like the boy with the jackknife. He said he had not lost it, because he knew where it was. When he was asked where it was, "Why," he said, "at the bottom of the well." So it is with these items of indebtedness. These things are not lost, because we know where they can be found; but we have a right to know, and to know what documents they are in, and to know what claims have been reported against and what claims have been reported in favor of claimants by the committees of this House and by the courts of this land, and in one document in convenient form. And when framing legislation in the Committee on Ways and Means, it is the duty of that body to so frame fiscal legislation that there shall be revenue enough to pay all of these claims that are honestly due by the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask for a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Oh, but you say the claims are "old." Old! old! Yes; they are old. When the chairman of the committee is dead, and I am dead, and this House is dead, the claims will then be older. [Laughter.] Will they be paid? Old! Why, Mr. Chairman, we whose constituents all over the country have these claims have had them refused $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 for thirty years piling up and piling up, and if they had been paid originally we should have had a clean slate. But they have been accumulating and kept on accumulating, until there will be a hundred millions more, I presume, before the end.

I protest against this dishonest policy. I am ashamed of this Government. I am ashamed of its action toward its own people. My cheeks tingle with shame at the dishonorable conduct of the Government I love, in its dealings with its private citizens—this refusal of justice in paying their honest claims. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will give me his attention but a very few moments I will tell him how to get his claims paid. I believe to-day is Friday—private bill day.

Mr. WASHINGTON. And we have not had a private bill day this session.

Mr. SAYERS. If the majority of this House——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. And this day has gone where all of our other private bill days have gone.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). If a majority had so decided, to-day could have been devoted to private bills. Who was the cause of the failure? A majority of this House, without regard to party, determined that instead of considering bills on the Private Calendar they would consider the general deficiency bill. So the Committee on Appropriations are not responsible for the use of this day which is set apart for the Private Calendar. Nor are they responsible for the fact that the claims which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] speaks of are not upon this bill. By the rules of the House, and I believe by the rules of every House since I have been a member of this body, the findings of the Court of Claims, under what is known as the Bowman Act, are not in order on the general appropriation bills.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman state why, please?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Because the rule prevails to prevent it.

Mr. SAYERS. Because the House, whether Democratic or Republican, has adopted a rule which does not make them in order.

Mr. MAHON. What rule prohibits it?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Clause 2 of Rule XXI.

Mr. SAYERS. As the gentleman says, clause 2 of Rule XXI prohibits it. But I do not want to enter into a discussion with the gentleman on that point.

Mr. MAHON. There is no rule that prohibits them as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. It is safe to say, Mr. Chairman, that every Speaker of this House that we have had for years, and every Chairman of the Committee of the Whole who has presided in this body for years, each one, has uniformly ruled on these particular claims that they are not in order on a general appropriation bill. That, I think, is a sufficient answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or any other gentleman on this floor, desires to have these claims paid, let them join with the gentleman from Massachusetts and secure a majority of the House, of both parties, or all three parties, and then so change the rule that this particular item shall be in order upon the appropriation bills. And, further, let them have a majority at their backs in favor of appropriating for the claims, and they will get them through, and not otherwise. It is the duty of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to set his face firmly against all appropriations of this character that are not in order on the general appropriation bills. He would be derelict in his duty to this House if he should permit this class of claims or any other kind of claims, however meritorious, they being purely claims, to be put upon this bill without presenting objections to the House, so that they could be stricken out.

In conclusion, I want to say to the gentleman that he ought to begin to organize his forces right now. We expect to have a special session of Congress, beginning on the 15th day of next month. Let the gentleman have his forces well in hand when the rules are presented to this House for its consideration. Then let him shape the rules, in order to accomplish what he believes to be right and proper. [Applause.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] is recognized.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Just a word in answer to my good friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], who, as he always does, appears so exceedingly fair in telling us how we can get consideration of all just claims which have been favorably reported by the several committees of the House. While by the rules of the House every Friday is set apart for the consideration of private bills, including war claims, it is well known that every Friday this session has been taken up by appropriation bills reported by the gentleman's committee, or by some other class of legislation, under a special order from the Committee on Rules, with the express purpose of preventing the consideration of what are known as war claims.

Mr. SAYERS. With the consent of the majority of the House.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Of course we understand how that is worked. Whenever the chairman of a committee, representing the majority, makes a motion to do away with the regular order for Friday, the other side of the House, as a matter of courtesy, stands by the chairman of the committee and passes whatever motion he may make, and in that way "private-bill day" has been invariably taken away from the House. Such has been the course adopted by the majority, not only during this session, but during the whole of the last session of Congress. Indeed, in the Congress before this very little time was given for the consideration of this class of claims. The result has been that these war claims have piled up and up until the amount will soon be so large that it will appall not only the House of Representatives but the country. But because the aggregate amount of these claims which have been allowed by the Court of Claims is large it does not necessarily follow that the claims are fraudulent, or that they are not just obligations of the Government.

It is quite true, as has been charged, that the greater part of these war claims are Southern claims. I admit that a large number of them do come from our section of the country, but it should be borne in mind by the House that the claimants have affirmatively proven their loyalty throughout the whole war to the satisfaction of a court which, it is well known, has been politically biased against the Southern people. Gentlemen ought to remember that to be loyal in the Southern States throughout the whole war meant sacrifice and privation. Frequently not only social ostracism, but persecution. I maintain, sir, that these people are entitled to and should receive from Congress the same consideration as those who joined the Northern army and bore arms in defense of the country. The loyal people of the South freely gave their provender, their horses, their substance, in order that the Union might be preserved. It was the supplies furnished by them which enabled the North to wage to a successful issue the war between the States. In the vast majority of cases all the claimant ever got was a voucher to show that his property had been taken for the use of the Army.

During the period of active hostilities, there was no way to collect the amount of these vouchers except to sell them at a heavy discount to some claim agent or broker. In many cases, owing to the unsettled conditions which followed the war, and the doubt in the minds of many that anything would ever be paid, some years elapsed before these claims were filed. It comes with poor grace from anyone now to charge that these claims should be branded as false, or should be repudiated, because they have remained unpaid so many years. Most of the claimants have been knocking at the doors of Congress or seeking a hearing before some sort of a commission or a court ever since the close of the war, and I insist that they are entitled to just and to generous treatment. The Government should set the example of doing no wrong. Congress can not afford to put the Government in the attitude of pleading the statute of limitations in these cases.

Mr. BOATNER. When she herself creates the delay.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Yes, when, as suggested by my friend, the Government itself creates the delay. These cases would not be thirty or thirty-five years old to-day if the claimants had been allowed time and place and opportunity to present and prove their claims.

I know that we have all frequently heard gentlemen cite the Southern Claims Commission and the other boards that were organized after the war to hear and determine these war claims. It is well known how imperfectly much of the work of those boards was done. It has been stated that these claims were tried and rejected in the Quartermaster's Department. The action of the Quartermaster's Department at best was a one-sided investigation. Frequently, I am informed, the claimant had no knowledge that his case was under investigation until it had been reported for rejection. The size of a claim was almost invariably a presumption against it. The mere fact that a man alleged that he had lost thousands of dollars' worth of property was considered to be ample evidence that he was trying to rob the Government.

I repeat, the worthy claimants who have passed successfully through the Court of Claims ought to have speedy justice.

In addition to these individual claims, there are many just claims which have been filed by educational institutions, by colleges and universities, whose buildings were used for barracks and hospitals. In many of these cases the libraries, the philosophical and scientific instruments, and other valuable collections were totally destroyed. These institutions were of priceless value to the Southern country. They in no way gave aid and comfort to the rebellion. Some of those in Tennessee were seized almost at the outbreak of the war and held until after the close of hostilities. From 1865 until now these colleges have been knocking at the doors of Congress and in vain pleading for relief. They should be heard. Their claims ought to be tried on their merits, and should not be dismissed with a contemptuous insinuation of fraud. There surely must come a day when reason, not passion and prejudice, shall control. Until that time we must wait.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me have five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will not press it. I hope to close debate and get on.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, it is generally considered the right thing for members to rise in this House and accuse the Government of taking advantage of its citizens in refusing to pass claims barred by the statute of limitations. Every few days we have some one rise and point with shame to the Government's action concerning claims that are made against the Government; and yet when we come to examine these claims and they are presented to this body, we generally turn them down. Why, sir, there are claims aggregating millions of dollars pending in this Congress that are one hundred years old. What chance has the Government to obtain evidence to defend against such claims. The theory that the Government should not plead the statute of limitations is something that is absolutely opposed to all legislation of modern times; and to say that it should not, would be to place the Government at such a disadvantage that millions and millions of dollars would be taken from the Treasury. Why, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. Do you know how much this Government has paid since the war closed on claims of this kind, the total amount?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not remember, but I want to say as a matter of fact that in any claim that is barred by the statute of limitations the United States is at a disadvantage in attempting to prove its side of the case.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield to a question there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I can not yield, I have only a few minutes. I want to say, on the general principle, for any gentleman to get up here and abuse the statute of limitations, when as a matter of fact every government on earth that is civilized respects it, and says it is proper, is something that seems to me to be very much out of place. If the statute of limitations is not right, the only way to do is to repeal it. We all admire the man that will not plead the statute of limitations for himself. Why? Because he is paying out his own money. But are we acting in that capacity here? What would you think of a guardian who failed to plead the statute of limitation for his ward? What would you say even in the case of a trustee of express trust, if he failed to plead the statute of limitation for his beneficiary? Why, sir, we would say that it was reprehensible, if not criminal, and the law absolutely imposes upon him the obligation to pay it himself.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that we surcharge him with it when he files his final account.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, we are not exactly acting in the capacity of guardians, but as members of Congress and as representatives of the legislative branch of this Government we are acting more in the capacity of trustees of an express trust than in our individual capacity. We are not paying money out for ourselves; and when some old claim comes up and it is barred by the statute of limitation it is not proper to abuse members of the House because they believe that it should not be paid and that to pass many would bankrupt the Government. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that they ought to consider in what capacity we are acting. We are acting for the people. The people pay these claims. It is not ourselves. If we ourselves paid them, we could very well say, "We are satisfied with the claim and will pay it." Acting as trustees in coming here, we should scrutinize all claims closely. I say it is not becoming in the members to charge that our Government is dishonest when it has always discharged its obligations with scrupulous honesty, and when the conservative members are desiring to protect the Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may close this general talk, that is upon no subject in the bill, in, say, twenty minutes; perhaps ten would be enough.

Mr. BOATNER. I want five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want five.

Mr. CANNON. I want to go on with the bill. I will say twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate upon this subject shall be closed in twenty minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I have no fault to find with the rules that prevail in this House, because I helped to make them; and I will help to make them, perhaps, in the next Congress; and I have no fault to find with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I can fully appreciate the burden that rests upon that gentleman to keep down the appropriations; but I want to answer a few of the arguments here. Every time these claims are brought before this House gentlemen get up and talk about it bankrupting the Government; it will take billions of dollars to pay these claims!

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who makes that statement upon the floor of this House does not know what he is talking about. I have carefully compiled in the Department the claims that have been paid by the Government since 1865 for losses that occurred all along the border States, where war raged for four years for 3,000 miles, and where this Government took property from people who were loyal, and the total amount shown in the Quartermaster-General's Department, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Southern Claims Commission, the Tucker Act, and the Bowman Act, paid since the war closed, was $11,934,-721.69, a sum less than we appropriate every year on rivers and harbors.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have compiled this statement in order to get rid of the bugaboo that is held up here constantly—the enormous amount of these claims. Let this Congress appoint a commission of any five men they may select, and give that commission $10,000,000; and I undertake to say that they will wipe out of existence every claim of this kind that exists to-day or that can possibly be brought against the Government. This amendment is for $500,000. Why, sir, the other day we appropriated nearly half a million dollars to improve the Yazoo River—one river in this great country! Talk about these claims not being just! I have been familiar with this subject ever since the war closed. I have made it a study. The United States Government came into my county during the war and took hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property. The great war governor of Pennsylvania, Governor Curtin, was organizing and equipping one regiment of cavalry after another, and they came into the county in which I lived and took 1,200 of the best horses in that county and sent them to the front. Three thousand four hundred horses were pressed into the service of the Government of the United States from the county of Franklin, in my State, and from that day to this not one dollar has ever been paid to the owners of those horses. I think it was James A. Garfield who made the statement, or else it was General Butler, that if this Government was an individual and he treated his creditors as it treats its creditors, he would spend two-thirds of his life in the penitentiary with a striped suit on.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one of two things to do in this matter; either repeal the Bowman Act and stop these claimants from going into court and proving their claims, or else let the act stand, and, after your own court has found in favor of the claimants, pay them. [Applause.] There is no escape from the payment of these claims. Congress created that court because it could not itself investigate the claims as they should be investigated. But that court does investigate them thoroughly. I have stated that the total sum paid in all these years upon these claims amounts to only about $11,000,000. Why is the amount so small? Because, if you will examine the records of the Court of Claims, you will find that of all the claims presented the court has allowed only about 8½ per cent. It has rejected the balance because of the death of the parties, the inability to procure witnesses, and for various other reasons.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the House of Representatives of the United States [laughter], and, if I live, I expect to be a member of the next House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then the gentleman is not going into the Cabinet? [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. And I want to say very briefly that I repudiate the statement, come from whatever source it may, that this House has not the power to execute its own will. It is a very plausible excuse with which to go to the country that somehow or other our responsibility as individual members is taken away by charging that we have disfranchised ourselves and have made ourselves the subject of some "tyranny" somewhere. I denounce such a statement. There is no tyranny that controls this House except the mere inertia of the House itself. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the question of the payment of these claims. On that I stand where the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] stands; but I want to point out to him how futile are his estimates of the expenditure that would be required when they are based only upon claims for actual and tangible property taken. If the door could have been closed upon all other claims than those for property appropriated by the Government, I doubt not that long ago these war claims would all have been paid.

Mr. MAHON. That is what the Bowman Act covers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what the Bowman Act covers, but there come up a train of claims of quite a different character, claims for use and occupation of property, claims for the destruction incident to war, claims of an indeterminate character, unliquidated damages—phenomenal amounts which no man can estimate—and those claims have come here to clog the way and stand across the path of the payment of claims which I admit are legitimate and ought to be paid as soon as possible.

But, to get back to the other question, what rule of this House strangles the action of the House? If there is any rule here that does that, who is responsible for it? I take my share of the responsibility. I voted for every rule that we have. I have seen no man attempt to exercise a power in this House that was not conferred by the rules of the House. [Applause.] And, Mr. Chairman, when I do see any man, great or small, attempt to exercise a power not conferred by the rules of the House, I will appeal to the House. I know how to appeal to the House of Representatives against any improper exercise of power, and so does the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], and if I choose to sit by and recognize the action of any power in this House without objection, I am a party to it and have no right to complain. The rules of the House are in the interest of the forwarding of the business of the House. Where would we be to-day if every man in this House was at perfect liberty to just rise here and, without asking consent of anybody or asking recognition of anybody, or giving any explanation of any purpose to anybody, present his bill or his claim? We would be in a beautiful condition to do business inside of the first fifteen minutes, and would grow worse as long as we stayed in an organized body.

Mr. Chairman, the rules of the House have grown up from the gathered wisdom of the greatest and most intelligent body of legislators on earth, to wit, the House of Representatives of the United States of America. That House has never yet yielded its power to control its own business. And now, as illustrative of that point, this morning this House, by a majority vote, could have proceeded, had it so decided, to the consideration of the Private Calendar under its rules. But it saw fit to do differently, and decided, by an affirmative vote, to proceed with the measure now pending. Having done so, every individual member of this body is estopped to complain of the "tyranny" of the rules, or of any officer who is called upon to enforce those rules.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that it is about time for the House of Representatives to throw off the disguise which it has worn so long, and to inform the owners of what are known as Southern war claims that they will never be paid. The Republican side of the House will not believe that the claimants were loyal, and hence from a Republican standpoint the claimants are not entitled to any consideration. A large number of Southern Democrats know that numbers of these claimants were loyal to the Union during the war, and hence from the Southern standpoint they are not entitled to consideration. So, between these two sentiments, the Southern war claimant has few friends. So long as the Committee on Appropriations is influenced to the extent that it now is by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], by my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and my other equally distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], it is idle to expect that anything practical will be done in the way of ascertaining the amounts due on these claims, and of paying them.

Hope deferred, Mr. Chairman, maketh the heart sick, and it would be a mercy to the owners of these claims to have the question settled for all, and the debts repudiated. I say repudiated, because the action of Congress in refusing to pay them can not be properly characterized in any other language. For many years the contention was that the testimony adduced before the committees was not satisfactory; the Government had no proper means of defense, of showing that the claimants were not loyal men, that the accounts were grossly exaggerated, and other facts tending to show that it was not indebted in the amounts claimed.

In order to correct this evil the Bowman Act was passed, under which the parties were referred to the Court of Claims, there to establish the facts which would show the indebtedness of the Government for military supplies taken for the use of the Army. The Court of Claims can not be said to be biased toward claimants. I am informed that it only finds in favor of the claimants to the extent of about 8½ per cent of those presented for consideration. Yet the findings of that court remain unprovided for by Congress, and parties who, at the solicitation, or rather by the direction, of this body, have gone to the expense of establishing the indebtedness of the Government to them, find themselves as far from their money as ever.

We can not successfully defend ourselves against this indebtedness in court or on the floor of this House. We can not exonerate ourselves either in law or in morals. Yet, by indirection, by delay, we refuse to do what, under the requirements of the Constitution, of common justice, and of decency, we ought to do. The Constitution declares that private property shall not be taken for public uses without adequate compensation; that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law. Yet, where property has been taken from the loyal citizen for the use of the Government and applied to its use, at a time when the laws were silent and when the citizen was powerless to prevent the taking if he had so desired, that loyal citizen is told that his property was taken under the exigencies of war, if it was taken at all; that he was not loyal, whether he proves it or not; that his property was not worth what he and his witnesses say it was, notwithstanding there may be no evidence in support of that contention, and that, from motives of economy, the Government does not propose to discharge the debt if it exists. This course, if pursued by a private individual, would be justly characterized as knavery. If the party had any property, the strong arm of the law would subject it to the payment of his debts; but the sovereign, the great American Government, may properly and honorably pursue a course which in a private individual would excite the reprobation of all honest men.

And now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] comes to the front with a new proposition, one as startling as it is novel, and which is that, by refusing for years to give consideration to these claims, to provide any means by which the claimants could assert and enforce their rights, they have become barred by the statute of limitations.

This is the first time, Mr. Chairman, I ever heard the idea advanced that the statute of limitations would run against a party who could not sue, and that the sovereign, which can not be sued, and which can therefore interpose as much delay as it sees fit, may plead the delay which it itself has caused in bar of an obligation which the creditor could not enforce except by the consent of the State.

But the gentleman overlooks another familar principle of law, which is that where time operates to the extinguishment of an obligation that bar must be established by express law. There is no statute of the United States that I know of applicable to this class of cases. The law establishes the Court of Claims for the purpose of hearing suits on certain specified contracts entered into by officers of the Government. Its jurisdiction is limited and defined by law, and it follows, as a matter of course, that any creditor or person claiming rights under a contract of which the Court of Claims has jurisdiction, who should not avail himself of his right to sue in that court and to enforce his remedy within the time specified by the statute of limitations, would be barred. But the Court of Claims has jurisdiction to enforce judgments of this class. That is to say, there is a standing provision of law providing for the payment of all judgments rendered by the Court of Claims. The Southern war claims are not of this class. They are referred to the Court of Claims merely for the findings by that court of certain facts. These facts, when found, are reported by the court to Congress. Congress then provides or refuses to provide, as it sees fit, for the payment of the debt found due by the court. It does not give to the findings of the Court of Claims the dignity of a judgment. It does not even respect these findings as final upon the questions of fact. It is hard to say what effect it does give to these findings, or for what purpose they are authorized to be made. If designed originally to amuse the creditors of the Government; if designed to obtain delay in the payment of the debts which should be found due; if designed as a means of escaping payment, the subterfuge has served its purpose, has been used long enough, and the intention of Congress in resorting to it may as well be avowed. It can not, however, either upon reason or authority, be treated as a discharge of such obligations as the Government may be under by the statute of limitations, because the statute of limitations has not the most remote application to cases of this kind.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I have never been able to understand the attitude of many honorable gentlemen on this floor with regard to the creditors of this Government—gentlemen who themselves would scorn to defraud anyone, gentlemen of high character, who, if the question arose as to whether the interest on the public debt should be paid in anything except the best money in the world, would repudiate with indignation the suggestion that the United States should act on any but the highest principles of honor and integrity in dealings with its creditors, complacently turn their backs upon citizens whose claims have been adjudicated by courts, whose rights are unquestioned, and whose sole offense is that they have been prevented by demagogues, masquerading under the disguise of economists and watchdogs of the Treasury, from being able to obtain payment of what is due to them.

There is now, sir, a large amount of money in the Treasury which the Supreme Court of the United States has decided belongs to a large number of citizens of this character.

I refer to the proceeds of property taken by officers of the Government under the provisions of the "captured and abandoned property act of 1863."

This money the Supreme Court, I repeat, sir, has held, not once, but several times, belongs to the owners of this property, and is held in trust for them by the Government. Construing the act of Congress under which the property was taken, disposed of, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, the Supreme Court holds that it never was the intention of the act to vest the title of the proceeds in the Government, and, in fact, no such object could have been lawfully contemplated. The property of no citizen could be taken, confiscated, and condemned to the public without legal proceedings on the part of the Government, and opportunity to the owner to defend his rights.

But, sir, notwithstanding the repeated adjudications by the highest tribunal in the land; notwithstanding the unquestioned right of the owners of this property; notwithstanding that the Government to-day occupies the relation to them of a fraudulent, an embezzling, and a defaulting trustee, this House has steadily refused ever since I have been a member of it to even consider a bill allowing the owners of this fund to assert their rights in a court of justice. Such a policy may, in the opinion of some gentlemen, be a wise and an economical one. It may comport with the dignity and honor of this Government. I can not express my opinion of it in parliamentary language. It is well enough to be economical, but it is necessary to be honest; and just how the representatives of the people reconcile their consciences to taking the money of private citizens and using it for public purposes; to deny to the owners of such property the right to be heard in court in the assertion of their claims; to allow men and woman to spend their lives in penury, poverty, and misery when they are creditors of the Government in large sums, or in any sums at all, passes my comprehension and understanding.

Unfortunately, now and then a claim of doubtful propriety is carried through this body by dint of personal, political, or social influence. The claimant who is able to invoke the assistance of a lobby or to exert the influences which I have described is occasionally rewarded with an appropriation. But the great mass of the creditors of the Government are helpless, and I repeat that it would be a mercy to them, if this House proposes to pursue the policy of economy which has heretofore been so popular with reference to the payment of this class of public debts—it would be a mercy to those whom it owes to inform them once for all that the United States does not intend to pay them; in other words, intends to repudiate the debt.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes and a half to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, there has been enough said from time to time by members of the House when these claims have been talked about to indicate a lingering suspicion in the hearts of a large number of members that many of these claims ought not be paid at all, because they originated in at least partial disloyalty to the Government of the United States. There is that suspicion lingering among the membership of the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I was a citizen of what was regarded as a border State when the war began, I know the people of that State, and know personally that a large majority of those people were as true to the Union of the States as were the people of any State in the Union. I know that the people of that State furnished 209,000 volunteers for the Union Army. I know further than that, about the character of many of these claims, and that they are just claims. For about a year and a half I acted in the capacity of quartermaster for a post. I sent out forage train after forage train into the country after forage supplies for the soldiers of the Union Army. I know the character of the people from whom I took these supplies, and know that in a vast majority of cases they were as loyal as any men who were enrolled in the Union Army. Yet I gave those people no opportunity to refuse to furnish the supplies for which I sent. I did not even give them the opportunity to put any price upon them. The Government of the United States, through me, fixed the price; and yet those claims in a large number of instances are still unpaid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TRACEY. I am sorry I could not have had a few minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to occupy just a minute before we proceed with the reading of the bill. For more than an hour there has been a discussion here, without any substantial amendment. I was very glad that the House consented to close the debate in twenty minutes. I hope we can go on now and read the bill. I only want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] and others who have seen proper to criticise this committee, over which I have the honor to preside, that the House is greater than the committee. The House made the rule, and if, as chairman of that committee, in charge of the bill, I did not protect the rights of the House by insisting substantially upon an enforcement of the rules, I should not be true to myself, I should not be true to the House and the committee over which I have the honor to preside, and the House itself would be a laughing stock and a thing to be despised by its members and by the country.

Now, that is all I desire to say touching that matter. I do not mind the scolding of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I guess he can not help it. I reckon he is built that way. [Laughter.] I do not think it is necessary to reply to him. I undertake to say when anybody has had business before the Committee on Appropriations they have always had a respectful hearing. I do not desire to criticise the gentleman's committee. I will not plead any set-off.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed; and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Was the entire twenty minutes consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The entire twenty minutes was consumed.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

For allowances to the following contestants and contestees, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections, for expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases, namely:
To J. N. Kendall, $2,000;
To JAMES C. C. BLACK, $2,000;
To Thomas E. Watson, $2,000; in all, $6,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 53, in lines 20 and 21, strike out "in all, $6,000" and insert:
"To J. William Stokes, $340;
"To Taylor Beattie, $2,000;
"To Andrew Price, $2,000;
"To CHARLES J. BOATNER, $1,856; in all, $12,196."

Mr. CANNON. These amounts are certified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, $20,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, after line 23, insert:
"For stationery for members of the House of Representatives, $250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

To enable the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to pay to members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress the amounts withheld in their salaries on account of absence, $12,202.48.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, it is pretty hard for members to discover what certain amounts in this bill are for. I should like to ask the chairman of this committee to whom this $12,202.48 is to be paid?

Mr. CANNON. It will go to a number of members of the Fifty-third Congress who did not receive their entire salaries. The gentleman will recollect that under the refusal of the Speaker to certify the vouchers, various members—I do not know how many, but quite a number—did not receive their pay, because of alleged absence from the House. Possibly, without liberal certification, a good many more might not have received their pay. The gentleman recollects it.

Mr. LOUD. I was a little in doubt about it, Mr. Chairman, but my recollection is about this: That members of this House were allowed to interpret the law; and several members, I believe, did interpret the law and certified that they were not entitled to certain amounts of money. I think my memory is also correct that certain members walked around this House with a proud sense of apparent honesty in having surrendered back to the United States Government a certain amount of money which they had certified they were not entitled to. Now, I suppose this item is to give these gentlemen this amount of money in this quiet manner, without mentioning their names, and they are still to have the credit of having been "more honest than thou."

Mr. CANNON. I do not know of anybody who is proud of having a part of his salary withheld. I know a good many people who were profane because their pay was withheld on account of absence that could not very well be avoided.

Mr. MEREDITH. And a good many more were sick.

Mr. CANNON. The same rule has not obtained in this Congress, nor, so far as I know, in any other Congress. It takes the $12,000 to pay the members what was not paid to them.

Mr. LOUD. I suppose a great deal of it goes to our Democratic friends who interpreted the law——

Mr. CANNON. I think some of it goes on that side of the House and some on this side of the House.

Mr. LOUD. Of course, the gentleman well knows that members were allowed to interpret this law.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. LOUD. I have my opinion about it. I think if you will take one of those old certificates you will find that a member was not called upon to certify to absence alone, but you will find that it was very carefully worded, so that each member should determine for himself as to whether certain amounts should be deducted under certain existing statutes. It was very carefully drawn so as to permit a man of tender conscience, like myself, I am willing to say, to certify. But there probably were some gentlemen who had such tender consciences that are willing now to accept it without being mentioned by name in the appropriation bill.

Mr. MAHON. I want to make a suggestion as to these claims. I did not dock myself under that rule, because I did not think it right; but I suggest that these claims be referred to the Court of Claims, so that these gentlemen may excuse their consciences.

Mr. CANNON. It is subject to that amendment, if my friend will offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. One moment. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if we have passed lines 1 to 4 on page 55?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; we are just beginning to read. We have almost passed it; but my colleague is in time.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. When the proper time comes, I want to be recognized.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that now is the proper time.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Why, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an explanation from my colleague upon that.

Mr. CANNON. I have just given one to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I was not fortunate enough to hear that.

Mr. NORTHWAY. He has been spending five minutes in that way.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. More than five minutes should be taken up in giving an explanation of this matter. I have a very distinct remembrance, Mr. Chairman, of our Democratic colleagues insisting that the order that was made and enforced by the Democratic Speaker of this House was proper and legitimate; and I am surprised that economists like my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]——

Mr. SAYERS. I do not control the committee. Your colleague is chairman.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] would permit an item of this kind to go into this bill. If I remember correctly, hardly three days have passed since my friend from Missouri grew red in the face in an eloquent denunciation of the extravagance of this House, and especially the Republican members. If I remember correctly, also, he is one of the men who insisted that a rule of this kind should be adopted during the time that the Democrats had control of this House. Now, if the gentleman can give an explanation to the country as to the consistency of his utterances on public expenditures and his support of this proposed appropriation, I would like to have him do it. I was opposed to that nonsensical and absurd position that was assumed by the gentleman and the then Speaker of the House. I did not believe it was in accordance with law or proper practice in this House, but it was enforced; and being enforced, I see no reason why the Republicans of the House should permit those members to get the money back that was deducted from them by their Democratic colleagues.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They made their own certificates.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And especially as the rule was a part of the Democratic policy and was made a matter of political virtue with them while they were in control of the House. If that was a proper deduction from them, Mr. Chairman, how can the gentleman from Missouri reconcile his mind to refunding them this money?

Mr. MEREDITH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MEREDITH. Were you away at any time during that period?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I never was away so as to violate that rule.

Mr. MEREDITH. Were you away any day?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I was not away so that the money due to me as a member of the House of Representatives could legally or morally be taken from me.

Mr. MEREDITH. Were you ever away any day?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I think I have answered the question sufficiently for any man of common intelligence to understand it.

Mr. MEREDITH. You were on the sick list when you were away.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is in order, I desire to enter a motion to strike out line 25 on page 54, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 55.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, pending that motion, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Let us come to a vote on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 54, strike out line 25, and on page 55, strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10329, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PASS A LOUTRE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the bill S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre in the Mississippi River, Mr. HOOKER, Mr. REEVES, and Mr. CATCHINGS.

GEORGE W. FERREE.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report which I send to the desk.

The conference report was read, as follows:

This committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House of Representatives 10040, an act granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to the amount named in the bill; and the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM E. ANDREWS,
GEORGE C. CROWTHER,
WILLIAM BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.
LUCIEN BAKER,
W. A. PEFFER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House submitted the following statement:

As passed by the House, the bill carried $30 per month, which was reduced by the Senate to $20. The effect of the conference report is to grant the beneficiary $30 per month, as the bill passed the House.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be adopted.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, we would like to hear what the reasons are. My friend opposed me the other day on a conference report.

Mr. ANDREWS. The disagreement arose from a misunderstanding on the part of the Senate committee as to the nature of the case. It was presumed that the disability had not originated in the service, but the papers show conclusively that the disability is of service origin. The claimant was unable to cover the entire period by evidence showing the continuance of medical treatment. There was an interval of one or two years, and that was the technical element in the case which caused its rejection at the Pension Office.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is it not the fact that this conference report presents the measure as it passed the House?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I do not see any necessity for further explanation.

Mr. ANDREWS. I was making the explanation for the satisfaction of the gentleman from Virginia, who requested it.

The conference report was adopted.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, changes of reference were made as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3494) granting a pension to Frances M. Roberts—from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3230) for the relief of the estate of Richard Lawson—from the Committee on War Claims to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn;

A bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman;

A bill (S. 1694) to increase the pension of Maj. Gen. Julius H. Stahel;

A bill (H. R. 8037) for the relief of John McLain, alias Michael McLain;

A bill (H. R. 8197) for the relief of John J. Guerin; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 239) admitting free of duty needlework and similar articles imported by New York Association of Sewing Schools for exhibition purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3670) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts, widow of the late Gen. Benjamin S. Roberts, United States Army—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 3683) to amend the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Joint resolution (S. Res. 205) to enable the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOY, for the evening session, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. FLETCHER, for the evening session, on account of indisposition.

To Mr. CODDING, for the evening session, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. PITNEY, for the evening session, on account of important business.

To Mr. COCKRELL, for the evening session, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. LEISENRING, for to-night and to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. DOVENER, for one week, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House will take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, when the gentleman from New York, Mr. SHERMAN, will please act as Speaker.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reconvened at 8 o'clock p. m.

Mr. SHERMAN, as Speaker pro tempore, called the House to order and caused the rule to be read, as follows:

The House shall, on each Friday, at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered, said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to me while I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a Senate bill.

Mr. WOOD. Let the bill be read, pending objection.

LOUISE A. RICE.

The bill (S. 3584) granting a pension to Louise A. Rice, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Rice, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louise A. Rice, widow of Brig. Gen. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Rice, at the rate of $75 per month, in lieu of the pension of $30 per month she is now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WOOD. Let the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. WOOD. I withdraw the request for the reading of the report.

Mr. MADDOX. I renew the request.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, is this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is pending unanimous consent.

Mr. KEM. It is out of the regular order, is it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] has asked unanimous consent that this bill be now considered, and the Clerk is about to read the report.

Mr. KEM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TALBERT. I will say to the gentleman that this is not my bill. I have no interest in it whatever. I was requested by my friend, Mr. LACEY, from Iowa, to ask unanimous consent, in his absence, for the consideration of this bill. It happens to be a bill for the pensioning of the widow of a soldier who was killed in battle, and I wanted first to hear it discussed upon its merits, as reported by the committee. All these bills ought to be discussed to see if they are meritorious.

Mr. KEM. I am not objecting because the gentleman from South Carolina has made the request for unanimous consent, but I insist upon the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order, and pending that, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That House bills, as they are reached on the Calendar, be passed over without prejudice, and that Senate pension bills only be considered.

The question being taken on the resolution, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several members asked for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 3.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having counted the House). Eighty-five members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he would not consent to the request that we pass over all bills providing for the removal of charges of desertion and pensioning "coffee coolers," bounty jumpers, and so on, and get at the pensions on the Calendar for some of the good old soldiers?

Mr. WOOD. I will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that the passage of the resolution would prevent the consideration of any bills for the removal of the charge of desertion. It expressly provides that Senate bills only are to be considered.

Mr. TALBERT. That is the reason I ask the gentleman to withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on the point?

Mr. ERDMAN. I do.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that if the House bills are passed at this late hour of the session they can not reach the President in time for his action, and the object of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is to take up only the Senate bills in their order on the Calendar and act upon them. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will insist upon his point of no quorum, this House might just as well adjourn. I ask him whether or not he intends to insist on the point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this debate is only by consent.

Mr. ERDMAN. In reply to my colleague as to taking up the Senate bills only to be considered under this rule, I wish to state that they have received less consideration than any set of bills from the Pensions or Invalid Pensions committees, and I have not had an opportunity to examine them, or anybody else, as far as I know, and we do not know anything about them. That is the reason I make the objection.

Mr. RANEY. But they have been examined by the committee, have they not?

Mr. ERDMAN. By the Senate committee.

Mr. WOOD. I would suggest that they have all been considered by the House committee, and there is no opposition in the Committee on Invalid Pensions to their consideration, nor is there any intention to restrict any reasonable debate upon the Senate bills. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MAHON. It is evident that if the gentleman insists we shall do nothing; and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 34, noes 44.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. ANDREWS. With the permission of the Chair, I would like to make a brief statement covering the general condition of the Senate bills on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Nebraska to make a brief statement to the House?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, those bills that have been before the House Committee on Invalid Pensions and there reviewed have disclosed clearly the fact that there are many Senate bills here that ought to be passed in the interest of the beneficiaries named in the bills. The Senate has treated the House quite courteously in the consideration of private pension bills that have gone from this body to the Senate, and it seems to me, in view of the fact that there are some House bills now pending in the Senate that ought to be considered, and whose passage might be secured, that we ought to-night, in view of the lateness of the session, to take up for consideration only the Senate bills on our Calendar, which can be considered, and many of them are unquestionably of a meritorious character. I refer to the consideration of the Senate bills alone if this order is adopted. I hope the question of a quorum will be withdrawn, and that we may consider a few of these bills that are so urgent in their character.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Dr. STOKES, be excused to-night on account of illness. I have just left his bedside.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. To meet further the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we should not consider any particular character of bills, I will make the general motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bills on the Calendar in their order under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion could not be made now. There is no quorum present; and the House must either adjourn or proceed with a call of the House under the rule, for which a motion will have to be made, as the rule does not apply to the Friday night sessions. We can not go into committee unless the point of no quorum is withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. WOOD. I ask that the House proceed under the rule when the House finds itself without a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But no measure is pending.

Mr. WOOD. I understand there is a measure pending, and that is the vote on the resolution. There being a want of a quorum disclosed, the roll must be called, as I understand it, under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a mistake; no motion is pending to that effect. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole could not be entertained after the point of no quorum had been raised. A motion for a call of the House would be in order, if the gentleman desires to make that motion.

Mr. WOOD. I do make that motion.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 45, noes 18.

So a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TALBERT. I rise to a question of order. Under the rule for proceedings on Friday night sessions, the motion to adjourn must be seconded by a majority of the members present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HEPBURN, and the House proceeded to divide.

Mr. TALBERT. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that the appeal comes too late.

The members voting in favor of the motion to adjourn were announced as 47.

Before the announcement of the vote in opposition to the motion,

Mr. McRAE said: Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 74, answered "Present" 1, not voting 227; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House refuses to adjourn, and the Clerk will call the roll under the call of the House. The members present will answer "Present" when their names are called.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the call which we are about to have require absentees to be sent for?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not until the roll call discloses the fact that there is no quorum present.

Mr. OTEY. It has already been decided that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A call of the House has been ordered, and under that the Clerk will call the roll. The presentation of excuses for absent members will then be in order.

Mr. OTEY. Is it in order to move that they be sent for?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the first call by the Clerk under the call of the House which was ordered prior to the motion to adjourn made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. OTEY. What I want to find out is, if it is in order to send for absentees now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the close of the roll call the Sergeant-at-Arms will send for absent members.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I should like to move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McRAE) there were—ayes 65, noes 36.

Mr. McRAE and Mr. HARDY demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion of the gentleman from New York to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILNES. I desire to know if a motion to adjourn would now be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. MILNES. I make that motion.

Mr. McRAE. I submit that that was the last motion.

Mr. MILNES. We have done business since that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call has been made, and upon that the yeas and nays have been ordered. The gentleman from Michigan now moves that the House adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MILNES; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McRAE and Mr. HARDY) there were—ayes 63, noes 35.

Mr. HARDY. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 73, answered "Present" 2, not voting 216; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. The point of order is this: The gentleman from New York [Mr. POOLE] moved that further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with——

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina is stating a point of order.

Mr. TALBERT. The question was put; the Speaker said that the noes seemed to have it. A division was demanded; the gentleman from Arkansas called for the yeas and nays. The motion was put, and the yeas and nays were ordered. The House was then dividing upon that question when the motion to adjourn was made. Consequently, I think it is out of order, and we will have to go back to where we left off and come again. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. TALBERT. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not entertain the appeal until the announcement is made on the vote which has just been taken.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLUE. I have just come into the Hall, and want to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not vote, under the rules, if he has just come into the Hall.

Mr. DOCKERY. He can be marked "present."

Mr. TALBERT. Another point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. I have appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the Chair has refused to entertain the appeal until the announcement of the vote upon the motion to adjourn. I am afraid the motion is carried, and then the Chair can not entertain the appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under those conditions the gentleman would be correct.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I can be marked as "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be marked as "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. McRAE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask leave of absence for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. That is the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of the roll on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POOLE], that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 56, nays 75, answered "Present" 1, not voting 223; as follows:

HEIRS OF ALBERT AUGUSTINE.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1021) granting relief to the heirs of Albert Augustine for property taken for the Cayuse wars.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $350 to the heirs of Albert Augustine, of Rose Hill, Iowa, for property taken for use of the United States Army in the Cayuse war, in 1847 and 1848.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BASIL MORELAND.

Mr. WHITE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1475) for the relief of Basil Moreland.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Basil Moreland $2,212, in full for all claim he may have against the United States for his land and improvements in Blue Earth County, Minn., taken by the United States for the Winnebago Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF FUR SEALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 17th instant, a report from the Secretary of State touching the reply of the British Government in regard to the failure of the negotiations of the Paris tribunal to protect the fur-seal herd of Alaska.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 20, 1897.

AMERICAN INSURANCE COMPANIES IN GERMANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant, a report from the Secretary of State, accompanied by copies of correspondence with the German Government in reference to American insurance companies.

NONPARTISAN INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9188) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this is perhaps the most remarkable bill in its provisions and in its purposes——

Mr. QUAY. I understand that the bill has been taken up and is before the Senate. Is that the fact?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Pennsylvania submit a motion to take it up, or did he ask for unanimous consent?

Mr. QUAY. I moved to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator entered a motion?

Mr. QUAY. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the motion to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I thought the bill had been taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read once more for information.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not care for a full reading. That is sufficient.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, of course I have no disposition to prevent the consideration of the bill at this time, but it is a bill that the Senate ought not to pass without careful consideration at least. As I was saying before the motion was formally put (I supposed the bill had been taken up), it seems to me to be the most remarkable bill, both in its details and in its purposes, that has ever been presented to Congress. It is a bill which proposes to offset the Government by government by commission. I wish to call the attention of the Senate, if I can have its attention, to the details of the bill.

It provides for a commission to be appointed of twelve persons in four sections, each member of said commission to have a salary of $5,000 a year. The four sections are to be denominated labor, agriculture, manufactures, and business. There has been, I think, no call from the manufacturers for such a commission. There has been no call from business men for such a commission, unless it is that a monetary commission shall be appointed to advise Congress what financial legislation it ought to pass. The manufacturers have certainly asked for no commission.

The demand, then, for this legislation comes from labor and agriculture, two classes of our citizens, and they ask that each of those classes shall have three commissioners, the majority of the commission not to belong to any one of the political parties which took part in the last Presidential election. Each commissioner is to have $5,000 per annum. That is $60,000. Each section or division is to have a lawyer at $5,000 a year, and also——

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me, I hope we may have order in the Chamber, so that he can be heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators to refrain from conversation. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend until order is restored. [A pause.] The Senator from Connecticut will proceed.

Mr. PLATT. This interruption having taken place, I will repeat. Each member of this commission is to have a salary of $5,000 per annum, which makes $60,000. Each of the four divisions is to employ a lawyer at $5,000, which is $20,000 more, making $80,000 per annum. Each division is also to have a clerk at $200 per month, or $2,400 per annum, which is about $10,000 more, making about $90,000 for the officials of this commission, in addition to which they are to have a reading clerk for the entire commission, shorthand reporters, a messenger, rent for place of meeting——

Mr. CULLOM. I should like, if the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, to submit a conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT I am somewhat embarrassed in this matter. I have felt that the labor commission bill ought not to come before the Senate at the present time, but I did not feel like making opposition to it. The bill being up, I wish to state my objections to it, and then the Senate can do what it pleases with the measure.

Mr. CULLOM. I will present the report as soon as the Senator has concluded.

Mr. PLATT. It is pretty hard to attempt to state objections to a bill when interrupted every two or three minutes for some purpose.

Mr. CULLOM. I will not interrupt the Senator; but I give notice that as soon as he concludes his remarks I shall ask leave to submit the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. Very well; present it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Connecticut yields to me to submit the conference report. I dislike to take him off the floor, but he yields, and I will submit the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a question of privilege.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 8, 13, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000;" and strike out, in line 20, page 18, of the bill, the word "twenty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$130,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

S. M. CULLOM,
M. S. QUAY,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. W. WADSWORTH,
E. S. HENRY,
J. D. CLARDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of the agreement?

Mr. CULLOM. There are only a few amendments to the bill where the Senate conferees gave away what was agreed to in the Senate.

Referring to the amendments somewhat in detail, I will state that on page 5 of the bill the Senate made an amendment increasing the appropriation for the Division of Chemistry from $15,000 to $17,000, which is the smallest appropriation made for that branch of the service in several years. The House conferees yielded on that question, so that that item is agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses.

On page 7 of the bill, item 3, the second being a matter of no consequence, we increase the force by creating one additional assistant in the Pathological Division, at $1,200 a year, the testimony being that an additional assistant is very much needed, because the assistant who has heretofore been provided for is taken out of the office and is in service in the field a good deal. That item was agreed to by the House conferees.

Then on page 10 of the bill the clause "including an investigation into the ravages of the gypsy moth" was inserted. This was asked for by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The House conferees receded on that amendment which the Senate made to the bill.

On page 11 there was an increase of the amount for biological investigations from $17,500 to $20,000. After very considerable discussion of the matter, the amount appropriated by the House being the same as in last year's act, the Senate conferees finally allowed the amount to remain as the House had fixed it, at $17,500 instead of $20,000, that being a division that we thought could get along with the same appropriation made heretofore.

On the same page, in another item, for pomological investigations, the Senate increased the amount from $6,000 to $8,000. This is for investigating, collecting, and disseminating information relating to the fruit industry, etc. The House conferees yielded upon that amendment.

Then, on page 13, item 10 was a mere insertion of an amendment providing for the using of a portion of the money for experimental gardens and grounds, in repairing the roadways and walks in the park here, which was very necessary, and the House conferees yielded on that item.

On pages 14 and 15, in regard to agricultural experiment stations, etc., the amount appropriated by the House was $750,000. The Senate inserted an amendment providing for an investigation, as far as it could go, and a report to Congress of the agricultural resources and capabilities of Alaska, and we added $5,000 for that investigation, increasing the total appropriation to $755,000. The House conferees yielded upon that amendment.

Upon the amendment on page 18, increasing the amount of the appropriation from $5,000 to $7,000, as the Senate did, for the purchase of books, periodicals, and papers for completing imperfect series, etc., the House conferees yielded, making the amount $7,000 instead of $5,000.

Then, on the same page, items 15 and 16, the Senate increased the appropriation from $65,000 to $70,000 and from $40,000 to $45,000. That is the appropriation for the preparation, printing, illustration, publication, indexing, and distribution of documents, bulletins, and reports. After investigation of the first item the Senate conferees determined to yield and to leave the amount at $65,000 instead of $70,000. After further conference as to the next item, we reduced that to $35,000, and increased the amount of the item on the next page from $25,000 to $30,000. The conferees agreed to those propositions in that form. The testimony taken before us (for we sent for one of the men in charge of the Bureau) was to the effect that the items ought to be arranged in that way, and we saved $5,000 in the arrangement.

Then, on page 21, item 22, the Senate increased the amount. It pertains to the contingent expenses of the Agricultural Department. There are a large number of items embraced here. The Senate made the appropriation $25,000 instead of $20,000, as fixed by the House, and the House conferees agreed to it in that way.

In reference to the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, etc., the next item in the bill, the House agreed to appropriate $120,000. The Senate made the amount $150,000. The conferees compromised upon that question, making the amount $130,000. In item 24, where the House appropriated $100,000, the Senate raised the amount to $130,000, and we compromised on $110,000, so that the item was agreed to in that way.

On page 23, the Senate struck out a long provision in reference to the manner of the distribution of seeds, and in order to make the whole arrangement so that it could be understood, the House conferees agreed to the amendment striking out that provision.

There was nothing else in the bill in controversy except items 27 and 28, on pages 28 and 29. The Senate fixed the salary of one inspector in the Weather Bureau at $2,000, the House having neglected to do that by mistake. That is the amount the inspector is getting already in the Weather Bureau. To that the House conferees agreed. In addition to that the Senate put in an amendment providing that hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, leaves of absence be granted not to exceed thirty days in any one year, as is arranged with reference to other bureaus of the Department.

That is all there is in the bill that was in controversy, and it was disposed of as I have stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the report ought to be printed, so that it can be laid before the Senate and examined with some degree of intelligence by Senators. There is not a man in the Senate Chamber outside of the Senator from Illinois who knows a thing about the matter, and nobody can tell anything about it from the reading of the report.

Mr. CULLOM. I have been explaining each item that was in controversy.

Mr. ALLEN. I know the Senator explained each item, but we do not know what relation the different items hold to the bill as a whole.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator would have known if he had listened to what I said.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I would have known if I had had the bill and had understood its entire history; but what objection is there to having it printed now and go over, so that it can be laid upon the tables of Senators and we can look at it and examine it intelligently?

Mr. CULLOM. There is only one objection, so far as I am concerned, and that is that we are crowded for time.

Mr. TELLER. I have been trying to follow the Senator who has the bill in charge, but back here we can not hear anything he has said. I should like to know what he is talking about.

Mr. CULLOM. I have just concluded all I desired to say, unless I am asked to repeat the items, which I would rather do than have the report go over and be printed, in view of the importance of the business that is before us and the hurry that we are all in now.

Mr. ALLEN. I realize that we are in a great hurry, but it occurrs to me that the Senate has some interest in this bill besides the members of the Comuittee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULLOM. Assuredly.

Mr. ALLEN. It strikes me very forcibly that the whole thing ought to be printed as it is now reported, so that it can be taken up and intelligently analyzed and considered. If the Senator from Illinois will give me his attention, I venture to suggest the proposition that there is not a Senator in this Chamber who understands a thing about the bill or about the report aside from the subcommitteemen who have it in charge.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not care to take the time of the Senate in discussing it unless the Senator is willing to allow it to be passed or disposed of after reasonable discussion. I am prepared to answer any question as to the items in controversy between the two Houses. I went over it with some degree of detail, hoping that it would avoid the necessity of having the report printed or longer delayed.

Mr. ALLEN. I can not understand what objection there can be to printing the report.

Mr. CULLOM. I will dispose of the matter for the present by allowing the report to be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed.

Mr. CULLOM subsequently said: I desire to call up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, which I made this morning. I will state that the Senator who at that time objected says he is satisfied with the report; and I therefore ask that the report be now concurred in.

Mr. ALLEN. I have examined the report, and am satisfied I was wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The conference report has been read in full, the Chair understands.

Mr. CULLOM. The report has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

NONPARTISAN INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was addressing the Senate at the time the conference report intervened. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senate long enough to make one observation. I know how difficult it is to obtain the attention of the Senate to any measure which is before it at this late date in the session; but if Senators do not desire to listen to the objections to the bill, I wish that they would at least send for and get House bill 9188 and read its provisions, for I am persuaded that the Senate does not understand the bill, and will not pass it if it does understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me for a moment. I wish to make an appeal to the Senate to proceed to the consideration of appropriation bills. Under the rules of the Senate, appropriation bills are supposed to be in order at any time and other business to give way to them.

If we are to complete the work of this session, it is absolutely essential that bills which from time to time are consuming an hour or two or three or four hours shall be laid aside when appropriation bills are ready for consideration. I happen to know that the bill now under consideration is a bill which will lead perhaps not to prolonged debate, but which will occupy the attention of the Senate for the greater part of a day. So I want to appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania who has the bill in charge and who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations and knows the absolute necessity of dealing with appropriation bills at this time, to allow this matter to be set aside until we can at least pass the two appropriation bills which are now upon the Calendar. So, appealing to him and to other Senators, I ask unanimous consent that we may now proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. I object for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. In one moment. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I am not in charge of this bill. I called it up at the request of the representatives of the great labor organizations of the country, who deem its importance and magnitude, I think, beyond its real value to them, but they are exceeding in earnest about it; and it having passed the House of Representatives almost without opposition, they are exceedingly anxious for it to have a fair hearing before the Senate at this session. So far as I am concerned, the Senator from Iowa knows that I am as anxious as he to proceed with the consideration of appropriation bills. The Senator in charge of the bill is the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. If he will take the responsibility of postponing the bill, I shall assent to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I appeal to the Senator from California——

Mr. QUAY. Before that is done, I wish, as part of my remarks on the bill, to insert in the RECORD the report of the committee in its behalf. I shall not ask for its reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Education and Labor, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 230):

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 230) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital, beg leave to report in favor of its passage with the following amendments:

Amend section 1 by striking out, in lines 3 and 4, the words "the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "there be, and is hereby, created."

Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The five members representing labor shall be appointed by the President of the United States from those nominated by labor organizations which are national in character, having the largest number of members and being most representative, both representative character and numerical strength to be considered, and not more than one person shall be appointed from any one organization. That of the five members representative of agriculture, three shall be appointed on the recommendation of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, and two on the recommendation of the National Grange and Patrons of Husbandry. That these recommendations shall be made by the national organizations in delegated assemblies, or by the national executive committees or executive boards or committees of any kind that represent said organizations when their national delegated assemblies are not in session; that said recommendations shall be made to the President of the United States within three months after the passage of this act, and that if the President of the United States shall find that any of those recommended, in his opinion, are not qualified to be members of the said commission, that he shall notify said organizations of the same, whereupon said organizations shall make further recommendations for appointment by the President. The five members representative of business shall be appointed by the President from those representing manufacturing and other business pursuits. After the appointment of said commission each division of five is hereby authorized and directed to choose or appoint two additional commissioners to act with them on terms of equality, making the whole number twenty-one, but no division of five shall make both of its appointments from the same political party."

Amend section 3 by inserting after the word "appointment," in line 7, the following: "as provided above."

Amend section 8 by adding at the end thereof the following: "who shall transmit the same to Congress."

Amend section 9 by striking out all after the word "salary," in line 3, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "of each member of this commission shall be $10 per day while actually engaged in the work of the commission, and actual traveling expenses."

The problems presented in the various fields of labor and in the different departments of business have become and are becoming more complicated through the progress which marks this industrial age. The relations of laborers to each other on the one hand, and to capital on the other, are now so varied and differ so greatly in widely separated sections of our great country that it has become necessary to establish some central bureau or commission which shall be able to view comprehensively the entire field, and ascertain the true relation to each other of the facts presented. In no other way can the many interests of half a continent be brought into harmony; in no other way can that feeling of good will of all classes toward each other be aroused which is essential to the happiness, prosperity, and progress of the nation.

To attempt to deal with the larger questions presented by capital and labor through local boards or by local legislation has become impracticable. The facilities for communication have become so many and so efficient that all parts of our country and all its interests are inseparably knit together. Yet at the same time the differences in conditions surrounding labor and capital in widely separated localities render it impossible to deal with all according to rules or principles formulated or derived from a study of the problems presented in a circumscribed area. The time has come for a wider study of these problems, and for wider generalizations. The questions presented by the industrial and business conditions of Maine must be considered in connection with those of the far different conditions of California and Alabama, the mutual relations of the three sections ascertained, and labor and capital in each brought into accord with each other both locally and generally. The interdependence of all industrial pursuits and all business vocations throughout the country must be ascertained in order that the true causes of friction may be discovered and remedies applied which shall not bear unjustly upon any one calling in which men engage.

It is owing to the present impossibility of ascertaining the true and fundamental relation of labor and capital, of labor in one section with labor in another, of capital in one region with capital in other, that the discontent of the one and the apparent indifference of the other are constantly increasing. It is owing to this, too, that there is lack of harmony in movements begun by either interest for self-protection. No general principles have been laid down which will apply to conditions in widely separated districts. Thus there arise conflicts between labor organizations themselves and disagreements between the representatives of the commercial or business interests. But the tendency is constantly toward wider generalization, toward wider union, though the generalization has reference to industrial conditions on one side and the conditions of capital on the other, and the union to an amalgamation of each of two sets of interests which are set one against the other in semihostile array. The breach which now exists between capital and labor is thus constantly widened, and where there should be mutual confidence and mutual concessions there are increasing enmity and a multiplication of grounds of difference.

Labor is fast coming to the belief that its present forms of organization are inadequate to secure the protection and the benefits sought, and that it must use politics as a weapon against the capitalist class. Recent conventions have brought this question prominently forward, and the organization of labor for political and not simply for industrial ends is not impossible. How labor is beginning to view the complex problems presented by its relation to capital may be clearly seen in this extract from a resolution introduced in a labor convention recently held:

"Whereas the economic power of the capitalist class used by that class for the oppression of labor rests upon institutions essentially political, which in the nature of things can not be radically changed or even slightly amended for the benefit of the working people except through the direct action of the working people themselves, economically and politically united as a class:

"Therefore, it is as a class conscious of its strength, aware of its rights, determined to resist wrong at every step, and sworn to achieve its own emancipation that the wage workers are hereby called upon to unite in a solid body, held together by an unconquerable spirit of solidarity under the most trying conditions of the present class struggle."

The widening scope of the action proposed by labor organizations is seen in the following resolutions, which are rather a declaration of principles adopted by the convention referred to:

"Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the progress of production.

"The United States shall obtain possession of the railroads, canals, telegraphs, telephones, and all other means of public transportation and communication; but no employee shall be discharged for political reasons.

"The municipalities to obtain possession of the local railroads, ferries, waterworks, gas works, electric plants, and all industries requiring municipal franchises; but no employee shall be discharged for political reasons.

"The public lands to be declared inalienable. Revocation of all land grants to corporations or individuals the conditions of which have not been complied with.

"Legal incorporation by the States of local trade unions which have no national organization.

"The United States to have the exclusive right to issue money.

"Congressional legislation providing for the scientific management of forests and waterways, and prohibiting the waste of the natural resources of the country.

"Invention to be free to all; the inventors to be remunerated by the nation.

"Progressive income tax, and tax on inheritances; the smaller incomes to be exempt.

"School education of all children under 14 years of age to be compulsory, gratuitous, and accessible to all.

"Repeal of all pauper, tramp, conspiracy, and sumptuary laws. Unabridged right of combination.

"Official statistics concerning the condition of labor. Prohibition of the employment of children of school age and of the employment of female labor in occupations detrimental to health or morality. Abolition of the convict-labor contract system.

"Employment of the unemployed by the public authorities (county, city, State, and nation).

"All wages to be paid in lawful money of the United States. Equalization of women's wages with those of men where equal service is performed.

"Laws for the protection of life and limb in all occupations, and an efficient employers' liability law.

"The people to have the right to propose laws and to vote upon all measures of importance according to the referendum principle.

"Abolition of the veto power of the executive (national, State, and municipal) wherever it exists.

"Municipal self-government.

"Direct vote and secret ballots in all elections. Universal and equal right of suffrage, without regard to color, creed, or sex. Election days to be legal holidays. The principle of proportionate representation to be introduced.

"All public officers to be subject to recall by their respective constituencies.

"Uniform civil and criminal law throughout the United States. Administration of justice to be free of charge."

This extension of the aims of organizations of labor is clearly due to the failure to establish, through a wide and careful study of conditions existing in this country, general principles regarding the relation of labor to capital, based on facts ascertained by an examination of the entire field, and made acceptable to all classes because the facts are known to be true and the principles themselves the logical deductions therefrom.

It can hardly be doubted that it would not be deemed necessary to adopt such resolutions as have been given if there were in existence a commission whose duty, in the language of the bill, shall be to "investigate questions pertaining to immigration, to labor, to agriculture, and to business, and recommend to Congress such legislation as it may deem best upon these subjects;" to "furnish such information and suggest such laws as may be made a basis for uniform legislation by the various States of the Union in order to harmonize conflicting interests, and to be equitable to the laborer, the employer, the producer, and the consumer;" to "receive petitions and grant reasonable time for hearings on subjects pertaining to its duties, and, if deemed necessary," to "appoint a subcommission or commissions of its members to make investigation in any part of the United States."

A commission like that proposed would also be able to do much toward solving the problems which are raised in the following letter from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor:

"The American Federation of Labor at its last convention, held in New York City, adopted a series of resolutions to concentrate and crystallize thought among the people of our country upon the question of the reduction of the hours of labor to eight hours per day, not only in Government but also in private employment.

"It is also proposed that a conference be held by representatives of the organized working people and representatives of the employers, so that a friendly arrangement in the reduction of the hours of labor may, if possible, be effected.

"It is our purpose to obtain the views upon this momentous subject from the best informed men of America—men whose thoughts and utterances are worth recording; men in public life; men whose views sway the minds of their fellow-citizens. Hence, I respectfully ask you to favor me with an answer to the following questions:

"(1) In view of the wonderful and ever-increasing inventions of and improvements in wealth-producing methods, should the working people of our country be required to work more than eight hours per day?

"(2) What would, in your opinion, the influence of the general reduction of the hours of labor to eight per day have upon the moral and social well-being of the people of our country?"

These are questions which the workingman has the right to ask and the right to have answered. They imply not only a reasonable demand, but a strong desire that nothing shall be done which will tend to lower the high moral and social standard of our industrial population, of which the nation is justly proud. They are questions which would properly come under such a commission as is proposed, and its suggestions, made after a careful study of the question from both the side of capital and of labor, should be adopted, for the good of the entire community, not of a single part, will be its aim.

The ends, methods, and results of labor organizations also come within the scope of its inquiry. Such organizations have become numerous and powerful, and it is desirable that their usefulness shall be established by impartial investigation, and such dangerous tendencies, if any they possess, be eliminated. The right of labor to combine for its own protection can not be questioned. Acting within the lines which it is forbidden each individual to pass, it is capable of good results. But it should be established as a principle that labor organizations have no more right to interfere with individuals in the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness than has any of its members. Strikes for legitimate objects are among the rights of labor organizations as they are among those of individuals, but interference with those who are willing to take the places left vacant is not to be tolerated from organized labor more than from individual workmen.

The figures presented by the Department of Labor indicate how great is the prevalence of disputes between employers and employees. From 1881 to and including the first six months of 1894 there were 14,390 strikes, involving 69,167 establishments and 3,714,406 employees. There were in the same period lockouts in 6,067 establishments, throwing out of employment 366,690 workmen. The money loss of the strikes was $163,807,866 in wages, $10,914,406 in assistance by labor organizations, and $82,590,360 loss to employers. In lockouts the loss in wages was $26,695,516; in assistance, $2,524,296, and to employers, $12,235,451. Of all those who struck only 1,188,575 were successful in attaining their objects. The causes leading to the strikes in question were as follows:

"For increase of wages.
"For reduction of hours.
"Against reduction of wages.
"For increase of wages and reduction of hours.
"For reduction of hours and against being compelled to board with employer.
"For change of hour of beginning work.
"For increase of wages and against the contract system.
"For increase of wages and against employment of nonunion men.
"In sympathy with strike elsewhere.
"For nine hours' work with ten hours' pay.
"Against employment of nonunion men, foremen, etc.
"For increase of wages and recognition of union.
"For adoption of union, etc., scale of prices.

"Against increase of hours.
"For increase of wages and enforcement of union indenture rules.
"For reduction of hours and wages.
"For reinstatement of discharged employees, foremen, etc.
"For recognition of union.
"For adoption of union scale.
"For adoption of union rules and union scale.
"For increase of wages and recognition of union.
"To compel World's Fair directors to employ none but union men in building trades.
"For reinstatement of discharged employees.
"For payment of wages overdue.
"For increase of wages and reduction of hours on Saturday.
"Against being compelled to board with employer and for reduction of hours and recognition of union.
"For fortnightly payment."

The above presents only one phase of the relations of labor and capital which it is desirable should be studied and clearly understood. Agricultural laborers have their grievances which should also be investigated. The influence upon their prosperity of railroad and other aggregations of capital with which they come in contact should be learned. The universal dependence upon transportation companies is a factor in the question of the prosperity or lack of prosperity of agriculturists which demands attention. In some States, as in California, this factor is of supreme importance; in others less. The fact that oranges from Spain and Italy compete successfully with oranges from California in the great markets of the country has a wide bearing. The cost of transporting the California fruit to market is from 90 cents to $1 per box, while the foreign fruit pays 33 cents. In less than carload lots it now costs about $2 a box to lay down the California oranges in New York. Spanish oranges pay 50 cents a case, but the case is twice as large as that containing the fruit with which it competes. These facts tend to show one of the principal causes of the complaint that is now being made by a very important industry of a great State, and present a case which would fairly come before such a commission as is proposed.

Lower freight rates and a measure of protection by tariff for the domestic fruit would revive a now languishing branch of horticulture; and the facts stated above are emphasized by the report of United States Consul Seymour, of Palermo, that during the year 1894 there were exported from that port eight times as many lemons and oranges to the United States as the entire exportation to all other foreign countries during the same period. California and Florida suffer from this competition of fruit raised on the shores of the Mediterranean, and the prosperity of two great States of the Union is disastrously affected to the benefit of people of another race, country, and hemisphere.

But all problems which are presented by periods of general or local depression are not so simple. Says Carroll D. Wright, in his first annual report as Commissioner of Labor:

"The depressions with which the present generation is familiar belong to the age of invention and of organized industry. Whether these depressions are necessary concomitants of present industrial conditions may be a mooted question, but it is certain that they come with such conditions, and that many features of them must pass away when out of the present status of industrial forces there shall be evolved a grander industrial system, a system which must be as much grander than the present as the present is grander than that out of which it was evolved. Industrial depressions must not be confused with commercial crises and panics, notwithstanding the effects of one reach into the other; that is, a commercial and financial crisis may take place without immediately producing any industrial depression, although, generally, if the effects of such commercial or financial crisis continue for any great length of time, the industries must be involved to a greater or less extent. * * * In searching, whether in Europe or America, for the causes of the industrial disease which has effected the manufacturing world since 1882, it is interesting to note how fully trade, profession, or calling influences opinions given. Bankers and merchants are likely to give as the absolute cause of depressions some financial or commercial reasons; clergymen and moralists largely incline to assert that social and moral influences, united with providential causes, produce the industrial difficulties which afflict nations; manufacturers incline to give industrial conditions, labor legislation, labor agitation, the demands of the workingmen, overproduction, and various features of the industrial system as causes; while the workingmen attribute industrial diseases to combinations of capital, long hours of labor, low wages, machinery, and kindred causes. The politician feels that changes in administration, the nonenactment of laws that he desires, tariffs or the absence of tariffs, are the chief influencing causes of industrial disturbances. The fact that, as a rule, one's opinion can be foreseen by knowing his calling in life vitiates to a large extent the value of causes alleged; yet when all classes unite upon a few prominent reasons, and those reasons can be illustrated by facts, it becomes possible to consider the alleged causes of industrial depressions with a fair degree of intelligence and with conclusions that have sufficient soundness in them to indicate partial remedial agencies."

The long list of causes of depression is classified by the Commissioner of Labor into three great divisions:

"First, leading or direct causes, such as overproduction, cost of production, influence of machinery, crippling of the consumptive power, etc.; second, contributory causes, such as transportation, distribution, exchanges, commercial systems, etc.; and third, remote, indirect, and trivial causes."

Many remedies for industrial depression have been proposed, the most important of which, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Labor, are the restriction of land grants to corporations, the restriction of immigration, the enactment of laws to stop speculation, the establishment of boards of arbitration to settle industrial difficulties, the contraction of credit, a sound currency, commercial and mercantile regulations relating to tariff, transportation, navigation laws, and public works, reform in the distribution of products, profit sharing, and the organization of workmen and of employers.

It will be seen that the field is a wide one, that many interests are involved, and that the dependence of one upon the other can be ascertained only by a systematic and careful study of the conditions which surround industrial life. Without such study it will be impossible to understand the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital, and without exact knowledge it will be impossible to apply a remedy.

"Probably," says Labor Commissioner Wright, "no human device or combination of devices can be instituted powerful enough to prevent the recurrence of financial and commercial crises and industrial depressions, but this should not prevent men seeking devices which will mitigate the severity or shorten the duration of such calamities. When it is considered that each great manufacturing nation of the world is struggling for industrial existence as against the fierce competition of every other nation engaged in like pursuits, some of the questions which seem to absorb the minds of individual employers and employees seem trivial indeed."

And trivial indeed will some of them appear when we shall be face to face with that industrial competition which is being forced upon us by Japan. It is but a few years ago that this remarkable nation began to establish manufactories to supply goods which it had hitherto purchased abroad, yet even now there has arisen alarm in England, Germany, and our own country regarding the influence which Japanese manufactures will have upon their prosperity. And this alarm is not without cause. The grave importance of the questions raised by the marvelous development of Japanese manufacturing has been fully recognized by the National Association of the Manufacturers of the United States, which has requested Congress to appoint a commission to inquire as to the invasion of our own home markets by Japan. The Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California in February called a meeting to discuss the Japanese industrial question, at which Julian Sonntag called attention to the fact that it is a dangerous fallacy to contend that Japan can never compete successfully with America and England in commerce and manufactures. "To-day," he said, "one can not go into a dry goods store and tell French and Japanese silks apart. Carpets from Osaka rival those of Egypt, Turkey, and Persia, and are being exported to America in large quantities."

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted and ordered sent to every member of Congress:

"Whereas the matter of the invasion of the manufacturing field of the United States by goods manufactured by cheap labor in Japan has been under consideration by the Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California and by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce; and

"Whereas a joint committee from the Manufacturers and Producers' Association and the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, after full investigation and consideration, have reported that great danger to the manufacturing interests of the United States exists in the rapid strides being made by Japan in manufacturing; and

"Whereas this meeting of the members of the Manufacturers and Producers' Association and of the Chamber of Commerce, called for the purpose of discussing the subject, have listened to the report of the said joint committee and the remarks made thereon:

"Be it resolved, By the Manufacturers and Producers' Association and by the Chamber of Commerce in convention assembled, that the Congress of the United States be requested and urged to appoint a commission to investigate the question of Japanese manufactured importations and Japanese export trade."

The great newspapers of the country have recognized the importance of the industrial revolution in Japan, and are discussing it seriously. Writers in magazines devoted to economics are giving the matter their attention. In the March number of Gunton's Magazine appears the following:

"There is no country whose economic changes are likely to create so much industrial surprise, if not dislocation, in the next quarter of a century as Japan. Until recently Japan has been classed with China and other Asiatic countries as in the hand-labor area. The more advanced machine-using countries, like England and the United States, have entertained no fears from competition with the cheap labor of Asia, because the economies of their superior machinery have more than offset the increase in the cost of production through their higher wages. This has led many economists of the laissez-faire school to assume that high wages instantaneously bring with them lower cost of production, attributing the diminished cost to the increased skill and dexterity of the higher wage laborers. Such writers as Edward Atkinson and Mr. Shoenhof are constantly adding to the flood of free-trade literature on the basis of this very erroneous assumption. Because we could compete successfully in most lines of manufacture with Asiatic countries, it has been insisted that we could do so with England for the same reason, namely, that our wages were higher.

"Having assumed that the superiority of high wage conditions all lies in the increased personal dexterity of the laborers, these writers seem to have entirely overlooked the great part machinery plays in low-price machine phenomena. The reason this country is in greater danger from English competition than from the Chinese is that England has similar machinery to our own, while the Chinese continue to produce by hand labor. Whenever two countries employ the same tools or machinery, the lower wages become the great element in determining the competition. This is precisely the case between the United States and England. So that while we have little to fear from the cheap labor of Asia without modern machinery, we have everything to fear from the relatively lower wages of England, because English laborers have as highly perfected machinery as we have.

"During the last quarter of a century Japan has been rapidly westernizing her civilization, and is now rapidly westernizing her methods of industry. At the present rate she is progressing it may not take her more than a decade to get the factory system, with its most modern equipments. Although this will be sure to act upon her laborers, raising their standard and increasing their cost of living, it will probably take half a century before her wages approximate the wage standard of the United States or even of England. To the extent to which she increases her factory methods faster than she raises her wage standard will she become a successful competitor with western producers, and will demonstrate the economic soundness of protection as a permanent principle in national statesmanship. All the world should rejoice at Japan's progress. But it will be a calamity for mankind if Japan should be permitted to destroy or even lessen the rate of progress in this country or in Europe. Her advent into the use of modern methods should be beneficial to her own people, and make her the missionary to carry similar methods and civilization into other Asiatic countries, but not to injure the civilization of western countries."

Here are presented problems of the gravest nature, with which the United States must soon deal. The fact that the Japanese are considered simply an imitative people, and that their civilization is by some deemed inferior to our own, should not blind us to that other fact that Japan is putting upon our markets for 87 cents felt hats of the best quality, upon American and European patterns, which would sell in London for $2.62 and in this country for $4. The Japanese are beginning to make shoes, and it is thought not improbable that there will soon be placed upon our market for 75 cents shoes as good as those now costing $3. Already there is an agency in San Francisco which is engaged in underselling American products. Doors, sashes, blinds, all kinds of wooden ware, cooperage stock, etc., are being sold from 30 to 50 per cent less than the same grade of goods can be manufactured for here. Even bicycles, clocks, watches, boots, shoes, clothing, hats, caps, gloves, fancy goods, and notions are being sold at similar prices which defy competition.

The following, translated from the report of the Swiss consul in Japan, and published in the consular reports of the State Department, gives another view of the situation:

"The Manchester Guardian, in its issue of June 9, 1894, says that manufactures of cotton textiles in India can no longer compete with Japan, as 4,000 Japanese spindles will produce the same quantity as 10,000 Indian. Around the industrial center of Osaka there are cotton mills in almost every village, and exports of Japanese fabrics were first made from that city. There being no protection to foreign machinery against patent infringements, the Japanese imitate quickly all European novelties and improvements, and hence work under favorable conditions. Labor is so cheap that even Europe can no longer compete. Good cotton undershirts are being sold at 84 to 90 cents per dozen. Cotton umbrellas on iron sticks (an important export article of Osaka) are sold at $2.60 to $3 per dozen, and the total exports of umbrellas in 1894 footed up $746,067, as against $589,272 for 1893. The manufacture of hemp and cotton has begun.

"This industry is a new one and has its seat in the city of Osaka. These carpets, called by foreigners Osaka carpets, are cheap but not durable. All kinds of patterns imaginable as well as every length and width are manufactured. While two years ago the Japanese taste prevailed, to-day fine imitations of Turkish and Egyptian carpets can be found on the market. These carpets are all made by children, and in the low, gloomy rooms of the Japanese houses troops of little boys and girls are working at this dusty trade with the zeal and intelligence of grown people. The little ones, who can be seen at work in a tropical heat, almost nude, seem to be in good health. These children's pay varies, according to their efficiency, from 3 to 10 cents per day. The principal buyers are Americans, who purchased $327,000 worth during 1894 out of a total export of 546,001 pieces, worth $1,134,072. in that year, against 206,050 pieces, worth $501,989, in 1893, and 112,279 pieces, worth $177,445 in 1892.

"Of late years the manufacture of Japanese matches has attained large dimensions, owing to the very low prices at which they are sold. Hongkong, British India, China, and Korea are using them almost exclusively.

"Last year's statistics show the surprising fact that Japanese matches were exported to points and in value as follows: To Australia, $25,407; Austria, $2,845; North America, $1,300. The total export value of these matches was $5,795,634 in 1894, $3,537,974 in 1893, and $2,302,041 in 1892. * * *

"In addition to watches, $28,570 worth of parts of watches were imported in 1894, of which $13,425 came from the United States and $11,972 from Switzerland. During the previous year imports of parts of watches amounted to $9,077, and were supplied by Switzerland alone. The imports from America were made by the Osaka Watch Company, a Japanese stock company at Osaka, established there last year. This concern had bought of an American company (formerly of San Diego, Cal.), the Japan Watch Company, Limited, $40,000 worth of old machinery for the manufacture of watches, at which work will commence on or about June, 1895; meanwhile the manager and two foremen are teaching thirty Japanese operatives how to manufacture the different parts of watches. Machinery therefor has been ordered in the United States, and will arrive in June, and therewith seven or eight American foremen. The original project was to import cases from America, and an order had already been given to a New York firm, but the prices were so high that the company concluded to manufacture the gold, silver, and other metallic cases themselves. The cost of watches, it is expected, will be unusually high at first, but it is difficult as yet to judge of the probable general results."

That Japan is thus able to undersell us is due to the fact that it makes use of the best modern machinery, and that the wages paid are hardly more than one-tenth the wages paid in the United States. N. W. McIvor, consul-general of the United States, gives the following list of wages paid at Yokohama for a working day of ten hours:

Description.	Wages.	Description.	Wages.
	Per day.		Per day.
Carpenters	$0.36	Sake brewers	$0.22
Plasterers	.36	Silk spinners (female)	.17
Stonecutters	.41	Tea workers (picking and preparing)	.29
Sawyers	.29	Tea firing:
Roofers	.36	Male	.10 to .14
Tilers	.41	Female	.07 to .12
Matting makers	.24	Common laborers	.19
Screen makers	.26	Confectioners	.17
Joiners	.29	Sauce makers	.24
Paper hangers	.24		Per month.
Tailors:		Farm laborers:
For Japanese clothes	.24	Male	1.44
For foreign clothes	.48	Female	1.20
Dyers	.24	Silkworm breeders:
Cotton beaters	.17 to .36	Male	1.92
Blacksmiths	.24	Female	.96
Porcelain makers	.38	Weavers (female)	.96
Porcelain artists	.72	Servants in foreign houses:
Oil-press men	.24	Male	2.88 to 7.20
Tobacco cutters	.24	Female	2.40 to 4.80

House servants:
Men	5.00	.50	2.12
Women	3.00	.59	1.16

There is another fact in connection with the wages paid Japanese workmen which is of importance. In 1873 the mills of Japan and those of the United States and England paid wages that had a certain given relation to each other. Since then silver has depreciated in value one-half, yet the Japanese manufacturer pays exactly the same rate of wages as before. The cost of labor to him is therefore one-half what it hitherto was.

T. R. Jernigan, consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, says:

"Japan by geographical position and the nature of the soil and its general aspect must be the manufacturing country of Asia, as Great Britain has so long been for Europe, and this fact brings nearer to the attention of the cotton producer of the United States the importance of shorter ways between their cotton fields and the cotton mills of Asia, especially by means of the Nicaragua Canal.

"The rapid increase in the manufacturing industry of Japan and China could not be sustained in the absence of a compensating remuneration, and if the statistics show the remuneration to be compensating, then the means of making it so should be inquired about. It is known that the manufacturing industry, generally, of the United States has not yielded merited returns for the labor and skill of those engaged in it.

"Osaka is the great manufacturing city of Japan. In Osaka 21 mills paid an average dividend of 18 per cent, the highest dividend being 28 per cent and the lowest 8 per cent. The dividends for 1893 are given at 12 per cent, and for the first six months of 1894 at the rate of 16 per cent. These figures show that the cotton mills of Japan are richly remunerative, while reliable figures show impoverishing returns for the cotton mills of Great Britain, and an unfavorable lookout for those of the United States."

The cotton manufacturing industry of Japan has increased with wonderful rapidity. There are at present 61 factories in operation, with 560,564 spindles, employing 8,890 men and 29,596 women, and when those establishments now under construction are put in operation during the present year the total number of spindles will be increased to 819,115. The result of the remarkable progress made by Japan in cotton manufacturing is shown in the diminished exports of cotton cloths from this country to China, which is now being supplied in a great measure by Japan, and which will take more from that country and less from us year by year. In 1893 China imported from the United States 65,859,000 yards of cotton, and in 1896 only 27,706,000 yards. From England China imported in 1892 nearly 500,000,000 yards, and in 1896 only 355,000,000 yards.

Consul-General Jernigan states that the industrial development of the Orient is fast becoming a matter for serious thought, and says:

"The enterprising Japanese have, within a few years, established docks and machine shops for the building of medium-sized war ships, and each subsequent year has witnessed fewer orders going to foreign markets for naval supplies. Soon from the naval shops of Japan will be launched as strong war ships as breast the waves of Asiatic seas, and ere a distant year the forces of civilization which have moved Japan so rapidly on lines of progress will be actively and practically at work in China. The awakening of the "middle kingdom" here predicted will put to sleep forever the customs which have for centuries dominated China, as it will call into life new principles to govern her foreign and domestic relations. The thoughtful statesman and merchant will prepare for the solution of the new political and commercial problems. These problems are now claiming the attention of the business men of Great Britain, and the fact that the China Mutual Steamship Navigation Company, of London, is having its vessels repaired in China and Japan is regarded as being of serious significance to British labor and as an evidence of its being displaced by the cheaper labor of China and Japan.

"At a recent meeting of the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company the belief was expressed by a member that gentlemen then present might live to see the company's mail steamers built on the Yangste, in China, instead of on the Clyde, the Tees, or the Tyne. And it is worthy of note that the large majority of the sailors and servants on the foreign steamships that carry the mails across Oriental seas are of the Asiatic races, their employment being due to the cheapness of their wages, for an Asiatic works to-day at one-half of the wages in gold, though at the same wages in silver, that he did twenty years ago, whereas wages in the United States and Great Britain have not materially depreciated from the wages paid in gold twenty years ago. As to commodities in Great Britain and the United States, the average prices are the lowest of the century, while the average prices comparatively of twenty leading commodities of Chinese production were nearly the same in Shanghai in 1896 as they were in 1873, and a higher degree of prosperity in China and Japan has accompanied this stability in prices."

William Eleroy Curtis, in the January number of the Bulletin of the Department of Labor, says:

"Japan is becoming less and less dependent upon foreign nations for the necessities and comforts of life, and is making her own goods with the greatest skill and ingenuity. Since their release from the exclusive policy of the feudal lords, the people have studied the methods of all civilized nations and have adopted those of each which seem to them the most suitable for their own purposes and convenience. They have found one thing in Switzerland, another in Sweden, another in England, others in Germany, France, and the United States, and have rejected what is of no value to them as readily as they have adopted those things which are to their advantage. It is often said that the Japanese are not an original people; that they are only imitators, that they got their art from Korea, their industries from China, and that their civilization is simply a veneer acquired by imitating the methods of other countries. All of this is true in a measure, but it is not discreditable. Under the circumstances that attend the development of modern ideas in Japan, originality is not wanted, but a power of adaptability and imitation has been immensely more useful. The Japanese workman can make anything he has ever seen. His ingenuity is astonishing. Give him a piece of complicated mechanism—a watch or an electrical apparatus—and he will reproduce it exactly and set it running without instructions. He can imitate any process and copy any pattern or design more accurately and skillfully than any other race in the world. It is that faculty which has enabled Japan to make such rapid progress, and will place her soon among the great manufacturing nations of the world.

"It was only forty years ago that the ports of Japan were forcibly opened to foreign commerce. It was only twenty-eight years ago that the first labor-saving machine was set up within the limits of that Empire. Now the exports and imports exceed $115,000,000.

"While the Japanese will soon be able to furnish themselves with all they use and wear and eat without assistance from foreign nations, they will be compelled to buy machinery and raw material, particularly cotton and iron. Therefore, our sales will be practically limited to those articles. And the market for machinery will be limited as to time. The Japanese will buy a great deal within the next few years, almost everything in the way of labor-saving apparatus, but they are already beginning to make their own machinery, and in a few years will be independent of foreign nations in that respect also. Another important fact—a very important fact—is that they will buy only one outfit of certain machinery. We will sell them one set, which they will copy and supply all future demands themselves. This will go on until the new treaties take effect, when American patents will be protected."

Complaint comes from Honolulu that the Japanese are there starting industries of various kinds, even including blacksmith and harness shops. Japanese carpenters, painters, and paper hangers underbid white contractors 33 per cent.

It is apparent to all thinking men from the facts which are being forced upon their attention that the industries of the United States will soon find a competitor with whom it will be useless to struggle under existing conditions. Japan has, or will have in a few years, the best labor-saving machinery that the inventive genius of the world has been able to produce. It will meet us on an even, perhaps a superior, footing in this respect. But besides this, it will have labor at a cost of about one-tenth that of ours, and which is capable of producing manufactured products as good as those produced by our own workmen.

The fact that in Japan silver is the monetary standard can not be overlooked in connection with the subject here discussed. Although the market value of that metal has diminished one-half during the past twenty years, a silver yen will purchase in Japan just as much now as it could in 1873. This has an important bearing on the welfare of the American workman. Because of this depreciation in general market value of silver, while its purchasing power in Japan is unchanged, our workmen are now able to compete with Japanese mechanics on a basis which is only one-half as favorable as it was a quarter of a century ago.

Suppose, for instance, that a Connecticut dealer in clocks wishes to lay in a stock of cheap goods. He can buy them in the home market for, say, $1 each. It makes no difference whether he offers a gold or silver dollar, he can get only one clock for that sum. But he can with his gold dollar buy two Japanese silver dollars, with which he can purchase two clocks of Japanese manufacture, assuming that the price in Japanese coin of the Japanese article is the same as here. He can, therefore, for a given amount of money, get a stock twice as large by making his purchases in Japan. This stock he sells here for silver, which he can exchange for gold, dollar for dollar, and by repeating the operation can reap a rich harvest at the expense of the workmen in his native State. But the facts permit an even more ominous showing than this, for the prices of Japanese products, owing to the extremely low wages of labor, are far below those of the same class of goods here, so that the Connecticut dealer will be likely to get four Japanese clocks for the dollar which will buy only one of Connecticut manufacture.

Consul-General Jernigan, writing from Shanghai, in April, 1895, says:

"It is here that the subject of wages should receive careful attention and it should not be forgotten that while the law of supply and demand with regard to commodities is international, it is only national and often provincial with regard to labor. A bale of cotton may have the same exchangeable value in New Orleans, Liverpool, or Bombay, but the price of a day's labor in Bombay bears no relation to the price of a day's labor in Liverpool or New Orleans, and no adjustment of the two opposing principles can be effected unless a cargo of coolies can be imported as easily as a cargo of cotton.

"An intelligent understanding of the influential agency of the price of labor in regulating the profits of manufacturing enterprise may be had from this illustration: In 1873 the mills of the Orient and Occident were competing on equal terms, and receiving equal returns. Now, in 1894, each mill employs the same amount of labor as it did in 1873, but the owner of the mill in the United States pays for the labor in gold at the old rates, while the owner of the mill in Japan pays for labor in silver at the old rates also. The Japanese mill owner paid in 1894, as he did in 1873, from 18 to 20 cents a day for men, and from 8 to 10 cents a day for women. That meant, in 1873, from 18 to 20 cents in gold a day for men, and from 8 to 10 cents in gold a day for women. Now, during the greater part of 1894, $1 in gold has been about equal to $2 of Japanese silver, which makes it clear that, on account of the depreciation of silver alone, without taking into account the low rate of standard wages which prevail in the Orient, the mill owners of the United States are now paying twice as much for labor as the mill owners of Japan. This may be one reason why the cotton mills in Japan are showing such handsome returns, while in the United States and Great Britain they are comparatively struggling for existence. Not only does this principle of the difference in value of currency in which labor is paid in the eastern and western countries apply to wages, but it applies to whatever is essential to the success of agriculture and manufacturing enterprise.

"It is not meant to intimate that the price of labor in the United States should be regulated by the price of labor in oriental countries, but I do mean that unless some standard of international value for the payment of labor is agreed upon, the products of the oriental laborers tend to become a dangerous rival to the products of the occidental laborers. The statistics and logical comparisons therefrom, here adduced, at least warrant the expression of such an opinion. It is justified by other well-authenticated facts, considered in other connections, but all pointing to the same conclusion. If the land acquired twenty-five years ago by foreigners at Shanghai for their residence and business houses was then worth $25,000,000 and was now sold for what it originally cost in silver, and this silver, the proceeds, was converted into gold at present rates, there would be a loss of about $12,000,000; and by this rule it appears that the inequality in the value of silver and gold has reduced the gold value of property here one-half.

"I am not writing in favor of a gold or silver standard, but I am adducing facts which should awaken greater attention—better still, more decided action—in favor of a permanent or more equalizing adjustment of the value of silver and gold as purchasing mediums. Silver is used by one-half of the world and gold by the other half, and while wages in one-half are paid in a depreciated currency and in the other half in an appreciated currency, a rivalry between the respective products of the labor of each is encouraged, with the advantage in the outset to the products of the laborer paid in depreciated currency, especially when the latter can supply his daily wants with such a currency, which he willingly receives and remains contented. Such apparent advantage is no longer offset by the superiority of the machinery heretofore employed in manufacturing, which was confined to the half of the world now using gold. The same grade of machinery which a few years ago gave superiority to the cotton mills of the United States and Great Britain is now used in the cotton mills of Japan and China, and the enterprise that transplanted it to those countries sent with it foreign skill and ingenuity to superintend and utilize its capacity."

Here is a situation whose danger can hardly be overestimated, and which can not be too quickly guarded against to the extent of our power. It is a situation that demands immediate study by men who are familiar with the conditions of production in this country, and who are able to devise methods by which our own industries may be protected. A commission of the character proposed can best do this work. It will have for its aid the Bureau of Labor already established, which has gathered facts of great value, and is engaged in labors that will be of still greater usefulness. Both commission and Bureau, working on the same lines, can be made to supplement each other in a most effective manner. But the commission is necessary for the study of industrial situations such as that which is now so forcibly presented to our attention, with a view to discover how our own industries are affected and how they can best be protected, and this can not be done too soon. The need of action is immediate. Japan has demonstrated its capacity for rapid development which gives no hope that time will be given us to study at our leisure the questions presented. The issue is even now upon us, and now is the time to act.

Your committee therefore recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. There is hardly a request which my friend from Iowa would make of me to which I would not yield, but it is not the fault of the Senator from Pennsylvania, or the other members of the committee which considered this bill, that it has not been before the Senate for consideration. Time and time again it has been brought up here, and objections have been made to it. I will promise that the friends of the bill will not occupy fifteen minutes in its advocacy, and if its opponents, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and others, will do the same, we shall dispose of the bill in thirty minutes, and either defeat it or pass it.

I want to say, parenthetically speaking, that appropriation bills are, of course, necessary for the sustenance and life of this Government, but this bill is of vital importance, I believe, to the people of our whole country. The object of a government is to make people happy, contented, and prosperous, as well as to protect them in their lives and property, and the millions of friends of this bill believe that it is a panacea for many of their wrongs. Give us, therefore, the opportunity of voting upon it, and whatever the result may be, we shall all acquiesce in it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to make a single remark with regard to one observation of the Senator from California. This is the first time, I think, that a motion has been made to take up this bill. The continuous request has been that it should be considered by unanimous consent when we were considering unobjected bills. Being opposed to the bill, I have felt, under those circumstances, that it was my duty to object. I felt that this was a bill which should be discussed. I do not intend to discuss it at any great length, but I do intend before its passage to take sufficient time to inform the Senate of the very remarkable provisions which the bill contains.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. As the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has seen fit to allude to me as one of the opponents of the bill, I desire to say that I am opposed to the bill because I believe it is utterly impracticable and nonsensical, if such a word is a proper word in a parliamentary sense to use in connection with a bill; and I feel bound to call the attention of the Senate and the country, and of the labor organizations themselves, to its character, not at any very great length, but in my opinion, the bill will certainly occupy more time than is now at the disposal of the Senate if we are to dispose of the pending appropriation bills.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield.

Mr. QUAY. I suggest that a time be fixed for taking the vote on this bill. I think the Senator from California will agree to that suggestion.

Mr. ALDRICH. No time can be fixed until after the debate on the bill has been concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to say to the Senator from California that I am not antagonizing this bill. I am simply stating the necessity of dealing with the appropriation bills now in preference to any other measure that is on the Calendar or is likely to be placed on the Calendar. I am perfectly willing that a time shall be fixed for a vote on the bill, and I should be glad if we could have a vote in fifteen minutes, and would yield to it; but if that can not be done, or a time can not be fixed, I feel it to be my duty to test the sense of the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote upon the expediency of proceeding with the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. What is the regular order?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, in regard to the matter of fixing a time to take a vote——

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it in order to debate a motion to take up a bill?

Mr. PLATT. No motion has been made.

Mr. HILL. The bill has been already taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the present condition of the bill. Upon the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], the bill is now pending before the Senate. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was recognised upon the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me for just a moment.

Mr. PLATT. I will in a moment.

I want to say, with regard to the proposition to fix a time for taking a vote, that it is scarcely practicable before discussion has taken place upon a bill so important as this, which, as it seems to me, revolutionizes the whole system of legislation in this country, to fix a time for taking the vote. There is not, so far as I am concerned, going to be any great delay in discussion; but there ought to be discussion before we are asked to fix a time for taking a vote.

Mr. QUAY. I suggest that the vote be taken at 3 o'clock on the 1st of March, by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the vote be taken upon the pending bill at 3 o'clock on the 1st day of March. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to say but a very few words in regard to this measure. It proposes an efficient commission to obtain information which is of the highest importance. The Congress, including the Senate, has made large appropriations for many objects, but none more important than this. The purpose of this bill is to secure information in regard to the distressing problems, the distressing embarrassments, which now attend the relations of capital and labor, including agriculture and manufactures. The bill contemplates an adequate payment to an adequate commission; that commission is to be aided by all suitable agencies, and if it shall find a solution for the distressing problems and distressing embarrassments which now divide our people into classes, sections, and various interests, it will have achieved more for this country than the construction of a man-of-war.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, if the discussion is going on upon this bill, I shall say what I have to say about it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me that I may test the sense of the Senate on the question of proceeding to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. Before that is done, I should like to say a few words, if I am now in order, if the Senator will yield for that purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I am of a compromising nature. I ask unanimous consent to arbitrate this question. We have been talking about arbitration for some time. The distinguished Senator from Iowa, of course, when he undertakes anything, generally succeeds. We have not, I think, a law upon our statute books which is not in a measure one of compromise. Therefore I make the suggestion to the Senator from Iowa that when the last appropriation bill shall have passed the Senate this bill shall be taken up for consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that with great cordiality. [Laughter.]

Mr. FAULKNER. I object to that.

Mr. HILL. I insist upon it that this bill is properly before the Senate, that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has the floor, and can not be taken off the floor without his consent. This bill having been brought up by vote, its friends should stand by it and proceed to dispose of it.

Mr. ALLISON. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated the condition of the bill. The Chair does not understand whether the Senator from Connecticut has yielded the floor or not.

Mr. PLATT. I have not.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for a moment.

Mr. HILL. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. QUAY. I will put in form the suggestion of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the last appropriation bill shall have passed at the present session; and that it shall then be the special order.

Mr. PERKINS. Provided it be not later than March 1.

Mr. ALDRICH. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order, that there can be only two motions to postpone—one to a day certain, and the other indefinite postponement; and this motion, while it would be sufficiently uncertain to move to take the bill up after the last appropriation bill is disposed of, is not in order under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent that that order be made.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that if there is to be no time until after the last appropriation bill passes the Senate, then this motion is simply a snare and a delusion, and of course does no good to the bill. If there is any such time, it belongs to other measures. I must object.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me.

Mr. HILL. I insist on the regular order. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor and ought to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has so determined; but the Chair submits to the Senate the request for unanimous consent. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania again state his request?

Mr. HOAR. That was objected to, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania again state his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. QUAY. My request was that the further consideration of the bill should be postponed until the last appropriation bill shall have been passed, and then that the bill shall be the special order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the consideration of the pending bill be postponed until the last appropriation bill shall have been disposed of, and that it shall then stand as the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. Disposed of by whom?

Mr. QUAY. Shall have passed the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. To that I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. In a spirit of compromise, I suggest that we make the bill the special order for the 1st day of March.

Mr. PERKINS. And vote on the bill on that day.

Mr. ALDRICH. Make it a special order, and we will get a vote on it as soon as we can.

Mr. QUAY. Make it a special order for the 1st of March, after the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object to that.

Mr. HILL. I object to this joint debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] objects. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator from Connecticut will give way, I will move that the bill be postponed until the 1st of March, and be then made a special order at the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield for that motion?

Mr. PLATT. I shall ask the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he name an hour for voting. Otherwise the bill will be defeated.

Mr. QUAY. That consent we can not get.

Mr. PERKINS. Otherwise the bill will be defeated.

Mr. QUAY. I withdraw the motion. I am not in charge of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Let the Senator from Connecticut proceed with his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will come to order. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT. Let me call attention now, Mr. President, since we have had this irregular and desultory consideration of the pending bill, to what its features really are.

Mr. ALLISON. I appeal to the Senator from Connecticut once more to yield to me that I may make a motion. I think he will find it more convenient to yield now, inasmuch as the bill is likely to be postponed, and that he will want to make his explanation of the bill when it is under consideration rather than now.

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut yields to the Senator from Iowa to make a motion, which the Chair will submit to the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH and others. The motion is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the statement of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I was going to ask the Senator from Iowa whether, the opponents of the bill having been heard on this question——

Mr. ALDRICH. Regular order!

Mr. HILL. Those who are in favor of it——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I object to discussions upon the pending motion, which is not debatable.

Mr. HILL. Those in favor of the bill should have the opportunity to say a word.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the rules of the Senate may be enforced.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion, and I hope the friends of the bill will vote the motion down.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MANTLE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL. I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I think he would vote in favor of a motion to proceed to consideration of an appropriation bill; but not knowing certainly about it, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Chilton,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Allison,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Sherman,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. When this bill was last under consideration a portion of it was read formally, but an agreement was entered into by which we should commence with the beginning of the bill when it was again taken up and proceed to consider the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I therefore ask that that order be pursued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asks the Senator from South Dakota to repeat his request.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that we dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BATE. What is that proposition, Mr. President? I did not hear it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The proposition I make has already been agreed to, and was agreed to when the bill was heretofore laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from South Dakota state his request for the benefit of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]?

Mr. PETTIGREW. My request was that we proceed with the consideration of the bill and dispose of the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations as they are reached.

Mr. BATE. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. WILSON. May I inquire of the Senator whether that will dispense with the formal reading of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives?

Mr. PETTIGREW. We have dispensed with the formal reading of the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. FRYE. That was agreed to by unanimous consent a week ago, and all the Secretary has to do is to read the bill and take up the committee amendments as they occur.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Current and contingent expenses," on page 9, line 11, after the word "farming," to insert "within the State or Territory where such agency is located, and where practicable, competent Indians shall be given the preference;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $65 each per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $65,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed as such farmer or stockman who has not been at least two years immediately previous to such employment practically engaged in the occupation of farming within the State or Territory where such agency is located, and where practicable, competent Indians shall be given the preference.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, that is an attempt to put into this bill what seems to me a very narrow sort of policy, that the men who are employed as farmers to assist the Indians, or to instruct them, shall have lived for two years within the State or Territory in which the agency is located. It was left out of this appropriation bill in the other House purposely. The provision has been reported by the Senate committee, and it occurs to me that it would be well to cut it out here. It is not a matter of great importance, and yet it establishes what I think is a bad principle, an attempt to prescribe that Federal officers shall be chosen from a particular locality.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, under the recent proclamation of the President of the United States placing all of these offices under the civil service, will an amendment of that character have any force and effect? I do not know. I make the inquiry.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not quite sure whether a law passed now would have any effect upon an Executive order made some time ago; but I rather think it might control it.

Mr. WILSON. All the offices of minor importance in the United States are now under the control of the civil service trust, even to the cooks and the gardeners in the penitentiaries. The cook in the penitentiary at McNeils Island, in the State of Washington, I suppose would have to pass an examination in trigonometry, or something of that character. [Laughter.] The order is sweeping in its character, and takes in every office except those confirmed by the Senate of the United States. In my judgment, therefore, an amendment of this character would seem to me to have no effect whatever. We may get a farmer upon an Indian reservation from Rhode Island or from any other place. I do not think the provision amounts to anything.

Mr. CHILTON. I urge again that the provision in question be stricken out. I am no special friend or champion of the civil-service system. That, however, is not the subject here. If the civil-service law makes the provision nugatory, it will do no good, and should not be inserted. But I am inclined to think that if we put the provision in the bill it might lead to embarrassment. It is of doubtful constitutionality. I do not think Congress has a right to make limitations upon the eligibility to Federal office.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that the reason which prompted the committee to insert this amendment was this: Heretofore, especially under the administration of the last Secretary of the Interior, farmers were brought, for instance, from Mississippi and Georgia to the State of South Dakota, and from the Northern States generally, to teach the Indians how to farm. In South Dakota they do not raise the same crops which are raised in Mississippi. Our Indians could not be taught to raise peanuts and cotton. Therefore there was utter demoralization of the service as a result of this practice. Under the civil service, and these appointments are under the civil service, lists can be prepared so as to avoid that. Otherwise it will occur constantly. Men from the Southern States will take the civil-service examination and be sent to teach Indians in the Northern States the kind of farming which it is impossible for them to follow.

The amendment contains two important conditions. First, that the farmers shall be residents, experienced in farming in the locality near the agency, where they have a knowledge of the kind of farming which the Indians can follow in that climate. Second, competent Indians shall be given the preference. Indian boys have been educated at our schools in the North and are abundantly able to fill these places. Yet the pressure for patronage is so great that those boys will be shut out in every instance unless we provide by law that they shall be given the preference. It seems to me the amendment is important. It covers two important questions, and I think it ought to be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. To that part of the amendment which proposes that where practicable Indians shall be given preference, I have no sort of objection, but to hamper the appointing power by certain geographical lines and say that officers selected by the Government of the United States shall reside in a particular State is, in my judgment, a departure from the constitutional and national system which our fathers set on foot. It is true that the employment of a few men on an Indian reservation is intrinsically a small matter, but when you analyze the issue it is just that question which we have had up in the Senate from year to year in different forms.

It is true that it would be very inexpedient to select a farmer from Texas, for instance, and send him to South Dakota to instruct the Indians of that particular section. I do not believe any Indian Commissioner who has a proper conception of his duties would do so. Why? Because such a man is not best fitted for the particular duty to which he is assigned. But, sir, suppose that for a reservation on or near the border of Nebraska and South Dakota, and yet inside the line of South Dakota, the Indian Commissioner should select a farmer living right across the line in Nebraska. That might be a very proper exercise of his discretion. The amendment is an attempt to superadd to the constitutional qualifications of Federal officers a certain further qualification which we have no right to make. I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote on agreeing to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VEST and Mr. HAWLEY. What is the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will again be stated.

Mr. HAWLEY. On what page is it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Page 9.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 11, after the word "farming," it is proposed to insert:

Within the State or Territory where such agency is located, and where practicable competent Indians shall be given the preference.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask Senators, in all candor, whether they do not think that in some way or some manner a further amendment should be added to this provision, taking out of the classified service farmers upon Indian reservations? We are trying to provide here that wherever practicable Indians who are competent shall be given the preference. It is a well-known fact that if an Indian be compelled to undergo an examination which the Civil Service Commission may provide, it would be impossible and impracticable for him to pass it. He might have some knowledge of farming; he might know something relative to sowing and reaping; he might be a fairly good instructor upon farming, but he would know very little about differential calculus; he would know very little about the lost tribes of Israel, and other matters which might be embraced in the examination that the Commission would provide for him.

It seems to me that if we are to have any practicable reform of this character and to give the Indians the benefit of having instructors on farming, this class of appointments must be taken out of the classified service, and that is true in many other particulars. A very wide and very sweeping order has been made. It is depriving men who have not had the opportunity to receive an education of the chance to do a certain class of work that is provided by the Government. All teamsters, all men who drive wagons, all men who cook in penitentiaries, all guards in penitentiaries, are now under the classified service. It seems to me, with all respect to the source from which the order emanates, that it is a very great and serious mistake.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator in his expressed views of civil service. I should make them a little more emphatic than he does if I were discussing that particular topic. I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks this language would exclude these men from the operations of the civil service:

And where practicable, competent Indians shall be given the preference.

Does the Senator think that that language will procure for these men employment without reference to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WILSON. It is very doubtful.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think it would not.

Mr. WILSON. It is a doubtful question. In the first place, we talk a good deal about trusts in the Senate of the United States, but the greatest trust is the civil-service trust.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know what the Commission would do. I am a friend of a proper, legitimate, reasonable civil service, but I am not a friend of the civil service where I do not think it will operate to the best interest of the service of the United States, and I do not believe it will do so as to Indian farmers. I do not believe it will do so with cooks for penitentiaries. I do not believe it will do so with teamsters. I do not believe it will do so with blacksmiths. I do not believe it will do so with harness makers and all that class of labor. There are a great number of poor men in this country who have not had an opportunity to acquire an education who desire those places and who have learned these trades and have a thorough knowledge of them. They ought to have an opportunity to obtain them, but they can not without undergoing the examinations that the Civil Service Commission may prescribe.

Mr. CHILTON. Of course, when that question comes up——

Mr. WILSON. It is up right here, Mr. President, upon this amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out line 12 on page 9. That will leave that part of the amendment which provides that a preference shall be given to Indian farmers and strikes out that part of it which requires that the farmers shall be appointed from the State or Territory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out, on page 9, line 12, as follows:

Within the State or Territory where such agency is located.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who is not present. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MANTLE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is not present.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I am advised that if present he would vote "nay." Therefore I withhold my vote, for I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MANTLE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], as I have stated. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. I have the consent of the Senator from New Jersey to transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia to the Senator from Idaho, so that I may vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. VILAS. I ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] if he desires to transfer pairs, so that he and I can vote on this question?

Mr. MCBRIDE. I should be very glad to transfer pairs.

Mr. VILAS. Then let the Senator's colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] stand paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator can vote, and I will. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 32; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Chippewas of Minnesota, reimbursable," on page 14, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and twenty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "so much thereof as may be necessary for the erection and completion of suitable buildings for an industrial boarding school on the White Earth Reservation, Minn., to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to carry out an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, namely, the purchase of material and employment of labor for the erection of houses for Indians; for the purchase of agricultural implements, stock, and seeds, breaking and fencing land; for payment of expenses of delegations of Chippewa Indians to visit the White Earth Reservation; for the erection and maintenance of day and industrial schools; for subsistence and for pay of employees; for pay of commissioners and their expenses; and for removal of Indians and for their allotments, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of sale of their lands, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 23, to insert:

For the erection and completion of suitable buildings for an industrial boarding school on the White Earth Reservation, Minn., $50,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all lands acquired and sold by the United States under the "Act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, shall be subject to the right of the United States to construct and maintain dams for the purpose of creating reservoirs in aid of navigation, and no claim or right of compensation shall accrue from the overflowing of said lands on account of the construction and maintenance of such dams or reservoirs. And the Secretary of War shall furnish the Commissioner of the General Land Office a list of such lands, with the particular tracts appropriately described, and in the disposal of each and every one of said tracts, whether by sale, by allotment in severalty to individual Indians, or otherwise, under said act, the provisions of this paragraph shall enter into and form a part of the contract of purchase or transfer of title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Kickapoos in Kansas," on page 21, line 21, after the word "cents," to strike out:

Merchants and others doing business with and having accounts against Indians to whom allotment of lands has been made in any reservation in the State of Kansas shall not be prohibited from going upon the reservation, or to any agency in said State, for the purpose of collecting or securing, in an orderly manner, such debts; but any Indian agent shall have power to remove any person from the reservation who is there for the purpose of gambling or inciting insubordination among the Indians.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why it is proposed to strike out the lines which provide that merchants and others doing business with and having accounts against Indians, etc., may have the privilege of going upon the reservation in an orderly manner to collect their debts? It seems to me that if these Indians are in debt, and are dishonest, it is very proper that those who have trusted them should at least have the privilege of going upon the reservations to try to collect their honest bills.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The committee recommends striking out the provision of the House for the reason that we have upon the agencies licensed traders who are required to give bond to conform to certain rules of the Department. The Department has a right under those rules to fix the prices at which the traders shall sell goods. So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of making trade absolutely free upon the agencies, allowing anyone who will conform to the rules of the Department and give a bond to go there and trade. But if we allow people from the outside, without any restriction or restraint upon them whatever, to come in and collect when the money is paid to the Indians, they take advantage of the Indians, and when the check is delivered they stand in close proximity to the officer of the Government and get possession of it, giving the Indian credit. The result is that they make from 50 to 300 per cent profit on the goods they sell to the Indians on time, and are able to make absolutely certain of their pay. They charge a profit which more than pays them for all the risk they take as to whether the Indian will come and pay them when he gets his money, and then if they are permitted to go upon the reservation they secure their pay at once. The checks are taken from the Indians in many instances without their consent, or by forced consent. In some instances they are taken from Indians who can not speak the English language, and they do not know what the purpose or object is. Therefore the committee thought it wise to hedge about these payments, so as to protect the Indians as far as possible in this connection.

Another remedy might be applied. We might provide that no one should trade upon an agency at all. Perhaps that would be a good plan, and then allow no one to go there to collect, and if the traders choose to trust the Indians let them take their chances as to whether or not they get their pay. I think perhaps that would eradicate many of the evils which exist in connection with trading with the Indians. Certain it is that without this provision a swarm of collectors who have sold the Indians all sorts and kinds of articles by misrepresentation of every character will appear at every payment and gather up every dollar that is coming to the Indians. Then until the next payment the Indians must again go into debt, paying enormous prices for things they do not need. But if the traders can not go upon the agency to collect, they will be very careful about giving credit, they will be very careful about the things they sell, and thus the Indians will be protected. Therefore I believe it is important that this provision should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that the Senator from South Dakota (who has dealings with the Indian tribes more or less, and I am a representative of a State that knows very little about this Indian question, except theoretically) understands this question much better than I. Nevertheless, I have had some very trivial dealings with Indians, and I have yet to recall the circumstance where I did not get the worst of it. I do not think there is any very great danger of these Indians being robbed if they are compelled in an orderly and proper way to pay their debts. If they go away from their reservations and secure goods upon a promise of payment, and then the merchant who has given them those goods is not permitted, either in person or by an agent, to go upon the reservation to make demand that they shall pay what they honestly owe, it seems to me we are legislating against the white people for the benefit of the Indians to a much greater extent than we ought to do in an Indian appropriation bill.

I confess, as I said in the beginning, I know comparatively little about this matter. It simply strikes me as being a business transaction that is one sided and unfair. I think the House was wise in putting in the language which the Senator from South Dakota desires to have stricken from the bill. I shall vote against the amendment, but I presume it will pass, and I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate a single moment further in the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Pawnees," on page 24, line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Pawnee tribe of Indians in cash, per capita, the sum of $50,000 out of their trust-land money on deposit in the United States Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that amendment is passed upon, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. Here is an amendment providing that the Pawnee tribe of Indians shall be paid in cash the sum of $50,000 per capita out of their trust-land money on deposit in the United States Treasury. I confess that it is somewhat of a surprise to me in my ignorance to know that we have such a class of aristocrats and bondholders in this country as the Pawnee tribe of Indians seem to be, that they can draw out their trust-land money $50,000 a head. I do not object to it, because I take it for granted that the money is there and that it belongs to them; but what I want to ask is, What conditions were imposed when this money was placed on deposit in the United States Treasury? Probably the Senator from South Dakota can in a very few words enlighten my mind on that point. The money was put there for some good purpose; it is there on deposit, I take it, to the credit of this tribe of Indians; but I assume there are some conditions attaching to it, some guards, some provisions that enable it to be held there for some good purpose. I would like to know what those conditions are and why we should now legislate to let $50,000 per capita of that money loose to these Indians, who, the Senator says, are capable of doing business? It is a query in my mind just what will become of this vast amount of money when these untutored savages get hold of it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator has mixed up a speech with his question. I will try and weed the question out of the speech and answer it. These Indians sold their surplus lands to the Government several years ago and took allotments in severalty. I believe under the so-called Dawes Act of 1887 they received a certain sum of money for the land which they sold, which was placed in the Treasury of the United States, bearing interest at 5 per cent. The sum is not large; it is about $450,000. Therefore the interest money was not sufficient to make the necessary improvements in order that they might proceed to cultivate their allotments.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from New Hampshire evidently supposes, from his remarks, that the sum of $50,000 is to be paid to each Indian.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say, as to the form of the amendment, if that is what troubles the Senator from New Hampshire, it was drawn by the Interior Department in the exact form in which it is placed in the bill; that it is hardly capable of the construction which the Senator gives it; and that the payment is recommended by the Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that the form of the amendment does not trouble me, because I honestly supposed, after reading the amendment twice, that it meant precisely what I said, that $50,000 per capita was to be distributed to these Indians. Of course, if the whole amount is $50,000, I have nothing further to say on that point.

Mr. GRAY. There is no question, perhaps, about what was intended, but the point is what is stated. It is stated in this amendment that the Government is not to distribute, but to pay to the Pawnee Indians in cash per capita $50,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. To be distributed per capita?

Mr. GRAY. The words "to be distributed" would relieve the ambiguity, of course.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to that amendment to the amendment, although I do not think there is any danger that the Pawnees will get $50,000 apiece as it now stands.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator is right. I do not believe they would get $50,000 apiece. They will do very well if they get $5 apiece.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I have an objection to the pending amendment of a more serious character than that suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. As I understand it, this is a part of the trust fund of these Indians which is deposited in the Treasury and upon which they collect an interest of about $22,500 a year. The amount of the principal is not quite so great as was stated by the Senator from South Dakota. As I recollect it, the amount of the fund they have on hand is about $425,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is about the amount.

Mr. CHILTON. About four hundred and twenty-five thousand. These Indians also get a permanent annuity of $30,000, which is provided for in the appropriation bill. They also get other appropriations in this bill which swell the amount to between $47,000 and $50,000, independently of the item now under discussion and the annual interest. Now, this annual interest on the trust fund is, as stated, about $22,500. Thus the Pawnees will draw about $70,000, even if the sum now debated is withheld.

How many of these Indians are there? I understand there are only about 140 families. They are located in some of the best country of Oklahoma. Their land is south of the Canadian River. It adjoins that of the Osages. I for one do not think that this trust fund ought to be invaded from year to year, and in that way all the permanent investment of this remnant of an Indian tribe wasted, and the Indians left to be a charge upon the Treasury of the United States.

Some of these Indians—for example, the Fort Hall Indians—that are provided for in this appropriation bill are, I understand, now on the bounty of the United States Government. If we adopt the method proposed and dwindle away the permanent trust fund of these Pawnee Indians, in a few years the Government of the United States will have to support them as paupers. Think of it; you divide about $70,000, without counting the sum mentioned in the amendment, among, say, 140 families. Now, if you make an additional appropriation, which runs the total amount up to about $120,000, to be distributed to them, it seems to me that you have made an unwise appropriation.

The Senator from South Dakota remarks that that is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. I understand from my reading of the papers connected with this matter that it is recommended perhaps by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but the Secretary of the Interior simply refers it to Congress for its disposition. I do not think that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior can be considered as an indorsement of this particular appropriation. On the other hand, he states in his letter, as I remember it, that he endeavored to persuade these Indians to consent to take only $26,000, or enough to reduce their trust fund to $400,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say for the information of the Senator from Texas that the Secretary recommended $50,000, and that he drew the amendment so far as it appears in the bill and sent it down.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator let the Secretary's recommendation be read to the Senate?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have it not here.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator says it is not here. I should like to have the Senator from South Dakota procure it and read it during the consideration of this question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let us pass over the item, and I will send and get the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to this subject.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I am drawing a distinction between the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and that of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will have them both here.

Mr. CHILTON. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

POTTAWATOMIES.

For permanent annuity, in silver, per fourth article of treaty of August 3, 1795, $357.80.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that this appropriation is payable in silver. I should like to ask him why it is made specifically payable in silver?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Because of the treaty.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a treaty provision.

Mr. ALLEN. I know the position of the Senator from South Dakota, but I should like to have his associates explain to the Senate why we are to pay these benighted children of nature any money that is said to be worth only 50 cents on the dollar? I have noticed this same provision elsewhere; it runs in substance through the bill. I insist that the members of the Appropriations Committee, who claim to be sound-money men, and who claim to have a monopoly of all the wisdom upon the science of finance, shall not be guilty of the crime, if I may be permitted to call it a crime, of imposing 50-cent dollars upon these Indians. I raise the question upon this particular portion of the bill because all through the bill I find appropriations to Indians payable specifically in silver.

Mr. President, you are somewhat familiar with this question yourself from long contact in the Senate. The country is somewhat familiar with it. If a silver dollar is a dishonest dollar for a white man, it is a dishonest dollar for a red man, and the poorer and more defenseless the individual to whom it is to be paid, the less excuse there is for imposing it upon him.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator read the clause?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New York asks me to read the clause, which I will do. It is found on page 24——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that we proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. NELSON. The bankruptcy bill is to be laid aside without any prejudice, and is to retain its place?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the effect of the request of the Senator from South Dakota. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New York asks me to read the provision upon which I have been commenting. It is found on page 24 of the bill, and is as follows:

For permanent annuity, in silver, per fourth article of treaty of August 3, 1795, $357.80.

And then it goes on:

For permanent annuity, in silver, per third article of treaty of September 30, 1809, $178.90.

There are several other provisions for the payment of money, all specifically payable in silver.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator from Nebraska read the provision beginning on line 22? That will more nearly fit his case than any other on the page, I think.

Mr. ALLEN. Beginning in line 22, that provision reads:

For permanent annuity, in money, per second article of treaty of September 30, 1828, $715.60.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose that would be entirely satisfactory to the Senator. There is no objection——

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that it would be entirely satisfactory to me unless the word "sound" were inserted before the word "money."

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator propose to make that amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. No; I do not move that amendment, because I am not charged with any responsibility whatever for any of these appropriation bills.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Nebraska is not reading a lecture to his friend from South Dakota upon the money question?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no, Mr. President; the honorable Senator who is in charge of the bill is in enforced service. I do not think——

Mr. WILSON. Oh, no; I beg the Senator's pardon. He can retire from it at any moment. There would be plenty very glad to take his place. I should be very glad to take it myself. There will be no force about it, either.

Mr. ALLEN. In so far as he is advocating or compelled to advocate in behalf of the committee the payment of these Indians in silver money——

Mr. WILSON. I should like to hear the Senator from Nebraska also upon the provisions of the treaty which provide that this money shall be paid just as is provided for in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator will have to speak louder, or I shall not be able to hear him.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if it is not a fact that the treaty made with the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians provided that this money should be paid in silver?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, I think it did.

Mr. WILSON. Then why violate the treaty?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to violate the treaty, and I do not want the committee to violate it.

Mr. WILSON. They are not doing so.

Mr. ALLEN. But at the time when these treaties were made silver was sound money, according to the general understanding, in this country.

Mr. WILSON. We were on a silver basis, were we not?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; we have never been on a silver basis. Silver was sound money at that time. But, Mr. President, we have progressed according to the argument of some, and we have reached a period in financial evolution where silver has ceased to be sound money, according to the view of many Senators here, and has become simply a cheap metal, a mere commodity. I want to protest against the Committee on Appropriations imposing upon these poor defenseless Indians what the honorable senior Senator from Ohio in his long experience in public life has recently denounced as a mere cheap metal. I can understand the philosophy of imposing it upon a great strong man or a strong nation capable of caring for themselves, but I can not understand that peculiarity which seemingly runs through human nature that induces the strong and the intelligent to impose upon the weak and the ignorant. I wish there were members of the Appropriations Committee here other than the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WILSON. There is one right beside the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I am aware of that, but the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is a silver man, too. Every gold monometallist upon the committee has deserted the Chamber at this time. Every gold monometallist has gone. I see the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] present, but he is a silver man, too. I hope the honorable Senator, the senior Senator from Ohio, the champion par excellence of sound money in this country, will give the Senate the benefit of his judgment in regard to paying these poor, benighted Indians in 50-cent dollars.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand that the Senator from Nebraska is objecting to this item in the bill?

Mr. ALLEN. I am seeking information upon the subject. Perhaps the Senator from Connecticut can give it. The Senator from Connecticut is a sound-money man. Will the Senator from Connecticut vote to pay these Indians in 50-cent dollars?

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator asks me, I am very happy to say that up to this time the silver dollars of this country are just as good as gold dollars. When we pay the Indians a silver dollar, we pay them something of equal value to a gold dollar.

Mr. STEWART. Why do we not pay the bondholder the same money?

Mr. PLATT. What I want, as a sound-money man, is that we may keep these silver dollars just as good as gold dollars.

Mr. STEWART. If they are just as good as gold dollars, why do we issue bonds to get gold?

Mr. VILAS. I understand that is by reason of the crime of 1873.

Mr. STEWART. No; it is in consequence of the conduct of the criminals who have since joined the band.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will give me his attention and not retire to the cloakroom after having made that remark. The Senator from Connecticut and his party told the country last fall that these dollars were worth only 50 cents on the dollar.

Mr. PLATT. I beg pardon of the Senator. I do not know what my party told the country, but I always insisted upon it on the stump that our silver dollars had been kept just as good as the gold dollars; that as long as we could do that I was quite willing to use silver dollars; but that I feared the Senator's party was going into a scheme for the coinage of silver which would reduce the value of the silver dollar to about 50 cents.

Mr. ALLEN. I am utterly astounded, and I have been astounded at times before in my life——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. Is the pending measure the Indian appropriation bill, or is it a free-coinage bill?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Minnesota is himself out of order.

Mr. WILSON. Every measure is a free-coinage bill as far as the Senator from Nebraska is concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; and it would be better for the constituents of the Senator from Washington if every measure was a free-coinage bill with him.

Mr. WILSON. I will take care of the constituents of the Senator from Washington probably as well as the Senator from Nebraska will take care of his constituents.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, doubtless.

Mr. WILSON. I shall try to do so, at any rate. I may fail.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator interjected himself into the discussion. He must take what he gets.

Mr. WILSON. I did it only once. I will at all times observe all the proprieties the Senator from Nebraska observes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. The Chair calls the attention of Senators to the rule which provides that when a Senator desires to interrupt a Senator who has the floor it is the duty of that Senator to rise and address the Chair. It is only through the medium of the Chair that a Senator upon the floor can be interrupted.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am utterly surprised to hear the honorable Senator from Connecticut now deny any responsibility for the advocacy of his party last fall. Every newspaper was full of it. Every magazine was full of it. Every member of his party from the hustings spoke of the dishonesty of this country in undertaking to foist silver dollars upon the people. They were denounced as 50-cent dollars. Every epithet that human ingenuity could coin and express was used against them. We were told that the national honor was at stake, and that every man who advocated the cause of free coinage was an anarchist, a socialist, an ignoramus, if not an absolute criminal—an idiot, as my friend from Texas suggests to me. Yet at the very first opportunity the Republican party get to put a few hundred thousand of these worthless dollars upon some poor, ignorant, blanket Indians, who know nothing whatever about the science of finance (because the Republican party are in charge here, and they are in charge of the Committee on Appropriations), that moment we are to foist these worthless dollars upon those poor Indians. I do not suppose it is possible for me to check it. I do not think I possess influence enough over the committee to check an outrage of this kind. But the great Populist party, that numbers six million and a half voters in this country to-day, would not be guilty of a moral crime so great against any tribe of Indians as is sought to be perpetrated in this measure.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska has seen proper to interject into the debate on the Indian appropriation bill a little of the last political campaign. As I interrupted him, I desire to say a single word now.

There was something else in the last campaign, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, besides the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. While, as far as I was personally concerned, upon the stump I had no epithets, for I will say nothing unkind or ungenerous to those who may be in political opposition to me, the word "anarchist" was used. Why was it used, Mr. President? How did that word get into the political campaign? It was not over free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1; but I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that in the platform adopted at Chicago there was placed one plank which differed only in degree from the utterance of Jefferson Davis in 1860. Mr. Davis said, "I will take my State out of the Union." Mr. Altgeld said, in the city of Chicago in that platform, "The Union shall not come into my State." Around that revolved some of the issues of the last campaign. That called forth epithets. The question was not alone the free coinage of silver; it was whether law and order should be maintained in this country as enunciated by the President that you have inducted into power. Those are some of the reasons as to that portion of the case, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I regret very much that my learned and very amiable friend from Washington [Mr. WILSON] should inject into this discussion an issue entirely foreign to the true issue. I had said nothing about and I am not the defender of the Chicago platform; I am not responsible for it; but as to the remarks of the Senator from Washington concerning one of the issues which I suppose he intends to refer to in respect to the denunciation of the Supreme Court, while that did not occur in the Populist platform, and does not occur there, I fully and heartily approve of the Chicago platform upon that subject. If you will take the Republican platform of 1860, upon which Mr. Lincoln was elected, there never was a more vehement and open and bitter denunciation of the Supreme Court of the United States in all the history of this country than will be found right there. The Dred Scott decision is denounced; the court that rendered it is denounced, and, in my judgment, properly. I never expect to see the time during my life when, if I believe a public officer ought to be denounced, I shall be restrained from denouncing him anywhere. We arraign the President of the United States. He is arraigned here every day. He is a public servant; his acts as a public servant are open to criticism; they are open to the construction of those whose duty it may be to criticise them. Congress is arraigned; every branch of this Government is subject to arraignment. The first argument with every tyrant upon the face of the earth has been immunity from criticism. There never was a tyrant from the days of Nero down, and in fact preceding the age in which he lived, with whom the first step was not what was called official discretion, moving away from the true tenets and foundation of the government at will, and the next step was to claim immunity from criticism.

What is there about the Supreme Court of the United States which is different from any other organization? I suppose they are men of flesh and blood like other men and with frailties like other men. I do not suppose when a man goes upon the Supreme Bench of the United States that he becomes a paragon, or puts upon himself wings, or is not subject to just and reasonable criticism. All through the history of this country the Supreme Court has been criticised. Jefferson said—and he carried out his threat—that he would reorganize the Supreme Court in consequence of a decision made by it. Jackson did the same thing; and did reorganize that court. The Republican party in 1860 declared against the Dred Scott decision, which was, in my judgment, a perversion of the law; and that declaration found expression in its platform. The people repudiated Roger B. Taney and his associates and the decision made by them.

Two years ago the Supreme Court of the United States deliberately overturned five decisions upon the subject of the income tax. In 1789 they entered a judgment in the Hylton Case, holding an income tax to be constitutional. Five times after that, down to 1882, in the Springer Case, they held the same doctrine; but in 1895, after holding the act of 1894 constitutional in part, they had a rehearing—always a dangerous thing to litigants—and one judge, who had held with the majority but a month or two preceding that holding that act was constitutional in part, subsequently changed front, and held it unconstitutional throughout. Does any man say that that judge is not subject to arraignment? I say Mr. Justice Shiras owes it to the world to explain why he changed front so suddenly upon that subject. I do not say that his motives were not of the best. Upon that I say nothing, for I know nothing; but, Mr. President, the change was so radical and so extreme that he will go into history under a cloud unless he explains to the world the motives which actuated him in changing his position upon the income tax.

So it is not out of place for me to criticise the Supreme Court, and it was not out of place for the Chicago platform to arraign the Supreme Court as it did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Quapaws," on page 26, line 6, after the word "education," to insert "during the pleasure of the President;" and in line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

That the allottees of land within the limits of the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., are hereby authorized to lease their lands, or any part thereof, for a term not exceeding three years, for farming or grazing purposes, or ten years for mining or business purposes. And said allottees and their lessees and tenants shall have the right to employ such assistants, laborers, and help from time to time as they may deem necessary: Provided, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age, disability, or inability any such allottee can not improve or manage his allotment properly and with benefit to himself, the same may be leased in the discretion of the Secretary upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by him. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this are hereby repealed.

So as to make the clause read:

For education, during the pleasure of the President, per third article of treaty of May 13, 1833, $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop, per same article and treaty, $500; in all, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," on page 32, line 14, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary, in his discretion, is authorized to pay said amount per head in money: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior hereafter to cause the actual delivery of the woolen clothing herein contemplated and contemplated in prior acts of Congress and treaties to the Sioux and Ponca Indians of Nebraska and North and South Dakota by the 1st day of November of the fiscal year for which such appropriations shall be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount $3,000 may be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for completing the artesian well at the Rosebud Indian Agency in South Dakota;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement, ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $900,000, of which amount $3,000 may be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for completing the artesian well at the Rosebud Indian Agency in South Dakota: Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation; and in this service Indians shall have the preference in employment: And provided further, That the number of rations issued shall not exceed the number of Indians on each reservation, and any excess in the number of rations issued shall be disallowed in the settlement of the agent's account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians," on page 34, line 22, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians are hereby authorized to lease their lands, or any part thereof, for a term not exceeding three years for farming or grazing purposes, and at the expiration of such lease, the same may be renewed or the lands leased to any other person upon said renewal or new lease being approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if there is any reason for holding the renewals of these leases subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, which would not apply to the original leases?

Mr. CHILTON. The bill seems to provide that the renewed leases may be made for a longer time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not so understand it. It reads:

And, at the expiration of such lease, the same may be renewed or the lands leased to any other person upon said renewal or new lease being approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CHILTON. The second lease seems to assume that the Indian may lease his land for a longer time than three years.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What was the question of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I called attention to the amendment of the committee on page 34, where there is a provision that the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians may be allowed to lease their lands; and after that the amendment says:

And, at the expiration of such lease, the same may be renewed or the lands leased to any other person upon said renewal or new lease being approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

I ask what reason there could be for requiring the approval of the Secretary of the Interior to the renewal of a lease that would not apply to the lease in the first instance?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians have grazing and agricultural lands, but these are lands that are unimproved. One of the Indians appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and asked that this provision be made, for the reason that they found it impossible to lease these raw and unimproved lands and comply with the rules of the Department in relation thereto. For instance, the Department requires that a man shall give bond and that certain forms shall be pursued; that he shall get two bondsmen if he wishes to lease a piece of this Indian land; and they found it impossible to lease their unimproved lands and comply with these conditions. An Indian who had children would have for his allotment 160 acres of land and his children an allotment of 160 acres—more than he wants to cultivate, and he could secure compensation from some one who wants to cut hay or break up part of the land and put it under cultivation; but the rental is very small. If he could make the lease himself, we were satisfied that he could make something out of it and begin to improve the land. After the improvement is made, and the three years have elapsed, the land is under cultivation and becomes of value to lease. Then we hedge it about by conditions and provisions prescribed by the Department by requiring that the lease shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not understand why an Indian should be prohibited from making an improvident renewal of a lease while he may be allowed to make the lease in the first place without any sort of limitation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As I said, these are absolutely raw lands, unimproved in any way. We were told that the Indians leased them for $25 a quarter section, perhaps, when improvements would be made of value, and so we thought the Department could try the experiment for three years as to these agricultural lands, and if it did not work, we would abolish the system and abolish the practice; but the Indian who appeared before the committee is a full-blooded Sioux Indian, a graduate of Amherst College, a man of intelligence and ability, and he convinced the Committee on Appropriations that this is a wise and proper thing to do in the interest of those people. That is the reason why the committee reported to insert the provision in the bill. It seems to me it is reasonable and proper. The Indians had tried to lease these lands, but the people would not get bondsmen. It is difficult in that country to get people who can qualify, because the lands are occupied by homesteaders who have no fee title; they would not comply with the requirements of the Department, and therefore the lands were not leased at all; they get no revenue from them, and the lands are not improved. We thought it a matter of wisdom to allow the Indians to have three years without complying with the rules laid down by the Department, and after value had been given to the lands by improvements the leases should be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand the Senator to say that this provision was put in the bill at the recommendation of an Indian. I should like to ask the Senator what the Department says about it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Department was not called upon for an opinion. I am very familiar with these lands. This agency is located in my State. The Indian to whom I refer appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, and I think the sentiment of the committee was unanimous, and that every member of the committee agreed that the reason he gave was a good one and the purpose he wished to accomplish was a proper one.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I confess that the old story of the camel who got his nose in the meal first and the remainder of the camels coming afterwards, occurs to me as applicable to a case of this kind. Here is a proposition to allow these people, without any sort of supervision or care, to make leases of their lands, in the first place, to run for three years after persons get in possession of them. Then there is a provision that the renewal may be made on the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Meantime, I presume, if the Secretary of the Interior does not approve the renewed lease, the occupant of the land will remain in possession of it indefinitely. It seems to me that would be the result of it. I think the approval of the Secretary of the Interior ought to apply to the leases as well as the renewals, and I move to amend the amendment in that way.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope that motion will not prevail. These lands are located where anyone can go to-day and take a homestead. All around these lands are lands which can be entered under the homestead law of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not approve of it, but I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate any further with objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Secretary of the Interior approves a lease, improvements can be made upon the land, and the result will be, if the leases are not made, that no improvements will be made and the Indians will derive no benefit from them,

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This amendment does not require any bond, I understand, and I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I was out of the Chamber for a moment when another provision was considered, and I now wish to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota in charge of the bill to the amendment reported by the committee, on page 26, as to the Quapaw Reservation, and ask what was done with that amendment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I intended to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to ask the Senator from South Dakota to make a change in that amendment now. The Senator is entirely right about the Wahpeton and Sisseton Indians. They are entirely competent to care for themselves as allottees, and the same thing is true with reference to the Quapaw Indians. The same principle which governs the rights of the Sissetons and Wahpetons to lease their lands applies with equal force to the Quapaws. There is no reason why the allottees on the Quapaw lands should not have the same right to lease their lands which the Sissetons and the Wahpetons have. The only difference between these lands is that the lands of the Sissetons and Wahpetons are some of the finest agricultural lands in Minnesota, and therefore in the United States, while much of the land of the Quapaws is of a mineral character. This bill, however, as it came from the House of Representatives, had ample safeguards for all these Indians and for all their rights.

The history of the Quapaw Indians is very brief, so far as their civilization is concerned. I have it here in a letter. These Indians were formerly known as the Peoria and Miami tribes, and lived for years in Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois in close contact with the civilization of those States. They finally moved to Kansas, and, after a time, to the present reservation in the Indian Territory. A great majority of them are of mixed blood, many of them almost white men. The same high state of civilization exists among those Indians which exists among the Sissetons and Wahpetons of Minnesota. They were made allottees of their lands years ago, and their lands are permitted to lie idle and bring them no revenue whatever, whereas, if the bill as it came from the House, as it originally stood, were permitted by the Senate to stand, they would have some benefit from their lands in the way of rentals. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to agree to make the Quapaws, the Sissetons, and the Wahpetons stand upon an exact equality.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the committee struck out the provision with regard to the Quapaws, for the reason that it was exceedingly broad; it was unlimited in its scope, and provided for a lease for ten years—not for three years, but for ten. It also provided:

That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age, disability, or inability—any such allottee can not improve or manage his allotment properly and with benefit to himself, the same may be leased in the discretion of the Secretary upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by him. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this are hereby repealed.

We thought that the word "inability" should be stricken out, and that the provision should otherwise be hedged about with great care. We therefore determined, at least, to strike it out, and see if an understanding could not be secured in conference, which would more carefully guard the interests of those people. Of course, I know that many of the Quapaw Indians are as abundantly able to take care of themselves and manage their own affairs as are the other white people of the United States. The simple fact is that it is a rare thing to see an Indian who is not a white man among the Five Civilized Tribes or among the Miamis and Quapaws, who live in the northeastern corner of the Indian Territory. Those who come here have but little Indian blood in their veins, and are capable of managing their affairs, but there are a large number of Indians who are not capable of doing so; there are still Indians among those people, and it is their interests which we wish to guard and protect.

I am not opposed, and I think the committee is not opposed, to a provision which shall allow these Indians to lease, develop, and improve those lands, and explore the minerals under proper restrictions, but I think that provision can be made in conference to protect thoroughly the interests of the people who have secured leases, and also the interests of the Indians.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am assured by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations that this amendment was simply to enable the committee to take the matter into conference and adjust it properly there; that there is no real hostility to permitting the Indians getting benefit out of their lands. With that view, I shall withdraw my suggestion, and let the amendment go.

Mr. TELLER. We hope in conference to make some changes in the form of the provision. We had no idea of preventing these Indians from getting proper revenue, but we thought the language employed was not exactly what it ought to be. Of course, if we did not make some amendment to it, we should have no control of it in conference. The committee were not hostile to the proposition laid down in that provision.

Mr. ALLEN. Just a word in explanation of my attitude toward this amendment. I could not see why the Sissetons and Wahpetons should be permitted to lease their land and the Quapaws be deprived of the like privilege; but the Senator from Colorado assuring me that the committee do not intend to do so, I withdraw my suggestion.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Spokanes," on page 35, line 10, before the word "machines," to strike out "thrashing" and insert "threshing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 3, to insert:

SOUTHERN UTES IN COLORADO.

For the erection of suitable agency buildings at Navajo Springs, Montezuma County, Colo., for the use of such Southern Ute Indians as have not elected to take allotments of land in severalty, $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 9, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to confer with the owners of the Montezuma Valley Canal, in the county of Montezuma and State of Colorado, or any other parties, for the purpose of securing by the Government water rights, or for the supply of so much water, or both, as he may deem necessary for the irrigation of that part of the Montezuma Valley lying within the boundaries of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in said State, and for the domestic use of the Indians thereon; and he shall report to Congress at its next regular session the amount of water necessary to be secured for said purpose and the cost of the same, and such recommendations as he shall deem proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous supports," on page 41, line 2, before the word "Territory," to strike out "Indian" and insert "Oklahoma;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 20, to insert:

For purchase of seed and grain and for subsistence for the Ponca Indians in Nebraska, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Support of schools," on page 45, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools, apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1898, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 40 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895: Provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for.

So as to make the clause read:

SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including pay of architect and draftsman, to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,200,000, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska: Provided, etc.

Mr. LODGE. This amendment seems to me of the very greatest importance and to reverse entirely the policy agreed upon last year. I desire to discuss it, and I think it is a matter of such importance that there ought to be a quorum of the Senate present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Daniel,	Mitchell, Wis.	Shoup,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Smith,
Bate,	Frye,	Murphy,	Teller,
Blanchard,	Gallinger,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Brown,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Turpie,
Burrows,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Call,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Lindsay,	Platt,	Wetmore,
Cannon,	Lodge,	Proctor,	White,
Chandler,	McBride,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Chilton,	McMillan,	Roach,
Cockrell,	Mantle,	Sherman,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment? I desire to ask a question of the Senator from South Dakota about this matter before he opens the general question. In the first line of the proposed amendment there is a provision in these words:

Of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska.

I should like to ask how $5,000 could be of any possible use in the education of Indians in Alaska, and what use is proposed to be made of this money?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me, I think I can explain it. We make an appropriation of about $30,000 a year for education in Alaska, which includes both Indians and whites. About three years ago (I think this will be the third appropriation act) we put on this provision that $5,000 might be used in Alaska. It is used in connection with the $30,000 that had been appropriated for a number of years. The sum ought to have been very much larger. There is a great necessity for an increase of appropriations for the purpose of schools in Alaska, but it has been found difficult to increase the amount, and the friends of the schools for the Indians have been compelled to be content with this small sum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator if that is the entire amount that the Indians will get for education?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator did not listen to me, I think. I said that of the $30,000 some portion of it is used for the education of Indians. I do not know what particular portion is so used; but it is mainly for the Indians. It is practically an Indian appropriation. It comes in separately from this bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator explain why, if this is intended to increase the appropriation for Indian education in Alaska, it was not included in the same provision with the other, making it $35,000 instead of $30,000?

Mr. TELLER. It came in this way, I suppose: Some three or four years ago I moved in committee that we take from this sum $10,000—that is my recollection—or $15,000, and the committee thought they could not afford to do that, and we compromised on $5,000. It does not make any difference whether it comes with the other or not. I do not think the $30,000 of which the Senator speaks is in this bill, but in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought the appropriation for schools in Alaska was $50,000 instead of $30,000.

Mr. TELLER. It was $50,000 for some years. In a spirit of economy—if it were proper, I should say parsimony—the other House struck it down to $30,000. In addition to this, there ought to be an appropriation of at least $35,000 made for the schools in Alaska.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I understand from the Senator that this sum is really intended to be an additional appropriation for schools in Alaska, and it has been so used heretofore?

Mr. TELLER. It has been so used. It makes the appropriation for Alaska which comes in this bill and another bill $35,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. The same provision was in the last bill?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; and I believe in the bill before.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the pending amendment entirely undoes the work of last year in regard to this matter. It will be remembered that there was a protracted discussion over the question of sectarian schools. The bill was taken back into conference no less than six times. The House stood very strongly for what it desired; there were many votes taken in the Senate on this question, and the minority, which favored the House view, was a large one. At last, to save the bill, a compromise was reached. That compromise appears in the law of last year, and it provided that if the appropriation for sectarian schools, or a portion of it, should be continued for one year, then further appropriations for sectarian schools should cease. That was the provision of the act. The law of last year also declared:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

Then followed the proviso, including the compromise which I have mentioned, in which it was arranged that this general declaration should go into the bill provided that the appropriations were to be continued for one year longer to certain sectarian schools. There never was a plainer understanding in the world.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Between whom?

Mr. LODGE. Between the Houses.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was expressed in the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. When it came up on the last conference report I took occasion to say:

I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the whole report which cover these three amendments, because * * * the report substantially agrees to the Senate amendments to the House proposition in regard to sectarian schools. It reduces the time provided in the original Senate amendment from two years to one, but it practically leaves the whole matter open to be fought over again in the next Congress.

I did not think it would be fought over again in the present Congress, but I thought it might be brought up again in some future Congress.

Now, I ask the attention of the Senate to the reply of those Senators who were sustaining the report. The Senator in charge of the bill then, as now, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], said:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment in regard to schools, with an amendment to it which makes the time for finally disposing of the question of sectarian contract schools July 1, 1897, instead of July 1, 1898, as provided in the Senate amendment.

If the English language is capable of a plainer statement than that, I should like to see it.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] then said, in answer to the objection which I made that the matter would be reopened:

We leave in the bill the declaration as to the policy of the Government to take charge of these schools in the future, so that it practically closes up the sectarian schools or the non-Government school after the 1st of July, 1897. I do not think it leaves it open for further controversy.

That is the language of the Senator from Colorado. On those statements the report was agreed to. The statement showing how the House looked upon this thing was made by the gentleman from New York in charge of the bill, in which he said that it had been discussed in the House and that a compromise had been arrived at. He ended by saying:

The declaration in reference to the discontinuance of schools after the end of the next fiscal year—is the same as that in the report which was submitted last Saturday except a change in phraseology.

No, Mr. President; there was no misunderstanding with respect to the arrangement as finally made. The House had no misunderstanding when they passed the present bill. They sent this bill to us in exactly the form they were entitled to send it; that is, acting on the statements made here, made in conference, made in both Houses, that these sectarian appropriations were to end on the 1st of July, 1897. Now, here in the Senate back comes last year's amendment continuing these sectarian schools which we have solemnly declared by act of Congress it is the policy of the Government to end. Back comes this amendment creating them again, giving them 40 per cent of what they had, not last year, but in 1895, so that there is a reduction of only 10 per cent in the amount given to sectarian schools. This is a revival, a reopening, of the whole question which I, in common, I think, with every other Senator and every Member of the House last year, believed had been entirely settled. It is brought here in absolute disregard of the declaration of the last act of Congress. It is brought here in absolute disregard of the statement that was then made. It was understood then perfectly that if this appropriation was continued for a year longer, this general policy would be accepted on all hands, and this disagreeable question would be finally removed from politics and from the discussion which it causes every year.

Now it is here again; here without the general statement of the bill last year; here without any reference to the House provision in the bill. The House has lived up to its agreement. It has proposed nothing new. It has left the thing just where it was left before. The great argument used last year was that if this sudden cutting off of the schools occurred it would be a terrible injury to their pupils, and in the name of those unfortunate Indian children who would thus be deprived of education the Senate agreed to the proposition and stood by the committee in its effort to have the appropriations continued for two years. The fight was made then on continuing them for two years. The House stood out with the utmost obstinacy, and the compromise was made finally on one year. There never was a plainer or fairer compromise made.

It is perfectly true, Mr. President, that we can not bind our successors; one Congress can not bind another; but surely our action of last year should have some effect in the same Congress. I believe that the House at least understand this question, and the bill they send here indicates that they mean to adhere to their policy, and I sincerely hope that the Senate will not reopen it. The policy of the Government was plainly declared in the act of last year, and that policy I regard as the true American policy, that we should make no appropriations for any sectarian schools. If the United States is to give education to the Indians, let it be education given with the public money, open to all, and under no sectarian charge. That is the policy of the States. It ought to be the policy of the United States. This question has dragged along from year to year, and gradually the sectarian appropriation has been pushed back until we reached the plain declaration in last year's law. Now it is revived in this amendment, which brings it all up again for discussion. I do not want to enter again into the question of sectarian schools, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate most emphatically to the nature and purposes of this amendment and to the way in which it contrasts with the declarations that were made here last year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts says this question has dragged along. So has everything. It was not settled last year. "Unsettled questions have no pity for the repose of mankind," as the old saying goes. So long as a question is not absolutely settled it is bound to come up. I have been looking over the provision here in italics, and I do not see that it differs in spirit from what we did last year. We were unwilling to leave any children anywhere without a chance to acquire an education, and we were unwilling to make so sudden a change in dropping church schools of any kind as to leave children utterly without an opportunity to be educated. To say that you would give nothing, not a cent, to a Catholic or a Baptist or a Methodist school which is flourishing would be to say you would not educate the children of that neighborhood, because nonsectarian schools can not be provided in a year, and the Government did not give money enough perhaps, or could not make proper arrangements. So, having in view the ultimate purpose, to relieve the Government from this complained-of connection with sectarian schools, we are aiming in this direction by the proposed legislation; for it only says:

> Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools, apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1898, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children, etc.

That is all. The question is whether you will stop and leave a considerable number of children without any schools whatever.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly. Perhaps I can not answer it, though.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment which the Senator has been reading is identically the same as the amendment of last year, with one single exception. It leaves out the declaration of last year:

> It is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

Otherwise it is just the same as the provision of last year.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a permanent declaration. It need not be affirmed every year.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is subject to exception. We can make an exception to it if we choose.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator a question. The same argument he is making now he made last year, and others made it, that it is not right to leave Indian children without educational facilities.

Mr. HAWLEY. I continue to say so.

Mr. LODGE. Then the compromise was made with the understanding that in a year's time, running to the 1st of July, 1897, we would be able to do it; and both Houses and all parties agreed to that as a settlement.

Mr. HAWLEY. The hope and promise were that by this time we should have nonsectarian Government schools. We have not them. Still pursuing the original idea, I will not shut the doors of a single schoolhouse unless I can have another schoolhouse provided.

Mr. TELLER. I do not recall what I said about this matter last year, but I agree with the Senator from Connecticut. I supposed it would be a finality, and that by this year we could dispense with this debatable question. I supposed we would have facilities and appointments sufficient at all these places to take care of the Indian children. That, I believe, was the expectation of everyone on both sides of the Chamber who occupied different sides on the question—the friends of the particular appropriation and the opponents of it.

I am opposed to sectarian schools. I always have been. I made an effort some years ago, while in another department of the Government, to secure from the Government a sufficient amount of money to put all these children in Government schools. I failed to get it. I confess I thought it was better to have Indian children attend sectarian schools than to have them without school opportunities. So, finding that I could not secure a sufficient amount of money to carry on the schools in the name of the Government and of the Government alone, and charitable people being willing to help out the small appropriation that the legislative department was willing to make for that purpose, I encouraged the opening of schools in various sections of the country where otherwise there would have been none.

Last year we believed we had reached a point where the Government would take hold of this question and where the appropriation would be large enough to provide facilities for all the Indian children. We are assured now by the department of the Government which has this matter in charge that that is not the case; that there are not opportunities for all the Indian children who have been going to school to continue in the schools. We were met with the simple question, Shall we continue this arrangement another year, or shall we discontinue the schools? Shall we turn the children out, or shall we try it another year? So far as I am concerned, I would a great deal rather continue it one year, or two years, or three years, or any number of years, rather than that the children should not have an opportunity of education.

I believe that perhaps by another year we shall be in a better position. I may be mistaken; I do not want to make any promises if they are to be brought up against me, as this is. If the Senator from Massachusetts thinks that it is best to turn the children out, and if he can persuade the Senate to that opinion, the Senate will reject the pending amendment. Then there will be a large number of Indian children who will have no school opportunities whatever. If the Senator desires to reiterate the declaration of last year, which the committee did not think was necessary, because the committee thought that was a permanent declaration of policy, the committee certainly would have no objection to his doing so.

Mr. President, I admit that this is an ugly question. When it is presented a great many people do not seem to understand the difference between assistance on the part of the Government to sectarian schools in the land of the Indian in the far West and what it would be in the East in the case of a school for white people. I think the condition is very different. The principle is very different. I do not see any great harm, if the Government is too poor or too stingy—I do not care which—to educate the Indian children, to join some of the money with that of charitable people and have the sectarians who furnish the money in charge of the schools.

If the Senator from Massachusetts would direct his attention to securing a larger appropriation (and I do not know but that he would be as powerless to do that as the rest of us who have tried it), I should be glad to have his assistance in getting an appropriation sufficient to take charge of all the Indian children in the United States—of all the children—to take care of whom we recognize an obligation on our part in the way of education.

We have in Alaska a large number of Indians. They are not exactly the class of Indians we have provided for on the great Western plains. They are industrious, many of them hard-working Indians, and yet they have no facilities and no opportunity for schools. They are too poor to take care of and educate their own children. For the entire Territory of Alaska we have appropriated for some years from thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars. A very large portion of the educational facilities in that country are now being provided by charitable people in the older sections of the country. We have at various places schools of great efficiency that are supported entirely by charitable work, and if we did not have them the Territory of Alaska, that great district, would be, I may say, without any efficient and valuable educational facilities, for the appropriation of $30,000 is not large enough.

I should be very glad if the Senator from Massachusetts could tell me how we could escape the dilemma that is brought to us; that is, whether we shall dismiss these children from the schools where they have been because they are sectarian, and let them run wild and wait for an appropriation, which he knows, as I know, is very difficult to get—not so difficult here as in some other places—or shall we provide that where there are no facilities and opportunities for the Government to educate them the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use some of this money for the purpose of continuing the schools? There is where we are brought.

I do not approve, I repeat, of sectarian schools. I should like to see this thing brought to a close as soon as it can be. Yet I do not myself feel inclined to vote to turn out of school the children who have been there and have perhaps just fairly commenced to acquire an education, and let them run wild, as I know they must run wild about an agency, for fear that some harm may come to the public good by their being taught in a sectarian school.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say simply a word in reply to the Senator from Colorado, who is, I know, just as much opposed to the policy of sectarian schools as I am. It seems to me if the difficulty is in providing for the children, then the point on which we want to make our fight is the point of having an adequate appropriation. I for one will go with him to any extent that he, from his knowledge of the subject, desires, to get an appropriation large enough for the United States properly to educate every Indian child that is in any way within its care or keeping. Let us bring in that increased appropriation, and let the Senate make its fight for it. I think it is quite as likely to get that increased appropriation as to get the present amendment in favor of continuing the schools after the debate of last year. But, at all events, that is the true and honest way to do it. If the object of the present amendment is to see that no Indian children are turned loose without education, let us face the fact squarely and provide for it with an ample appropriation.

The Senator from Connecticut said that unsettled questions never were at rest. This question was settled last year by a declaration of policy, by a formal agreement and compromise between the Houses. Now it is reopened, and every year the same argument is made, that the children will be turned adrift if we do not make further appropriations for sectarian schools. Rather than do that, let us amend the bill to a sufficient extent to take care of them all, but let us live up to the policy declared last year.

I think the United States ought to take care of all the Indian children, and not suffer one of them to be turned loose. If that is the only interest involved, we can take care of the children with an adequate appropriation, and the Senator from Colorado will find, I am sure, that the Senate will stand by him with practical unanimity in favor of as large an appropriation as he sees fit to demand in order to provide adequate education for all Indian children.

Mr. TELLER. I will not be led into any reflection upon any other branch of the Government, but I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts that he probably has not had the opportunity to realize the difficulty in securing adequate appropriations that some of the rest of us have had. We can not secure at this time an appropriation sufficient to provide for these children. That should have been done last year, because the buildings are to be erected at the agencies before the children can be put to school. At the great distance at which many of them are from the centers of civilization, it is impossible to do that in several months. We are met with the simple proposition, Shall we let these children go out of school and remain out for another year, it may be for two or three years, or shall we make this temporary provision? I am quite in favor of cutting it off at the first opportunity possible, and I will join everybody in doing that; but I will not join anybody in an effort to turn these children out and give them no educational facilities whatever.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in conjunction with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on my right, I have on several former occasions occupied the attention of the Senate for a few minutes in the discussion of this matter. We made progress three years ago. We made some further progress two years ago, and last year we had the assurance that we had finally reached an agreement upon this question and that this vexed matter would be removed from discussion in the Halls of Congress. I confess that I had some doubts as to the settlement. I notice that the Senator from Massachusetts said in answer to the Senator from Colorado:

> It seems to me it does leave it open—

The Senator from Colorado had said it left it beyond controversy and it was absolutely settled, but the Senator from Massachusetts replied:

> It seems to me it does leave it open, but as it is impossible to get a separate vote on it, and we can only vote on concurring in the whole report, which is a final report, I shall not press the request for the yeas and nays.

In that discussion I made a similar observation, that in my judgment the only way to settle this question was to settle it absolutely, once and for all.

Now we are confronted with the same old proposition. The same old arguments are used, that if we do this thing we are going to wrong a large class of Indian children and deprive them of education; and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] talks to us about unsettled questions and the repose of nations. As I said on a former occasion, the very question that is before the Senate of the United States to-day was fought out to a finality in Holland more than three hundred and fifty years ago. It was fought out to a finality in the Empire of Great Britain not long after, and yet at the close of the nineteenth century, in the Senate of the United States, we are discussing the question whether we shall in this great free Republic separate church and state, something that the Anabaptists settled in Holland almost four hundred years ago.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was called out of the Chamber for a moment. I did not say that unsettled questions would remain troubling the peace of mankind forever, but while they were unsettled and they were liable to come up; and the Senator from Massachusetts said this question was always coming up before us, that it was coming up because it was not settled. I say in one sense it is settled now. Our future policy is determined by the practically unanimous declaration of last year, that we would separate the Government from the sectarian schools. But here is a plain, common-sense question now, not to be demagogued in any way.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not yield for a speech from the Senator, especially when he talks about demagogy. I did not consent to yield for that kind of a speech.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I will not take back the word "demagogy."

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; let it remain.

Now, the Senator from Connecticut talks about this question not being settled. I agree that it is not settled. I, however, assert that it ought to be settled; that we had a solemn statement made in the Senate of the United States one year ago when we were discussing a conference report that it was settled, and settled forever; and that statement was made by Senators who are responsible for the amendment that is proposed to this bill to-day. I want to know how many centuries it is going to take to settle the question in this free Republic? We are already almost four hundred years behind the people of Holland. Long ago they settled the question that church and state should be divorced. It seems to me that we have progressed far enough in civilization in this country, that we have progressed far enough in the discussion of the great questions that concern the welfare of our people, to come to a definite conclusion in regard to a matter of this kind. When is it going to be settled?

The proposition here to-day in this amendment is that we shall appropriate 40 per cent of the money that was expended in 1895. In 1895 we appropriated 50 per cent of the money that was expended in 1894. It seems to me there is no probability that in my lifetime, certainly not during the term of service to which I was recently elected to the Senate, that I shall have the privilege of seeing a settlement of this great question which disturbs the repose of nations. It is time it were settled; and I submit to the Senate of the United States to-day that we should follow the lead of the House of Representatives in this matter. The House of Representatives had all the information from the Interior Department that the committee of the Senate possibly can have; and yet the House of Representatives inserted in the bill a provision in direct conformity to the declaration which was made here when we voted upon that conference report one year ago, and agreed to it, those who were opposed to this principle and those who were in favor of it.

Mr. President, I do not want to go into these matters in this discussion, but I want to say that every church in the United States but one refuses to take this money from the Government of the United States. They recognize the fact that this is a great principle.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator be kind enough to state what church that is?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Roman Catholic Church. I have no

concealments about this matter. In saying that I do not mean to arraign that church. There is very much in its methods that I approve of. I do not mean to arraign it. I state a fact historical in its nature when I say that every church in the United States but one to-day refuses to accept donations from the Government of the United States for the purpose of sectarian education, and if we continue to make appropriations from the public funds, taxing the whole people of the United States for this purpose, we are not doing what we ought to do; we are simply making a church subsidy and nothing else. That is all there is to the question.

I have an interest in these Indian children. I do not want to see them turned out in the cold. I do not want to see them deprived of education. But we have been legislating and arbitrating and considering this Indian question almost from time immemorial, and it is time that on a great fundamental proposition, such as is involved in this question, the Congress of the United States should settle upon the policy it is to pursue, and having settled upon that policy, it should pursue it, even though some wrong may be done to a few Indian children in the territory of this great Republic.

I do not care to discuss the matter further. If the Senate wishes to insist upon this amendment, if the Senate wishes to turn the hands back on the dial; if the Senate insists upon having this great free Government pursue legislation on lines that no other civilized government on the face of the earth, so far as I know, is responsible for, I do not know that I shall very seriously complain. But I want to put myself on record to-day, as I have put myself on record in the past, as being absolutely and irrevocably and eternally opposed to voting one dollar out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of education in sectarian or religious schools of this great country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, when I used the term "demagogy," a few minutes ago, just as I was going out of the Chamber, I had in my mind nobody in the Senate, or anything of the sort, but I referred to the loose talk that goes on wherever persons are found who make trade on race prejudice, or church prejudice, and all that sort of thing, to the very great dissatisfaction of our people. What I wanted to emphasize was that we have an established policy, which requires this year a little letting up before we perfect it, so that a large number of children shall not be turned out of school.

I am not a Catholic, and yet I should have a great contempt for myself if, as a public man, I went about constantly condemning them. I have nothing to say about their belief; it is theirs—honestly held by an immense number of people—and it is a church of magnificent organization and executive power.

Now, we prefer, and all our Protestant people prefer, that the schools shall be separated from the churches. We have declared that we shall do so, but we were a little merciful about it at that very same time, permitting a child to learn to read under a Catholic priest for a little while until we can get him another place. That is all this bill proposes, that we shall not turn the Indian children out of doors, and meantime we shall make an effort to establish nonsectarian schools. I never had such strong prejudices against the Catholic schools that I would not rather see my child going to one of them to learn to read and write than wandering about the streets in bad company and growing up a dirty, ignorant loafer.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make one inquiry. I inquire whether there was or was not provision made in the Indian appropriation bill of last year which looked to the doing away of the contract system and the substitution of Government schools during the year, before July, 1897? I should like to inquire whether we made that provision, or whether we failed to make it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, we undertook to make that provision; but I stated on the floor at that time that the amount appropriated was not sufficient, and that it would not accomplish the object. The Senate, however, disagreed with me, and refused to grant the amount necessary to accomplish the object; but the object would not have been accomplished if we had appropriated a sufficient amount. Two schools were provided for in my State the construction of which has not been commenced, and the contracts are not let. The Department ever since last June, when the last Indian appropriation bill passed, has been preparing plans and considering the question, and the schools will be ready about a year from next July, judging from the speed already made. Therefore no provision whatever is made for children that it was intended should be taken care of by these two schools provided for in the bill of last year; and so it will be now. You may appropriate a million dollars more than is provided in this bill, and those children will not be provided for for the next school year, because the Department will not get around to erect the buildings so as to take care of them.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if there is anything in this amendment hostile to the policy we established in the Indian appropriation bill of last year?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not at all. Last year the House of Representatives made no provision for the sectarian or contract schools. The Senate committee said that we would make provision for two years more, for last year and for the year to come, and the Senate agreed with the committee; but the matter went into conference, the House conferees refused to agree, and after many conferences the House finally did agree to one year as a compromise.

I am not aware of entering into any agreement. I would not when the bill came up this year undertake to take care of those children. We adopted many years ago the policy of educating the Indian children in the contract schools.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would ask the Senator from South Dakota, with his permission, whether last year it was not deliberately considered by the Committee on Appropriations that we could not possibly stop this appropriation for two years, and for that reason the amendment was inserted in the appropriation bill of last year as it came from the committee, doing away with all these appropriations after two years from that time, and it was only by reason of the resistance to the bill in the other House that a compromise was at last effected of extending the appropriation for one year, and it was known then that it could not be stopped under two years?

Mr. PETTIGREW. That was the distinct understanding.

As I started to say, many years ago the Interior Department sent out circulars and specially invited the religious denominations of this country to take charge of the education of the Indian children and agree to contracts and build schools for this purpose.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. When was that done—under what Administration? Was it not under President Grant's Administration?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It was commenced, I think, under Grant's Administration, but very much enlarged under Hayes's Administration, and continued and increased under Garfield's Administration. During the first two Administrations after we had adopted this policy not a single Catholic school was engaged in the education of the Indian children. The Protestant churches of this country commenced this policy. The Protestant churches built the first Indian contract school; but, Mr. President, in 1880 we made the first provision for contracts for the education of these children in schools under the control of the Catholic Church. The Catholics were enterprising, and by 1885 they were getting three-quarters of the appropriations, because they had built the schools at the invitation of the Government, and then it was that we began to hear the cry that there should be no sectarian education; then it was that the clamor arose to abolish sectarian education for the Indian children, and it has continued until this time.

I am opposed to sectarian education, Mr. President, but I believe in doing what is just and fair and right, and I believe that these people should have sufficient time to raise money enough to sustain and maintain their schools without appropriations by the Government.

We have done pretty well. Last year we appropriated but 50 per cent of the appropriation of 1895, and this year we appropriate but 40 per cent of the appropriation of 1895. For every $100,000 that we appropriated in 1895 this year we appropriate $40,000. It looks to me as though we were approaching the end. There can be no question about that. But in the meantime, if we do not make this provision, thousands of Indian children will be unprovided for. There is one school in my State where there are 150 Indian children. There is no other school where they can be taken care of for hundreds of miles. Shall we turn them out? Shall we break up the start they have already made? It seems to me it is not the part of wisdom. It seems to me the policy should be to decrease this appropriation year by year, and so enable these church organizations to provide the funds for taking care of the schools.

Mr. WILSON. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question right on that point?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. Was it not the agreement in the Fifty-second and the Fifty-third Congresses that a gradual reduction of 20 per cent a year would be made in the appropriations for the sectarian schools, thus closing all the sectarian schools in five years?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly; but the House of Representatives last year, without waiting to carry out that tacit understanding, struck it all off. It would have required, if that policy had been carried out, not only that this appropriation should be made, but that another should be made a year from now, and then the five years would have expired. The only agreement I know of was the agreement that the appropriation should be gradually wiped out, and that at the end of five years, 20 per cent each year. The people who violated that agreement are the people who contend against this provision of the bill in this body and in the other.

Mr. President, I am well aware that we have an Indian Rights Association, organized, I suppose, to protect the Indians of this country. One of its most active centers is located in the State of Massachusetts. They are very solicitous about the rights and privileges of the Indians, terribly anxious; and along with the same idea cherished by their ancestors, the people of Massachusetts are particular about the religious belief of the Indians they favor. Miles Standish, when he assassinated his victims, and was therefore made a saint by the Pilgrims of Massachusetts, expressed no regret, and the Reverend Robinson declared that we must take into consideration the hot temper of the little captain, and stated that his only regret was that he did not stay alive until he could be converted.

So this association to-day is anxious about the rights and privileges of the Indians; yet because those Indians happened to believe the doctrines of the Catholic Church, they would drive them from the schools, turn them loose on the prairies, and make no provision for them whatever. Oh, Mr. President, I am tired of the contemptible hypocrisy of the Indian Rights Association. I am sorry that it finds representation on this floor. Whilst it may contain many philanthropic and excellent people, its affairs are controlled and directed by persons who have no respect not only for the interests of the Indians, but in many cases for truth itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not feel called upon to defend, certainly not with more than a very few words, the Indian Rights Association of the United States. The Senator's language will go to the world, and the Senator will be judged by the expressions he has made in this Chamber concerning that great benevolent association. They may have made mistakes, but that those men have any other purpose in their hearts and minds than the amelioration of the condition of the Indian people of this country is not a subject that ought to be in controversy to-day, and I think the Senator from South Dakota in charge of this bill, familiar, as he necessarily is, with this subject, and entertaining, as doubtless he does, a contempt for the opinions of those of us who do not happen to dwell in the immediate vicinity of Indian tribes, will further his cause and the purpose he has in view to a much greater extent by treating with greater courtesy and respect a great association like the Indian Rights Association than by denouncing it in such bitter and unjustifiable language.

But, Mr. President, I have been present during the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill every year for several years, and I have heard to-day for the first time a contention that we ought to increase the appropriation for Indian schools. I have, if I remember correctly, never seen a proposed amendment to the amount that the House of Representatives gives for this purpose added to this bill by the Senator from South Dakota since he has had charge of it. If it is necessary for us to have a larger appropriation for this purpose—and I can see that that may be true—why does not the Senator, instead of engaging in a reactionary measure, turning back civilization itself in reference to this question, come in here with a proposition to increase this appropriation to an amount whereby the Government can take care of these Indian children? If he does that, I am sure he will find every man who has some sympathy for the Indian Rights Association ready to join with him in voting that appropriation and insisting that it shall be kept in the Indian appropriation bill.

If it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate that this amendment shall stay in the bill, I propose, at the proper time, to reenact the declaration that was in the last Indian appropriation bill, because I think it is desirable, in view of this discussion, that it should be reenacted—that it is the settled policy of the Government that hereafter no appropriation whatever shall be made to any sectarian school for education, just as we did last year. That was our declaration then. We violated it. Let us reenact it, and see whether we shall violate it again. I shall, when the proper time comes, if this amendment does not go out of this bill, offer a proviso to the effect that all appropriations for the education of Indian children in sectarian schools shall absolutely cease at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898. Then we shall see whether those Senators who are as anxious as we are, according to their declarations, to bring this matter to an end, are ready to put themselves on record, put that provision in the bill, and stop this matter.

Mr. President, that is all I care about it. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to take a vote on this question. I shall vote one way; my friend from South Dakota will vote the other, and he and I, good friends as we are, will gracefully yield to whatever the verdict of the Senate may be on this great question.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have the Senator answer a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is not a fact that we have spent since he has been in public service probably $15,000,000 for the education of Indians?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think that that was not an overstatement, though I have not made an exact computation regarding it.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think that that is an overstatement, and I doubt if we have ever succeeded in educating one.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am inclined to think the Senator from Washington is pretty nearly right in that statement.

Mr. WILSON. I have seen a great many Indians, I expect as many as any Senator on this floor with the exception of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], and I have yet to see a single Indian to whom the educational system that has grown up and crept up here has been of the slightest advantage. I may be mistaken about it; I may be in error about it; but we have spent about $15,000,000, and every Indian we have sent to school, after he has got a little smattering of an education, has gone back to the breechclout and blanket. I do not believe, unless you discover some system by which and through which you can elevate the whole tribe at the same time, you are ever going to accomplish very much in attempting to educate a class of people who still remain in the stone age.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggests that he will offer the provision on this subject which is found in the Indian appropriation act of last year as an amendment. When the Committee on Appropriations considered this question, they did not intend in any way to interfere with the legislation of the last year or to change it in any manner except to extend the limitation one year. It was stated to us by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that he thought it doubtful whether, during the fiscal year 1897, there would be sufficient and ample provision for the maintenance of the Indian children at the Government schools. It was because of that statement that we provided in this bill for an extension of the provision respecting these schools during the fiscal year 1898, not understanding in the committee that this provision was to extend beyond that time, but that certainly during the fiscal year 1898 there would be provision made in the Government schools for the Indian children, who could be made available for education in those schools. That, I believe, was the universal understanding of the Committee on Appropriations when this provision was made, that it should be extended for one year, instead of expiring on the 1st day of July, 1897, because the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said that by the 1st of July, 1897, he was not certain that he would have sufficient school facilities to enable him to take care of those children. So I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, as it was the understanding of the committee that the provision in the act of 1897 was not to be an appropriation provision, but that it was a legislative provision, binding upon Congress and upon the appropriation respecting these Indian schools.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, education, mere letters, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] intimates, does not necessarily improve the morals of men. It is more important to this Senate, with respect to its own dignity and a proper appreciation of itself, that this legislation shall be in harmony with enlightened public sentiment than that there should be any special provision for the Indians. That they should be taught to read and write and that such other literary education as may be conferred upon them should be conferred is clear. But the particular point to which I want to call attention is in the proviso to be found in line 20, on page 45, and I shall at the proper time move to strike out those words:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools—

The words I shall move to strike out are:

apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations.

I shall also move to strike out all after the word "children," in line 25, on page 45, which will include all of the amendment on page 46.

Mr. President, there is something profoundly humiliating to me that there should be a controversy here over these mere disputes or over these mere denominational claims. Religious people who belong to special denominations have exerted themselves to extend instruction to the Indians. They have sought to subject the Indians to Christian influences; they have sought to make them better men and better women; they have sought to improve their condition. In some respects the Catholics have been the most forward and have been successful; in others the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Baptists, and the Quakers have exerted themselves with respect to particular tribes, and have accomplished great good.

Why should this Senate permit itself to engage in or to inquire into this miserable question of denominational control? The clause authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, "for support of Indian day and industrial schools"—I read the whole clause:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including pay of architect and draftsman, to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,200,000, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools, apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1898, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children.

If I had my way about it, the whole provision would be modified to that extent. I regard the efforts of the churches, of religious people who are attached to churches, as being eminently praiseworthy. As the Senator from Washington intimates, while they have not made these Indian people absolutely perfect, as perhaps Christianity has not made us as perfect as we should be, while they have not succeeded to the full extent of the desires of the good people who have established these schools and have been pioneers in this work, and where they have established schools, in many instances Catholic schools, Presbyterian schools, Baptist schools, Methodist schools, Quaker schools—I say where they have as pioneers in this work accomplished so much good as they have, why should not those schools be employed as the agencies by which these efforts for the benefit of the Indians should still be carried on?

My own feelings are that the good men and the good women who have been the pioneers in this work and who have carried it on until this time should not be abandoned by the Government. Some of us propose to take what they have done, and propose to decline to assist them further in this most praiseworthy work. Why should it be done? Why should not the Secretary of the Interior be permitted to make contracts with such schools as exist, such schools as can accomplish the purposes of the Government? Why should not that be done, and why should the condition be imposed upon the Secretary of the Interior of dividing the amount between the various different denominations as best he can, as if the Senate was at all interested in this denominational question? I suppose, Mr. President, that the proper thing to do is to avail ourselves of the very best facilities within our reach and prosecute the education of those people who are now so nearly extinct, and avail ourselves of every agency that may be found at hand.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only wish to say a single word in justification of the Indian Rights Association, which is a great benevolent and charitable organization. I have never heard one single word from them or from anybody connected with them in regard to sectarian schools, and I have not the slightest idea what their opinion is about it. I have opposed appropriations for sectarian schools ever since I have been in Congress in either branch, which is now nine or ten years, but without any reference whatever to the Indian Rights Association.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me? I wish to say in the same line that no member of the Indian Rights Association (and the country has known my attitude on this question) has ever written or spoken to me in regard to the matter.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think they have taken any part in the discussion. Although many of them have the misfortune to live in the Eastern part of the country, they have a perfect right to discuss affairs of general interest, and they do not feel that the right to discuss the Indian question is confined to the inhabitants of South Dakota. I think it is wholly right that they should take an interest in the Indians, and all I wished now was to relieve them from any responsibility whatever for what I have said in the matter of the sectarian schools.

I have opposed appropriations for sectarian schools ever since I have been in public life, because I did not believe that I had the right to tax another man to support my profession of faith or my church, and I do not think anyone has the right to tax me to support his. I think that is a pretty simple general proposition on which all Americans, so far as I know, agree, or ought to if they do not. The Constitution has something to say about it in one of the articles of amendment. I believe it is a mistake to appropriate the public money for the benefit of any sect. Of course, all the denominational schools for the Indians but one ceased to receive public money some time ago, as I think everybody knows except the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] who has just been talking about them.

There is only one church, if I am correctly informed, which now receives public money for its schools, but that does not affect the argument. I do not think we ought to appropriate money for the Presbyterian schools of the country. I do not think we ought to appropriate it for the Episcopal schools. I do not think we ought to appropriate it for the schools of the great Methodist Church, including in its membership so large a proportion of the inhabitants of the United States. I do not think we ought to appropriate it for Baptist schools. I pause here. I wait for some Senator to rise and tell me now that I am attacking those sects which I have named. I want to hear it said. I want to see an exhibition of that sensitiveness which has been displayed on this subject shown now when I name those great Protestant sects. I say that I do not think we ought to appropriate money for their schools. No one criticises me for the statement I have just made.

But, Mr. President, when I say that we ought not to appropriate money for the only church which now receives the Government money for these schools, then I am subjected to the remark of the Senator from Connecticut that I am attacking in a spirit of demagogy a Christian church. I no more attack the Roman Catholic Church than I attack the Baptist Church, or the Presbyterian Church, or the Episcopal Church, or the Methodist Church, or any that I have named. I say no sect, as such, should receive Government money, and I say it because I believe in that broad principle. I am not to be deterred from saying it by the outcry that I am illiberal. If the only sect that happens to take that money is the Roman Catholic, I am very sorry that my remarks should apply to it alone, but I can not help it. The principle applies to all sects. It is not the business of the Government to appropriate money for sectarian purposes. That principle is embodied in many of the State constitutions. I have always stood on that principle, and I trust I always shall. It is for that reason that I have opposed these appropriations ever since I have had the honor to have a seat in either House. It is not that I pretend to any special knowledge of the Indians. It is not because I care what the Indian's faith is. I quarrel with no man's creed and with no man's conscience. I have no criticism to make of a man's belief. I stand simply on the broad principle—which I think is unquestionably sound—that we have no right, representing as we do all shades of Christian belief, all sects, and all churches, to draw any distinction among them. We have no right to take one man's money and give it to the support of another man's faith. If we want to educate the Indians, let us appropriate money and do it by Government schools, but do not let us appropriate the public money and give it to a sect among the citizens of the United States.

I am quite content to stand on that ground. I have no feeling of illiberality toward any sect. I have no desire to attack any man's creed. I have not reflected on a single branch of the Christian church. I do not question for one moment that all branches of that church have done good and useful work for the Indians. But I say that when we are appropriating the public money, contributed by men of all sects and all creeds, we have no right to give it to one sect or to a half dozen sects or to twenty sects which shall be picked out here or by the Secretary of the Interior. The public money must be spent only for public purposes, in which all Americans share, without any distinction of creed or religion.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the question which the Senator has just been debating. We determined last year the policy of the Government touching these schools. We are about to declare it again, I understand, because there is no opposition to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

I should like to say, however, that there is no particular relation between the subject of Indian schools, and the relation which the Government bears toward those schools that we call contract schools, and the great question whether the education of the Indian youth of the country should proceed upon general lines under the control of the State or whether we should assist the sectarian bodies by taxation and appropriation in carrying on their schools. There is not the slightest relation between them. The principle is not involved at all. I am opposed to the Government appropriating money for contract schools, for the reason that I believe the Government is better able to take care of the schools than is anybody else. I have advocated that for many years.

The Senator from Massachusetts tells us that the great religious denominations have abandoned their effort to educate the Indians. I am very thankful that is not the case. They have not left to the great Catholic Church the education of the Indians. There are numbers of schools in this country supported by Presbyterians and by Episcopalians and by Methodists which are engaged in teaching the Indians the ways of civilization and Christianity. It is true they have retired from receiving appropriations from the General Government, and very rightly, too. None of the Protestant churches, as I understand, now receives such appropriation. They voluntarily decline to receive it. But that has all been done in the last three or four years. Up to that time they received their proper share or all they could get, and when some years ago it became my duty to administer this branch of the public affairs I found that the Protestant churches were receiving the great proportion. Almost all of the Government money that went into contract schools went into their schools. But in a very short time the Catholic Church, with the enterprise that has ever marked its course in the West, took hold of the educational question. It outran all the others, and got, I believe, a great deal more than all the Protestant churches put together.

However, I will not discuss that question. I could not allow the statement made by the Senator from Washington to go without a protest, especially as the Senator from New Hampshire gave his unqualified assent to that rather remarkable assertion. The Senator from Washington said, in substance, that we have spent twelve or fifteen million dollars in the education of Indian children, and that we have not educated any. Mr. President, there never was a greater mistake in the world. I do not know how fortunate we have been in teaching the Indians of Washington and the Pacific Coast and that immediate section; but I do know that, while we have not had quite the success with the Indians in many directions that we had hoped for, yet there has been a wonderful improvement in the Indians, and I do not believe it can be honestly said that the great sum of money, $15,000,000 it may be, has been misappropriated. Some of it has been wasted. Some of it has been lost. That is true of all payments to any class of people.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question at this point?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Is it not true that a very considerable portion of the $15,000,000 was expended in compliance with treaties, by which we obtained large and valuable grants from the Indians? For instance, the Sioux treaty which was conducted by the Senator from Iowa. The Government engaged to make certain expenditures for the education of the Indian children. So it is not entirely a tax on the people of the United States, but it is giving compensation for lands which we have acquired.

Mr. TELLER. That is true. In nearly all of our treaties with the Indians by which land has been ceded to us we have provided for the education of the Indian children. A great portion of the appropriations made in this bill are made in accordance with treaty stipulations in consideration of the cession of their lands to us, lands that we are selling, in some instances, to the people of the United States for a great deal more than we paid the Indians therefor, and in most instances, where the land is not taken by homestead settlers, it brings more.

The education of the Indian has been pursued under some difficulties. It has been pursued under difficulties because we did not have a sufficient amount of money. If we could have put in schools at one time all the Indian children, we would have done a great deal better than by the course which we have pursued, to take a small percentage and put them in school and try to educate them. When they went back to the tribe, they went into a barbarous community; but it is not true that they have all gone back to the breechcloth and the blanket. The Senator says he has seen more Indians than anybody else except the Senator from South Dakota. The Senator from Washington has been seeing the Indians for the last twelve or fifteen years, and I have been seeing them for nearly forty. I have come in closer contact with Indians than nearly anybody else in this country. I have seen the time when they were a good deal too near to me and when I would have been glad to have had them at a greater distance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In connection with the statement of the Senator from Washington, that there are no Indians who have been educated, I wish to state that there is in the gallery at the present time a full-blooded Sioux Indian who is a graduate of Hamilton College, who is a graduate of the Boston Medical College, and who is a gentleman in every respect. There are hundreds of Sioux boys who are educated, who are becoming most excellent citizens, and who are gentlemen in their habits and conduct.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that I have myself come in contact with hundreds of them. I have seen them in every section of the Western country pretty nearly, and, while a good many of them have not accomplished what we hoped, yet the work has been going on successfully, and we are gradually and steadily, and I think as rapidly as we ought to expect under the circumstances, lifting up these nations and putting them in a position to take care of themselves and to become eventually respectable members of society.

Mr. President, I have had as much opportunity perhaps to come in contact with this race as most men have. I appreciate all their good traits and I am familiar with all their evil ones, and I do not like to remain silent when a statement is made which will discourage the people who are making an effort to do something for the Indians. The Indian problem will eventually settle itself, and that, too, very speedily, if we continue to give the Indian children an opportunity to secure an education. I admit that we have pursued a very foolish course. We said that it would not do to bring the wild men of this country in contact with civilization and Christianity, and we have isolated them on their reservations, we have kept them away from civilization, and we have kept them away from schools. We have given them no inducement to progress and grow better. Yet nearly all of us are inclined to say that forty or fifty years have gone by and they are no better than they were. Why should they be better, if they are kept on their reservations, where the only civilized men they see are the Indian agent and a few employees around the agency—and they are not always of the very best class of society either?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think it ought to be said in this connection, what every Senator knows, but if this debate is read elsewhere the statement ought to be made that the matter of the sectarian schools came about in the most natural way without a thought of preferring any religious body at the expense of any other.

When General Grant came into the office of President he found the Indian service in a very bad way. Of course the country had been attending to other things connected with the war and reconstruction, and there were great complaints of the character of the Indian agents and the teachers of the Indian schools and of the whole administration of the Indian service. It was said to be corrupt and wasteful, and that we were unable to command men of suitable character and capacity for the service which was required. General Grant himself hit upon a scheme. It was his own plan, and one on which he prided himself very much. He said, "I will take these schools, and wherever I can make an arrangement I will give them into the charge of some religious body. They shall suggest an Indian agent and an Indian teacher, and I will have them employed; and I will get rid of the idea of having the reckless and worthless men who get around the appointing power provided for at the Government expense and at the expense of the Indians."

The religious bodies to which General Grant made the suggestion accepted it. Some of them accepted it very reluctantly. I know that the religious communion with which I am associated undertook with great reluctance the duty of finding suitable persons for these places, so far as they were assigned to them. The matter went on without a thought of sectarianism or of competition between sects or the desire of one sect to get the advantage of another, or of anything like propagating a special sectarian creed. But at last, as the religious bodies had got accustomed to this thing, a rivalry grew up. Sometimes they got too near each other, and the same thing which occurs in populous towns and cities occurred. Religious controversies sprang up about dealing with the Indians, and it turned out that it did not work well.

If President Grant had foreseen what has taken place, he probably would never have entered upon the experiment. He was, as is known, a member of the great Methodist denomination, and one of the last men in the world to desire to do anything to propagate what is distinctive in Catholicism as separate from Protestantism. When the public attention became aroused, and it was found that the religious denominations were getting jealous of each other and were pressing upon the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and upon the officer who has special charge of Indian education for particular advantages, were insisting that they and not the Government should determine the question of the appointment or removal of public officers, the policy was dropped with as general consent as it was originally established. When General Grant made the proposition, it was hailed with approbation all over the country, and this result was not then anticipated by him or by anybody else.

Now, all that we had to do when we found that complaint and jealousy were arising among different religious sects was to carry out the constitutional principle which my colleague has invoked, to discontinue the policy as rapidly as it could be done with justice to the Indians and the parties with whom we had contracts, and as rapidly as it could be done consistently with providing substitute agencies.

I have always voted and always expect to vote for declarations like that advocated by the Senator from New Hampshire whenever they are proposed, reaffirming the old constitutional policy that there shall be no public money provided for sectarian purposes, and to get rid of this plan as soon as we can without a gap or interruption in the Indian education. Upon the question how much we must keep of the old plan until we have the new one in operation, I have followed and expect to follow the Committee on Indian Affairs. Of course no member of the Senate can investigate for himself the detail of the condition of every Indian school on every reservation in the country.

Therefore I have made this statement, not because it is necessary for the Senate, but because some very worthy and enthusiastic persons of various religious opinions in the country seem to misunderstand the matter. Some are in a great hurry to have the reform accomplished, and others regard the attempt to accomplish the reform as an open or covert attack upon their particular form of religious faith.

The great Catholic Church especially stands for, and, in this country, must live by, the constitutional right that all Christian bodies must stand on entire equality before the law, and, so far as I understand the declarations of their leaders, their great authorities, they recognize that policy. I heard the eminent pulpit orator who has just been called to the head of the great Catholic University at Washington, an honored and esteemed fellow-citizen of my own, state in his farewell address to the people of Worcester, where he had been living twenty-five years, his devotion to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. He said he owed his right to be a Catholic and his right to advocate the religious faith which he held to the humane and just provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which declares all Christian bodies to be on an equality. He asked for nothing more for himself nor for his church; that he expected to be content with nothing less. The utterance which he made of a lofty desire that all Christians should stand on an equality before the law, both in its administration and in its original enactment, would have answered for the utterance of any body of Christians or any body of religious thinkers, whether Christians or not. I do not believe there is any difference of opinion among religious bodies on this matter, and I know there is no difference of opinion in the Senate.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, I desire to say briefly that I am in thorough sympathy and accord with that sentiment which is opposed to the appropriation of the public moneys for sectarian purposes, and I had hoped, in common with the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New Hampshire, that, when a year ago the conference committee of the two Houses had arrived at an agreement upon this question, the matter had been definitely settled. But it seems that the mistake was made by the conference committee of not having made provision to carry the agreement into effect. So it happens in this session of Congress that we are again confronted with the same condition of affairs that existed a year ago, and that again, in addition to the great principle of the separation of church and state, in which the great body of the American people believe, we are once more met in this connection with the question of humanity. We are again face to face with the proposition that if we cut out this appropriation at the present time many of the Indian pupils in the Indian schools now being cared for under the contract system will find themselves without the means of securing that education which I am sure all of us desire that they shall receive, because if anything has been demonstrated in the course of our Indian policy it is that the only rational, logical, reasonable, and humane treatment to be extended to those people is that of educating them and of teaching them useful occupations. That policy has proved a grand success in the treatment of the Indians, and it is the only policy which ought to be pursued toward them.

Mr. President, so far as concerns the statement of the Senator from Washington, that after all this expenditure of public money in behalf of the Indians there is not to-day an educated Indian, I wish to state, out of my own experience, having passed the greater part of my life in that part of the country which they mainly inhabit, that the statement is incorrect. Anyone who has lived in that section of the country must be well aware that there has been a great advance, a great improvement in the condition of the Indians, and this statement finds its verification in the fact that disturbances by Indians have almost entirely ceased. This state of affairs, I say, testifies to the good work which has been done and to the improved condition of the Indians at this time. There are many hundreds and thousands of Indians who have been directly benefited and improved by the policy of education and of teaching them useful occupations.

If the amendment is presented for our votes in this form, although I am strongly opposed to the policy of voting the public moneys for sectarian purposes, for I recognize the fact that so long as this custom prevails it must lead to endless discussions and to the continuous debate which has been going on year after year—yet in consideration of this other question, that of humanity, I shall be compelled to cast my vote again in favor of the extension of this appropriation for another year. But if we are going to adopt the amendment of the committee, I believe we ought at this time, taking counsel of the experience of the past year, to make provision for the purchase of schoolhouses and sites, so that a year hence, when Congress convenes, we shall not find the question again confronting us in exactly the same condition and manner that it does at this moment.

I dislike very much, as a younger member of this body, to offer even a suggestion to the Committee on Appropriations, or to attempt in any manner to amend their work. Perhaps it is not proper that I should do so, and yet I shall make bold at this time to suggest an amendment, and to suggest further that if it were incorporated at this time with the committee amendment it would effectually dispose of this question and make all the necessary and proper provision for carrying into effect what is unquestionably the desire of both branches of Congress. With the permission of the Senate, I will read the amendment, which I have roughly drawn, and I should like to ask, if it be in order, that it may be considered in connection with the amendment reported by the committee. I propose the following amendment, which I will read for information:

For the purchase, lease, repair, and construction of school buildings, and the purchase of school sites for the use and accommodation of Indian pupils now being educated under the contract system, the sum of $1,000,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to expend the same, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for this purpose, and to have such schools in readiness for the use and accommodation of said pupils on or before the 1st day of July, 1898.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I crave the indulgence of the Senate a single moment further in this debate. When I gave qualified assent to the statement of the Senator from Washington, I did not mean to be understood to say that there was not an educated Indian in the United States, or that education as administered by the Government has not done more or less good. What I meant to be understood to give assent to was that I thought we had made a very large expenditure of money for this purpose with results that were disappointing to us all, and I adhere to that statement.

It was not my purpose to mention in this discussion any religious denomination. I have with a great deal of care in former discussions avoided making any utterance of that kind, and I would not have mentioned any denomination to-day had not a direct question been put to me by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, which it was my duty to answer. I am not narrow or bitter or prejudiced in the matter of religious belief. It was, sir, upon my suggestion and motion that the last relic of religious intolerance was removed from the organic law of the State of New Hampshire, and that was in behalf of the great denomination that has to a certain extent been under discussion to-day.

My position is well known in my own State on this question. I entertain the broadest possible views, and I concede to every man, whatever his religious belief may be, the same right of free thought and free action that I claim for myself.

But, Mr. President, this question goes beyond that of sects or churches. It is a great fundamental principle; and I repeat that in my judgment it is time that the people of this great country solve this problem once for all, and rid our national legislative bodies from the discussion of it that has taken place year by year.

The Senator from Colorado properly said, and truthfully said, that the other religious denominations were still pursuing their work among the Indians. That is true; and when all these appropriations are stopped, when the last cent of money is discontinued to any religious denomination whatever, the great denomination that is now pursuing this work, aided by appropriations from the public Treasury, will, beyond a doubt, continue its beneficent work among the Indians of this country. It is not a blow at any religious denomination. It is not action that, in my judgment, will in any wise retard the work of education among the red men of this country. But we will have established a great principle, upon which every citizen of this country will stand, and can stand, whatever his religious belief may be, and we will have rid our legislation from a troublesome and a vexed question that is bound to be discussed until it is solved, and it never will be solved and settled until it is settled right.

Now, Mr. President, I am ready for the vote, reserving the right to offer the amendments I suggested a moment ago. If those amendments go into the bill, even though the amendment of the committee shall be adopted—which I trust may not occur—I am satisfied that when we come to consider the next Indian appropriation bill we will not occupy several hours of valuable time in the discussion of this question, which has been heard so often in the Halls of the National Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. Does the Senator propose the amendment read by him as an amendment to the one pending?

Mr. MANTLE. If it is in order, I should like to have it acted upon, so that it may become a part of the committee's amendment. I think it is necessary to go with the committee amendment in order to get it in proper shape.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desired to know the status of that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from New Hampshire who has just taken his seat that this matter ought not to occupy the attention of the Senate for any great length of time. I had supposed that the question of the policy of our Government was settled by the legislation of last year. The only question between the two Houses last year on the Indian appropriation bill was whether these schools, contract schools, so called, should end with the passage of that law, or whether they should end on the 1st day of July, 1897 or 1898. The Senate Committee on Appropriations last year, accepting fully the views now uttered by the Senator from New Hampshire, reported a provision that the contract schools should continue until the 1st day of July, 1898, believing then, as I believe now, that time should be given for the transition period between the schools that are to be supported by the Government and those denominational schools which have hitherto been supported by contracts given to them.

I agree that the policy thus established last year should not be interfered with, and I know, or at least I have heard, of no one on this floor who proposes to interfere with it. Therefore I do not discuss the question as to the propriety of appropriating money for sectarian schools.

When we fixed the year 1898 in the act of last year in this body, after debate, we did it because we believed it would require a period of two years to make the transition. The House believed that it could be done without delay. A compromise was made between the two Houses that the period should end on the 1st of July, 1897, and that was understood at the time in both Houses. Now it appears from the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, made to the Committee on Appropriations, that although this has been substantially done, or will be done on the 1st day of July, 1897, either by purchase of the buildings of sectarian schools in existence or otherwise—that the change from sectarian to Governmental schools will be accomplished, or nearly so, by the 1st of July, 1897—but that there are certain schools having now a considerable number of pupils which can not be so changed by the 1st of July, 1897.

Therefore, after consideration of this subject, the Committee on Appropriations did what? Did it change the policy of this nation as stated and agreed to substantially by everybody last year? Have we done anything in this bill that requires a reargument or restatement, as though there was a division of opinion here? Certainly not. We only provided that the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should have the authority, in case it was impossible to secure Government schools for pupils requiring school aid, to use a portion of this money for the fiscal year for which we are appropriating to enable the children to acquire the knowledge that is usually acquired at these schools, without turning them out. We have changed no policy. We have proposed only the humanitarian idea which ought to prevail in this body without reference to our religious views, or the want of them, in order to give the children that can not be provided for by the Government an opportunity for one year more, or a part of a year, to be educated where they are now being educated.

Now, that is all there is of this question. I hope that we shall not hear of it again in this appropriation bill. I concur with the Senator from New Hampshire that when we have passed the transition period and made provision for the Government schools it will not be necessary for us to indulge in a denominational discussion either for or against any particular religious denomination in the country.

So the Committee on Appropriations have not departed from the policy and purpose which was declared last year, but have proposed an amendment here which will submit to the House of Representatives whether a few children who are not already provided for at the public schools and who are now provided for by the sectarian or denominational schools shall be turned out, or whether, temporarily, they shall be continued where they are.

Mr. STEWART. I have not been present during all of the discussion. I wish to inquire whether there is a provision in the pending bill or in any other for advancing with sufficient rapidity the construction of the buildings so as to be ready at the end of the time limited?

Mr. ALLISON. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated to us explicitly that the provisions here for the purchase and lease of building sites would be ample to provide for all the children during the fiscal year 1898.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I did not suppose there was any controversy as to the policy to be pursued with reference to these Indian schools. I understood from the action of Congress last year that we settled upon the policy that appropriations should be cut off at the rate of about 20 per cent each year for something like four or five years, until the schools were enabled to care for themselves. So the proposed amendment of the Committee on Appropriations does not disagree in any respect from the policy laid down last year, as I am informed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] at my right.

I think there are two things that ought to be considered carefully in connection with this proposed amendment, and these two points rise above the mere dollars and cents involved in the amendment, although the sum is probably large. The first to be considered is the welfare of the Indian children, who, unless this appropriation shall be made, will be turned out without any educational opportunities whatever. There can be no doubt that a great many thousands of Indian children unless they receive means of education through the contract schools for a year or two at least will be deprived of the privilege of an education during that period. Now, that is an important matter. I agree entirely with the Senator from Connecticut, with whom I rarely agree upon any subject, that it would be absolute cruelty, unjustifiable cruelty, to turn these children out without an opportunity of education.

Then there is another important matter in this connection that the Senate can not overlook, and which was considered a year ago in connection with the Indian appropriation bill, and that is the injustice of taking the prop from under the contract schools and rendering their property valueless by a sudden withdrawal of the appropriation. The church of which the Senator from New Hampshire speaks, and in fact many of the churches, invested millions of dollars in Indian schools; they erected valuable buildings, and provided for the education of the Indian youth. If the Government can be estopped from a sudden withdrawal of support to the schools it is estopped in this case until the owners of this property have had an opportunity either to dispose of the property or make provision for conducting their schools by means derived from some other source. It strikes me that it would be absolutely unjust in view of the policy this Government has pursued for over twenty years in encouraging the construction of great school buildings, and encouraging religious societies to educate the Indian youth, suddenly to take the foundation out from under their enterprises and permit their property to fall back upon their hands almost absolutely worthless.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that the other denominations in bulk invested very nearly as much in school buildings as the remaining denomination; that they voluntarily relinquished this subsidy from the Treasury of the United States and did not ask the Government to reimburse them, and that they are carrying on their schools now with their own funds.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not see that that makes any difference in the argument. The Senator, a moment ago in his remarks, seemed to indicate that I was a Catholic, or in some way in sympathy with the Catholic Church.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no, Mr. President; I disclaim that. I did not think that, and hence I could not have said it.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me say to the Senator that I am a child of Protestant parents, the child of a Protestant minister——

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a matter I never thought of, Mr. President, and I will state to the Senator——

Mr. ALLEN. And I do not stand here as an advocate of any particular denomination. I believe the more churches we have the better off the country will be, I do not care what their dogmas may be. We are not compelled to believe all of the formulated creeds of a church, and yet, Mr. President, it is true that the great church organizations have hewed out and marked the pathway of civilization in this country. The settlement of the country has always followed in the pathway of the pioneers of the churches. I care not what name you may give it, every Sunday school that is organized and established in this country, every Christian society, under whatever name it may exist or by whatever name it may be known, is an important factor in our civilization, and we can not afford to sneer at any of them. They are civilizers.

I regret that the Government does not pursue the policy, if it finds it cheaper, of employing the different churches as an agency, as a means to educate the Indian youth of this country. The Senator from New Hampshire thinks he sees some conflict between that policy and the established doctrine that church and state shall be forever divorced. There is no conflict at all, either in theory or in practice. From whence did we get the doctrine incorporated in our fundamental law that there should be no union of church and state? We got it from the example furnished us by the early English people and by continental Europe. In those countries at that time there was an established church, and the people were taxed and compelled to support the church. That is what is meant by church and state, and that is what we mean when we say we will divorce the church from the state. But the employment of the Methodist Church, or of the Episcopal, or of the Quakers, or any other organization as an agency to educate the Indian youth of this country is in no sense, in theory or in fact, a union of church and state.

I noticed a day or two ago that a distinguished Union general, under whom I served during the late war, died at St. Louis, a man, Mr. President, who, I believe, was greater than Marshal Ney; greater, in my judgment, than any subordinate commander in this country or in the old in a hundred years of the world's existence. It so happened, when I came to read his obituary, that I learned for the first time that he belonged to the Catholic Church. He was A. J. Smith, a man pretty nearly 84 years of age. Mr. President, when that man was riding in the storm of battle, leading his hosts in defense of our country, did anybody say that was a union of church and state? This Government employed his great services, and he rendered them freely in defense of the flag. You might as well say that the payment of that man for his services was a union of church and state as to say that the payment of these church organizations for their services in educating the Indian youth of the country is a union of church and state. That is not the union of church and state to which we refer. The union of church and state to which we refer, and which is contrary to our Constitution and contrary to our traditions as a Government, is the establishment of a particular church organization and the supporting of that church organization by general taxation levied upon the people.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the amendment with regard to sectarian schools at 1 o'clock on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SPECULATION IN CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have a brief conference report adopted, which I do not think will take three minutes. The members of the committee in the other House are anxious to have the report acted upon at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6884) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the first section of the bill, and from its disagreement to the amendment striking out the third section of the bill, and concurs therein; and also recedes from its disagreement to the amendment to the second section of the bill, and concurs therein with an amendment as follows:

Strike out "five hundred," and insert "one thousand" instead thereof, so that said section will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any person who shall violate this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding $1,000."

GEO. F. HOAR,
WILLIAM LINDSAY,
WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
C. G. BURTON,
JOHN K. HENDRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 3926) to correct the war record of David Sample;

A bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9168) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the city of McKeesport to the township of Mifflin, Allegheny County, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree; and

A bill (H. R. 10102) to remove the political disabilities of Col. William E. Simms.

MRS. LUCY ALEXANDER PAYNE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1501) for the relief of Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, further insisting upon its amendment to said bill, and asking for a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ROACH. With regard to the bill, the action upon which has just been read, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, to concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

The motion was agreed to.

LEGAL PROCEDURE IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to have the attention of the Senate for a moment while I make a statement. I had intended this afternoon to ask unanimous consent to call up a bill which was recommended by the Judiciary Committee, which must be passed, if at all, very quickly. It was objected to some time ago by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. It is a bill relating to legal procedure in the Territories. There are four men who are under sentence of death to be hanged on Tuesday next. I do not suppose it would be possible if we brought the bill up to-night to get any further along with it than if it was brought up on Monday morning; but I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate on Monday morning to consider the bill, and I hope the Senator from New York will by that time be willing to withdraw his objection to it.

FORT SPOKANE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a bill on the Calendar which the War Department wants passed, a bill of mere business detail, which will save the Government some money. It will take but a moment to read it. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. It is Senate bill 3561.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it leads to no discussion, I shall not object.

The bill (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company was read by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FAULKNER. If it leads to no discussion, I shall not object.

Mr. HAWLEY. After the bill is read I think there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Only a single word of explanation. The bill will assist the Government in conveying materials more cheaply to Fort Spokane, and so the War Department would like to have the bridge built this summer. That is all.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 22, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 20, 1897.

DISTRICT JUDGE.

James L. Wolcott, of Delaware, to be United States district judge for the district of Delaware.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Giles Y. Crenshaw, of Missouri, to be marshal of the United States for the western district of Missouri.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 20, 1897.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Benjamin F. Shaw, of Vancouver, Wash., to be register of the land office at Vancouver, Wash.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Infantry arm.

Candidate Sergt. James W. Clinton, Troop F, Fourth Cavalry, to be second lieutenant.

Candidate Sergt. Alexander T. Ovenshine, Company C, Twenty-first Infantry, to be second lieutenant.

Candidate Corpl. Henry E. Eames, Troop E, Fourth Cavalry, to be second lieutenant.

Candidate Sergt. Robert Field, Troop H, Eighth Cavalry, to be second lieutenant.

First Lieut. Reuben Banker Turner, Sixth Infantry, to be captain.

First Lieut. Daniel Alfred Frederick, adjutant Seventh Infantry, to be captain.

First Lieut. Edgar Hubert, Eighth Infantry, to be captain.

Second Lieut. Frederick S. Wild, Seventeenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant.

Second Lieut. William Orlando Johnson, Nineteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant.

Second Lieut. James Robert Lindsay, Fourteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant.

POSTMASTERS.

Mary A. Ryan, to be postmaster at Anoka, in the county of Anoka and State of Minnesota.

Sadie E. Truax, to be postmaster at Breckenridge, in the county of Wilkin and State of Minnesota.

J. W. Overstreet, to be postmaster at La Plata, in the county of Macon and State of Missouri.

G. W. S. Jenkins, to be postmaster at Beaufort, in the county of Beaufort and State of South Carolina.

William A. Sloan, to be postmaster at St. Petersburg, in the county of Hillsboro and State of Florida.

Alfred J. McQuiston, to be postmaster at Saltsburg, in the county of Indiana and State of Pennsylvania.

George Mason, to be postmaster at Walsenburg, in the county of Huerfano and State of Colorado.

Duncan D. McIntyre, to be postmaster at Laurinburg, in the county of Richmond and State of North Carolina.

Mary Green, to be postmaster at Warrenton, in the county of Warren and State of North Carolina.

Adelia M. Barrows, to be postmaster at Hinsdale, in the county of Cheshire and State of New Hampshire.

Miss Ada L. Davis, to be postmaster at Pilot Point, in the county of Denton and State of Texas.

James F. Maher, to be postmaster at Litchfield, in the county of Meeker and State of Minnesota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 20, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, the general deficiency bill, and the question is upon the pending amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 54, beginning with line 55, strike out the following:

"To enable the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to pay to members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress the amounts withheld in their salaries on account of absence, $12,202.48."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. The truth about it is that the gentleman has raised a question that it would probably be very difficult for even himself to decide. The gentleman thought proper yesterday afternoon to begin his remarks by an assault upon the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and myself. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Missouri had nothing whatever to do with the preparation of this bill. It was prepared by a subcommittee of which he was not a member; and the members of that subcommittee, myself included, are responsible for this provision in the bill. It may seem strange that, being to a certain extent responsible for the appearance of the provision, I should be found supporting the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois. The Committee on Appropriations and the subcommittee on deficiencies were considering a bill introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] for the relief of Mr. George D. Wise, of Richmond, Va., which read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George D. Wise, of Richmond, Va., the sum of $110.

That bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Upon inquiry the committee discovered that the $110 which was sought to be appropriated was claimed to be due Mr. Wise for a portion of his salary as a member of the House, which had been withheld under the order of the Speaker of the last House in consequence of Mr. Wise's absence. The subcommittee concluded that if it would be right to pay this demand, it would also be right to make reimbursement to all others similarly situated, and it was the purpose of the subcommittee that this matter should be brought before the House for its consideration.

In order that members may properly and thoroughly understand the question, I will send to the Clerk's desk a blank certificate, being the form used in the last Congress for the pay of members, beginning on the 4th day of April, 1894; and I ask the Clerk to read all that appears on the certificate, including the language quoted from the statute.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40, REVISED STATUTES.

The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payments of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
Washington, D. C., ——— ——, 189—.

I certify that during the month of ——— I have been absent ——— days, for which deductions should be made under section 40 of the Revised Statutes.

——— ———.

Salary, 189—.

No. —.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
Washington, D. C., ——— ——, 189—.

I certify that there is due to the Hon. ——— ———, ——— dollars, as a member of the House of Representatives for the Fifty-third Congress.

——— ———, Speaker.

Received the above amount.

——— ———.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I now send to the Clerk's desk the form of certificate used in the present Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended five minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to occupy ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] be allowed to proceed for ten minutes further. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In connection with the certificate just read, I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas whether it is not true that the Speaker announced, either publicly or privately, I do not remember which—but were we not given to understand that he would not certify the voucher necessary to draw the monthly pay until the member had signed the certificate just read?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly; that was my understanding.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It seems to me that the fact I have just stated ought to go on record with the certificate read.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman from Texas resumes, I beg to suggest that the answer of the gentleman, taken in connection with the query just made, may be somewhat misleading, owing to the fact that the Speaker, in some way or another—I do not now remember how—authorized a modification of that certificate. I know that in a great many cases the certificate was modified, so that, for instance, the member would certify: "I have been absent no days for which, under the law, my pay should be deducted."

Mr. SAYERS. Well, that may be so, though I never saw such a certificate.

Mr. HEPBURN. So that any member, if he believed in the contention of gentlemen on this side of the House, had the right to make that change in the certificate, which, in its modified form, the Speaker readily signed, and by means of which the member secured his full pay.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Nobody questions that.

Mr. SAYERS. I had no knowledge of the form of certificate to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] refers. I never used such a form myself, but used only the one which has been read.

Mr. HULL. My impression is that there was no modification of the printed form, but the change was simply written in.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And members had a right to do it.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask now that the certificate which is being used in the present Congress be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salary, 189—.

No. —. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE U. S.,
Washington, ——— ——, 189—.

I certify that there is due to the Hon. ——— ——— four hundred and —— dollars, as a member of the House of Representatives for the Fifty-fourth Congress.

——— ———, Speaker.

$41—. Received payment, ——— ———.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, members will readily see the difference between the two certificates.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentleman this question: Is the law which has been referred to, and which has been read at the Clerk's desk, operative now, or has it been repealed?

Mr. SAYERS. It has never been repealed. The law as read is still in force.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Of course the gentleman will understand that we deny that the law is still in force; we contend that it was repealed, and was not in force during the last Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is an open secret in this House—it was an open secret in the last Congress—that many gentlemen obtained their full monthly salary notwithstanding the fact of their absence and notwithstanding the further fact that they were not absent because of sickness of themselves or of any member of their families. The gentlemen who will be the beneficiaries of this appropriation if it should be made, and I am not one of them, because there is not a penny due me by reason of service in the last Congress—the gentlemen who will be the beneficiaries are those who signed the form of certificate first read and subjected themselves to deduction for absence that was not because of the sickness of themselves or any member of their families.

To show the injustice which occurred, let me state that other members of that Congress who were in a similar situation construed the law differently. I am not going to call in question the motives which induced them to adopt a different construction. They were honorable and capable gentlemen—many of them good lawyers. But suffice it to say, sir, that this difference of construction between the two sides of the House in that Congress, Democrats and Republicans, operated to the disadvantage of those Democrats and Republicans—for there were Republicans also—who could not sign the certificate first read without allowing deductions for absence not caused by sickness either of themselves or some member of their family.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman from Texas, and if he will allow me to ask him a single question I will not again interrupt him.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well; I will yield for that purpose if the gentleman will agree not to interrupt me any more.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will put it in writing.

Is it not true that the amount appropriated in this bill will go to the members of the last House who did not receive pay for their services in the Fifty-third Congress?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And money was withheld from them under a misconstruction of the law.

Mr. SAYERS. That I do not agree to.

Mr. LOUD. Perhaps the gentleman himself is one of them.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, yes; "the gentleman" is one; and I do not intend to vote on the question, either. I hope the gentleman will remember that.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to show a specimen of operation under that law.

Inasmuch as my good friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], without any provocation whatever, saw proper to assail the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and myself, I intend to take advantage of this occasion to show from the records of the last Congress, after the 4th day of April, 1894, the following fact: Of the number of roll calls, 101 in all, the gentleman is recorded as voting only on 30, and as not voting on 71.

Mr. LACEY. Perhaps he was paired.

Mr. SAYERS. No; there was no pairing about it.

At the third session of that same Congress the gentleman from Illinois voted 38 times, and failed to vote 9 times out of 47 roll calls. And yet, Mr. Chairman, upon the list of those whose salaries were deducted, and which list has been furnished to the Committee on Appropriations, we do not find the name of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LACEY. Is any Senator's name on that list?

Mr. SAYERS. None.

Mr. LACEY. So they construe the law to be no longer in force, evidently.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). And so the truth is that my friend from Illinois—

> Has digged a pit, and digged it deep,
> And thought he'd catch a brother;
> But in the pit he fell himself,
> That he had digged for another.

[Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman, I suppose, appreciates the poetry, does he not?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is Texas poetry, I suppose. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said in the commencement of my remarks, I intend to vote for the amendment, because I think the law that I have caused to be read is still in force, and because I believe that the opinion given by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary in the last Congress was a correct opinion with reference to it, and that the pay of members ought to be deducted for absence that was occasioned by any cause other than on account of the sickness of themselves or some member of their families. The committee is now brought face to face with the question whether or not it will strike out this clause, so that it may be determined whether or not the law which I have read was and still is in force, and whether or not the action of the Speaker of the last House of Representatives was in that respect correct.

A minute more in conclusion. If members of the committee think the certificate in use by the present Congress is a proper one, and that the certificate used in the last Congress was not the proper one, then it is their duty to vote for the clause and against the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who were members of the last House and who are members of the present Congress ought to have this matter fully explained and the reason why the action suggested by the gentleman from Texas was taken.

The members of the Fifty-third Congress will remember that a heavy Democratic majority prevailed in that Congress, and that, notwithstanding that fact, they got into bad water and could not get a quorum here on many questions. Now, the Speaker of that House, who was a good lawyer—I do not know whether the Committee on Rules advised on the question or not—arbitrarily had that document prepared for the members of the House, to sign before receiving their pay. That action at once led to an investigation of the law, because that deducting feature had not been in force for many years; and such lawyers as my friend Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts, Mr. RAY of New York, and other good lawyers, who occupied seats on this floor, after careful consideration, came to the conclusion that the law did not have any existence and should not be applied at the present time, because the operation of the act destroying the per diem pay, and declaring an annual salary of $5,000 a year for a member of Congress, instead of the per diem pay, by implication repealed all former laws in regard to the salaries of members of Congress.

Now, the question arose between the members. There was an honest difference. I would state very frankly that when that paper was handed to me, and I gave the law careful examination, I believed there was no law in existence upon the statute books which either authorized the Speaker to make such a deduction as that or compelled me to sign a paper docking myself; and being made a judge of the law in my own case, I decided the law in my favor, and refused to sign any certificate of that kind. [Laughter.] I am not among the members who have been docked, because I did not believe and do not now believe that the Speaker had a right to do what he attempted to do. But, nevertheless, before the Speaker agreed to modify that paper, a great many members of the House, who did not give this matter much attention, signed that paper the moment it was put upon their desks, and it went into the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and these men were docked.

Now, this is simply an appropriation of $13,000 to pay that money back to them. The question raised here is, if these men believed they were not entitled to that pay, why should the money be refunded? I want to say that three-fourths of the men who signed that paper because it was the policy adopted by the Speaker did not believe then that they were entitled to be docked, and they do not believe it now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this matter is not decided to-day, it will come back to this Congress year after year. The amount involved is very small. If I could reach the men who inaugurated the policy of putting members into that situation, I should not hesitate to vote to deduct the salary from them, but I say it is not right to deduct it from other members.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why did not that Congress make this appropriation itself?

Mr. MAHON. That Congress made an appropriation to pay the full amount of members' salaries, and it was put into the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms, who is not an officer of the Speaker of the House, but is a disbursing officer of the United States. That money was put there for me, and I went there and took it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why did they not make the same kind of an appropriation as this which is included in this bill now to pay them what had not been paid before?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me answer that. It was offered, and voted down on a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But if they had made it the law that the Sergeant-at-Arms should pay the money, he could not have withheld it from them.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But they did not make it the law. They defeated it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why did they defeat it?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Because there was a Democratic majority of about 110 votes.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more. I ask this House to vote this amendment down, because if you do not, the next Congress will have this same matter brought before it. I ask you to vote it down, because I do not believe that there is a lawyer on the floor of this House who examined this case thoroughly when it was before the House who believes there was any law in existence authorizing any disbursing officer, at the dictation of the Speaker or any other officer of the House, to deduct the salary from him that had been voted to him under the law of the United States. And if it was taken from them wrongfully, let us vote this $13,000 to pay these members of the Fifty-third Congress who are entitled to this sum.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] comes here this morning with a very placid countenance and a mild and dove-like manner to get a Republican House to wash the dirty linen of the Democratic Fifty-third Congress. He says that he was a member of this subcommittee that brought in this amendment to pay these men this $13,000. I will say to the Republican members of the House that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] was the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the Fifty-third Congress, and if he had been as solicitous for his Democratic friends in the closing days of the Fifty-third Congress as he seems to be in the closing days of the Fifty-fourth Congress, he could have put this appropriation into the deficiency bill of that Congress, instead of loading it upon a Republican Congress and then going out and claiming before the country that we are extravagant in our appropriations. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman misunderstands me. I am going to vote for an amendment to strike out this appropriation.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman says that he is going to vote for the amendment to strike it out. Why, Mr. Chairman, did he not make that motion when this item was reached? Why did he wait for some one who was not a member of the committee? He was vociferous here in his opposition to the appropriation for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and secured three hours of time to debate that question; but he was as silent as the grave on this matter of the $13,000 that it is proposed to distribute among his Democratic colleagues, that ought to have been paid to them in the Fifty-third Congress, according to his own statement this morning.

Now, what I object to is not so much paying these men as the manner in which it is forced onto this Congress. It is always the case with these gentlemen; if there is anything of a questionable character like this they will refuse to act when they are in power and will wait until the Republicans are in possession of the House, and then come around with their arguments and induce good-natured Republicans to adopt and become responsible for their delinquencies. The gentleman has seen fit to call attention to the number of times that I did not vote in the last Congress. Does that show that I was not here? Not at all. The gentleman knows as well as I know that I was engaged in committee work in the Ways and Means Committee room scores of times when there were roll calls, and did not respond, the same as he himself has done. He knows that on all important questions I voted. He undertakes to make a personal arraignment of me to avoid the effect of the motion I make, that affects us from a party standpoint, and not from the individual.

I claimed in the Fifty-third Congress, when this rule was adopted by the Democratic majority, that it was a violation of the law and a violation of the individual rights of members. I stood with the Republican members of the House. But the gentleman from Texas, at the head of the Appropriations Committee, with more than 110 majority upon his side, sustained the then Speaker of the House upon all these propositions; and when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] arose to a question of personal privilege and insisted that the House did not have the legal right nor the moral right to take from him the salary that has been given him by statute, he was opposed by the vote of the gentleman from Texas and by the almost solid Democratic vote of that House. Is it proper for Republicans at this late day to come in here, after these Democrats have certified that they are not entitled to this money and after they declined to appropriate this alleged deficiency in the Fifty-third Congress, to add $13,000 to the already large appropriations of this Congress? Why, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I can not yield now. I have listened to the arguments of the leaders upon the Democratic side about our extravagance in this Congress. We have had two set speeches by gentlemen of the minority side of the Committee on Appropriations already, arraigning us for extravagance. If these Democratic members want to be paid, let them take it up in a Democratic House, but not ask us to reverse the position which they voted upon themselves and enforced upon Republicans——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object to the gentleman saying "take it up in a Democratic House." We do not propose to have any. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me now?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand that many of the Republican leaders of the House are on this list; and why should the gentleman make it a political issue?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I make it a political issue because it is political, and made so by your party. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] and those other gentlemen then insisted it was proper to deprive these men who certified as I have indicated of the money he now would have a Republican Congress pay them. Every man whose money is detained there is detained on the certificate which he made, in which he said that he was not entitled to the money.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman must remember that the Democrats did and had supposed every other member was going to fill out the certificate.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Why did not the Democrats in the last Congress go on and have this paid instead of asking that it be paid at the present time?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be recognized, except to try to close debate at some given time. I would be glad if it could be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendment shall be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. CANNON. What time would suit the gentleman—twenty-five or thirty minutes? Say thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments be limited to thirty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I can be recognized, I have no objection.

Mr. WANGER. I object.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee do now rise; but I can close debate now. I move that debate be closed in thirty minutes.

Mr. BOATNER. Can the gentleman take me off the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if the gentleman makes the point of order, as the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Louisiana. But the Chair will recognize the gentleman later, if he yields.

Mr. BOATNER. I will yield informally. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold his motion for a few minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; the gentleman has the floor, and I am powerless.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the attempt of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to inject political animus into this question is entirely inappropriate. The question is not whether a Republican House shall relieve any number of Democratic members from the consequences of ill-advised action of a previous House which was Democratic; it is not whether this rule or law was enforced by a Democratic or by a Republican House, but whether it is now or was then a law. If the statute which has been read at the instance of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] was then a law of the United States, it is a law now as much as it was while the Fifty-third Congress was in session, and every member who is absent from this Hall with or without leave, except in the case of sickness of himself or his family, ought to suffer a deduction from his salary for the number of days he is absent. If that was a valid and binding statute, then this appropriation ought to be stricken out of this bill. If it was not a statute, then the appropriation ought not to be stricken out of the bill, because those who suffered these deductions have not received the salaries which the law of the United States provided that they should receive.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, the action of the Fifty-third Congress in this respect was wrong, and whether he now desires to prosecute an appeal from the action of that Democratic House in order to have the error corrected?

Mr. BOATNER. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I will state that I spoke on this floor two or three times in opposition to the course that was pursued by the then Speaker and by the managers of the House in making these deductions. I dissented from the report of the Judiciary Committee holding that that was the law, and insisted all the time that the salary fixed by law should be paid to members without deduction for the time they were absent by leave of the House. Gentlemen who did not suffer any deduction under the rule escaped it by failing to certify the number of days that they had been absent. They had to suppress the fact that they had been absent at all in order to be paid their full salaries, and in this way escaped the loss suffered by their more conscientious colleagues, who did not feel justified in suppressing the fact that they had been absent. If the statute which the gentleman from Texas has had read here was the law, it ought to have been enforced, and all who absented themselves should have suffered the deduction which it provided, regardless of the certificate of the member. The fact should have controlled, and not its suppression. If it was not the law then, it is not the law now, and it ought not to have been and ought not to be enforced by withholding from some members the salary fixed by law and which their colleagues have received

Mr. LOUD. Yesterday I made a statement which the gentleman from Louisiana contradicted. I read from the RECORD:

> Mr. LOUD. Of course the gentleman well knows that members were allowed to interpret that law.
> Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Now, I desire to read to the gentleman the form of certificate which members were required to sign, and I remind him that the Speaker took special care to say that each gentleman must interpret the law for himself. In the certificate is this language:

> I have been absent —— days, for which deduction should be made under section 40 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California said yesterday that all those who suffered the deductions had signed a certificate that in their opinion the deduction should be made. I said he was mistaken. I am one of those who refused to sign that certificate. Instead of certifying that deduction should be made under that section of the statute, I certified that I had been absent so many days with the leave of the House, for which no deduction ought to be made. That was the certificate I signed. Now, I submit again, in conclusion, that the question for our Republican friends here to consider is not whether they are going, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] expresses it, to take their "Democratic friends out of a hole," but whether they are going to decide that this is a law, a binding statute. If it is, every gentleman who has received compensation for the days he was absent from this House has received it unlawfully and ought to return it to the Treasury. Every member who continues to receive compensation for days that he is absent will continue to receive it unlawfully. If you want to go to the country upon the proposition that this statute is in force, we have no special objection to that, but we will ask that you conform to the rule which you lay down.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to have unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and the amendment close in thirty minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this ought not to be a very difficult question, and it would not be if gentlemen would remember that conditions exist now just as they existed during the last Congress. Then the Speaker adopted a certificate which put upon every member of the House the obligation and gave to every member of the House the right to determine whether section 40 of the Revised Statutes was in force or not. He accepted a modification from every gentleman who chose to make it which gave him his pay, so that after all each one of us, as a matter of conscience, was able to determine for himself whether under the law he was entitled to the compensation that he received.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just there?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would prefer not to, as I have only five minutes and the gentleman has had his say.

Mr. BOATNER. I only wanted to correct the gentleman in a statement that he was making.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Chairman, every member of this House did elect and determine for himself whether he was entitled to his pay or not, and if he failed to get it it was because he gave a construction to the law which justified the Speaker of the House in withholding it from him. That is the situation. I would like to ask these gentlemen what change of conviction has come over them since that time? Then they said by their acts, by the certificates which they made, by the omission to make any interpolation in the certificate—they said they were not entitled to pay for the time they had been absent. If they were not entitled then, will they accept it now?

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I do not wish to interrupt him, but I wish to say, in behalf of those gentlemen whose names appeared in the list which was furnished to the Committee on Appropriations, that not a single one of them came to the committee or to the subcommittee in connection with this matter; and I suppose that they were entirely ignorant of the fact that this clause was in the bill when it was reported. We simply had before us the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] for the payment of Mr. Wise.

Mr. HEPBURN. The explanation of the gentleman does not aid the situation an atom. Under his explanation, it is an insult to offer this money to these gentlemen. They said before that they were not entitled to this money. Are we going to force it upon them now, notwithstanding their assertion in their certificates that they were not entitled to it?

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will, for a question.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to correct a statement of the gentleman which, as I understand, involves a misapprehension of facts. I know that one member—my colleague, Judge LAWSON, of Georgia—stated that he was not absent any days for which his salary ought to be deducted, and he protested against the deduction. He furthermore stated, however, what was the fact, that he had been absent. He protested against the deduction, but it was made anyhow.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did he protest in his certificate?

Mr. BLACK. He did, as I understand.

Mr. BOATNER. I did the same thing, and a great many others.

Mr. HEPBURN. My understanding is that whenever a member changed the form of the certificate so that it would read, "I certify that during the month of ——— I have been absent no days for which deduction should be made under section 40 of the Revised Statutes," that certificate was ample. Now, if the member refused to insert the word "no" in that blank it was because he believed that section 40 was in force. If he believed that section 40 was in force, then he is not entitled to his pay for the period of his absence.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman will allow me to say that my colleague, Judge LAWSON, protested on the back of the certificate that none of his pay should be deducted.

Mr. HEPBURN. But he made the certificate showing an absence. If he had certified that he had been absent no days for which deduction should be made——

Mr. BLACK. That is what he did certify, as I understand.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] yield for a correction?

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not desire to yield to anyone, if the Chair will protect me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed without interruption.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, in this view of the situation, I think the argument of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] is not a cogent one. He says:

Let us pay these claims now, because if we do not, these applicants will come here year after year.

Mr. MAHON. My statement was that in the Fifty-third Congress the position of the Republican party was that no such law was in existence. I do not want to stultify the Republican party; I want to reaffirm the position which they took then.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think you will stultify them in taking the position for which I now contend. This was a question for each man; the Speaker put it upon each man; the majority of the House permitted him to put it upon each man. Therefore each member accepted the situation in accordance with the form of certificate which he chose to sign.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, there are some other features of this famous transaction which, while we are airing it here, we might just as well let the country understand. There was some doubt in the minds of some gentlemen about the validity of the claim set up that section 40 of the Revised Statutes was in force. The movement was a Democratic partisan movement, made by the leaders on that side to hold together a disintegrating party of men. The conditions which resulted in the election of 1896 were already manifesting themselves on the majority side of this Chamber, and for the purpose of holding up the members, as a highwayman holds up a man of inferior strength, they adopted this scheme. The lawyers upon the Judiciary Committee—every Republican lawyer and a part of the Democrats—decided that the law had been repealed. Every lawyer with knowledge enough to be a justice of the peace, it had seemed to me, ought to have known it had been repealed. There was no question about it when intelligent men came to analyze it. The requirement of any such certificate as members were then called upon to sign was simply a mode of coercion sought to be held over members here. I utterly refused in any manner to stultify my standing as a lawyer. I denied that the law was in force. I denied the power of the Speaker to put to me any terms by compliance with which I must draw the money that had been appropriated for the payment of my salary. I refused to have anything to do with the proceeding. And I got every dollar of my pay.

That was not all that was done. There was just enough uncertainty in the minds of some gentlemen to make it advisable to have a bill introduced to make the law plain. Such bills were introduced by myself and others. They went to the Judiciary Committee. Everything would have been explained, everything would have been made straight and right, but for the fact that when the committee reported back favorably one of those bills the Speaker refused to recognize anybody to call it up, the majority of the Judiciary Committee refused to order it to be called up, and the House stood here gagged, absolutely gagged, by a power that they could not overcome unless they reorganized the House and turned the committee out of power.

It was holding an insulting proposition up in the faces of the members of this House. And now, as highly as I have always esteemed my friend from Texas, and as thoroughly as I have always tried to follow his leadership on matters of this kind, I would like very much to have him tell the House of Representatives why he did not move, in the latter days of the last House, to secure action, after the result had been worked out, after they had been able to keep their followers here and hold their noses to the grindstone by the fear of having their pay deducted, why he did not attempt to secure the enactment of some provision of law on the subject?

Mr. SAYERS. I can tell the gentleman that I never was a member of the Committee on Rules. I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and had nothing in the world to do with the matter to which he has referred.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then why did not my friend put it into the deficiency bill, and make this provision, if he did not believe that law was in existence?

Mr. SAYERS. Because I believed then, as I believe now, that the law was and now is in force. I have not changed my views in that regard.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Do you still hold it to be in force?

Mr. SAYERS. I do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then would you be willing to pay a man money from the public Treasury that does not belong to him?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not propose to pay a man money from the public Treasury that does not belong to him. I propose to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois striking out this provision.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I know that there are many men who lost a moiety of their pay by reason of the operation by that provision of law——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (interrupting). The gentleman from Ohio evidently does not understand the scheme of the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman is going to talk one way and vote another.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In other words, he will talk for Texas and vote for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not understand the statement of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only said, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the gentleman from Texas was talking one way and voting another.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. I propose to vote to strike out this provision.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I am wrongly informed.

Mr. DOCKERY was recognized.

Mr. SAYERS. I hope I can have two or three minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has all been allotted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I do not talk one way and vote another on any question. I never have done so since I have been a member of Congress, and never expect to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. SAYERS. No; I have but two minutes. I do not talk one way and vote another, and any statement to that effect is absolutely without foundation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, I did not hear the gentleman's remark; but I understood the gentleman from Indiana to make the statement, and I simply repeated what had been suggested by him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. And the gentleman from Texas now declines to allow me a question bearing upon that very point.

Mr. SAYERS. Because I have but two minutes' time. The gentleman can take his own time.

I said I was opposed to the proposition, because I believed the law was in force, and is still in force, and I am going to vote, therefore, for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out this appropriation.

And, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, as I understood the gentleman from Ohio to say that no man who was fit to be a justice of the peace believed that law was in force and was binding on the members of that Congress, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the report of the Judiciary Committee of the last House on this particular question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask to have printed, in connection with the report of the gentleman's speech in the RECORD, also the minority views.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly, let them both go in.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes' time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I have been a member of this body now for nearly fourteen years, and since this question was raised on yesterday evening I have examined my record of absences, and find that in all of that time, on account of sickness or from other causes, I have been absent just twenty-one days. I knew nothing whatever of the proposition in issue as stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] until it was printed and offered in the bill; and the gentleman from Texas has stated the reason why it is now before the committee.

I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois regardless of any differences that may exist in the minds of lawyers as to whether or not section 40 of the Revised Statutes is or is not in force. I support it for another reason. Whether wisely or unwisely, the Democratic party in the Fifty-third Congress, or at least its recognized head, decided that section 40 of the Revised Statutes was in force, and thereupon certificates were prepared and used of the form just read at the desk upon the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. I signed those receipts voluntarily. I made a voluntary reduction of my own compensation, and having done that, I am constrained, regardless of the action of the House and the contention of lawyers as to whether this statute is repealed, to adhere to my own action in respect to this matter. This is all I care to say on the question. I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] for one minute.

Mr. CRISP. In the very brief time allowed me of course it will be impossible to make a speech. Mr. Chairman, I think I am about as familiar with the action of the last Speaker on this subject as anyone. He always took without question the certificate as made by the member, and certified to it. The Judiciary Committee of the Fifty-third Congress, composed of able and learned lawyers, decided that section 40 of the Revised Statutes was still in force, and I have here the report prepared by Mr. Wolverton, of Pennsylvania. I thoroughly agree with the report of the committee that the section referred to has not been repealed and is still the law. Believing that, I shall support the amendment to strike out the appropriation. I ask consent to print as part of my remarks the views of the majority of the Judiciary Committee of the Fifty-third Congress on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to printing the report in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. Wolverton) is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution introduced by Mr. Kilgore March 2, 1894, respectfully report as follows:

Section 6, Article I, of the Constitution says:

"Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services to be ascertained by law and paid out of the Treasury of the United States."

Section 5 of the same article provides:

"Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

The act of August 16, 1856 (Stat. L., volume 11, page 48), provides the following compensation for members of Congress:

"That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $6,000 for each Congress and mileage as now provided by law, for two sessions only, to be paid in manner following, to wit: On the first day of each regular session each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for the first session, and, on the first day of each month thereafter during such session compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum during the continuance of such session, and at the end of such session he shall receive the residue of his salary due to him at such time at the rate aforesaid still unpaid: and at the beginning of the second regular session of the Congress each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for such second session, and monthly during such session compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum until the 4th of March terminating the Congress, and on that day each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall be entitled to receive any balance of the $6,000 not theretofore paid in the monthly installments above directed."

This remained the law regulating the compensation of members of Congress until the act of 1866 (Statutes at Large, volume 14, page 323), which provides:

"That the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session."

From this time until the passage of the act of 1873 the compensation remained at $5,000 per annum. On March 3, 1873 (Stats. L., volume 17, page 486), provision was made in the appropriation bill as follows:

"Each Senator, Representative, and Delegate is entitled to a salary (except as to the Speaker) of $7,500 a year."

And provision was made that it commence at the beginning of that Congress. This is generally known as the "salary grab act." It was promptly repealed in the following year by the act of January 20, 1874 (volume 18, Stats. L., page 4). By this act Congress repealed so much of the act of March 3, 1873, as increased the salaries of members of Congress to $7,500 per year, and provided that the same shall be as fixed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of the act of March 3, 1873.

This, in effect, revived the laws as they stood prior to March 3, 1873, and was, in effect, a reenactment of them. Section 40 of the Revised Statutes is the sixth section of the act of 1856 above recited, by which the salary of each member was fixed at $6,000 for the Congress, or $3,000 per annum. It was introduced because of the argument against fixing an annual salary for members of Congress, that they would absent themselves because of the fixed salary per annum and neglect public business. It is as follows:

"SEC. 40. The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payments of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or some member of his family."

Under the provisions of this section of the Revised Statutes there can be no question but that a member of Congress is not entitled to receive pay for any day when he is absent from the House unless he can assign as the reason for his absence his own sickness or the sickness of some member of his family, and it is purely a question for him to consider whether, if he desires to attend to his personal business, it will be worth more to him than his daily pay or salary as a member of Congress, or, if he chooses to absent himself on a trip for pleasure, whether he prefers that to drawing his per diem salary or the amount of the salary which he would have been entitled to receive if he would have been in attendance in the House.

This was enacted in 1856 and was observed until about the Thirty-seventh Congress, during the war, when quite a number of members of Congress were officers in the Army, and the enforcement of the provisions of this section was waived, and it has not since been rigidly enforced. The practice under this section, your committee is informed, was to require each member to state on his honor at the end of the month, or the time he drew his pay, how many days he was absent in violation of the provisions of this section. Deduction was then made from his salary and the amount so deducted covered into the Treasury.

This law has never been repealed either directly or by implication and is in force to-day, and, in the opinion of your committee, it is the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to make the deduction required by this act from the salary of each member at the time he draws his pay.

It may in many cases work a hardship, but it is the law, and as long as it remains upon the statute books should be enforced. It became a law in 1856 and was a part of the act which fixed the salary of members at $3,000 per annum. In 1866 the amount of this salary was changed to $5,000 per year, and in 1874 the law fixing the salary at $5,000 a year was reaffirmed and reenacted, but no law has ever been passed since 1856 changing either by implication or directly the terms of section 40 of the Revised Statutes.

The resolution as originally introduced called upon the Sergeant-at-Arms to show cause why he had violated the provisions of this statute, as his predecessors had not for many years enforced this statute.

Your committee have prepared a substitute for the one presented in the House on March 2, 1894, by Mr. Kilgore, as follows:

"Whereas the laws of the United States, section 40, chapter 4, of the Revised Statutes, provided that the Sergeant-at-Arms shall deduct from the monthly payment of each member the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the House, unless such member assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family; and

"Whereas the provisions of said section 40 have been disregarded for many years and great abuses have grown out of such disregard of the law: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms strictly observe and enforce the provisions of said section 40 and report to the House monthly his proceedings thereunder and each month pay into the Treasury of the United States the sums deducted in the due observance and enforcement of the law as declared in said section."

Your committee recommend the passage of the foregoing as a substitute for the original resolution.

The views of the minority (by Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE) which were subsequently ordered to be printed in connection with the report (see below) are as follows:

A minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, being unable to concur in the report of the committee, respectfully submit their views as follows:

The act of March 16, 1856 (Statutes at Large, volume 2, page 48), fixing compensation for members of Congress, provides—

"That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $6,000 for each Congress, and mileage as now provided by law, for two sessions only, to be paid in manner following, to wit: On the first day of each regular session each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for the first session, and on the first day of each month thereafter during such session at the rate of $3,000 per annum during the continuance of such session, and at the end of such session he shall receive the residue of his salary due to him at such time at the rate aforesaid still unpaid: and at the beginning of the second regular session of the Congress each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for such second session, and monthly during such session compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum, until the 4th of March terminating the Congress, and on that day each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall be entitled to receive the balance of the $6,000 not theretofore paid in the monthly installments above directed."

The sixth section of that act, now known as section 40 of the Revised Statutes, provides—

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and Secretary of the Senate, respectively, to deduct from the monthly payments of members as herein provided for, the amount of his compensation for each day that such member shall be absent from the House or Senate, respectively, unless such Representative, Senator, or Delegate shall assign as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family."

A joint resolution was passed by Congress, approved December 23, 1857, which changed the act of 1856 only in regard to the payment of all compensation which had matured up to the beginning of the sessions of Congress, at the beginning of the Congress, instead of at the end of the session. We do not find that it affects the question at issue, and only refer to it because it is the next step in legislation upon this subject.

In 1866 Congress passed an act relating to the compensation of members (see Statutes at Large, volume 14, page 23) which provides—

"That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session."

When this law went into effect the practice of deducting any portion of the monthly payment to each member on account of absence was abandoned, and the members were paid, under the act of 1866, one-twelfth of $5,000 on the fourth day of each month.

The question is whether or not the act of 1866 repeals the act of 1856. This is really the main question at issue. There is no language in the act of 1866 which expressly repeals the act of 1856, and, if it is so repealed, it is only by implication. There is no doubt but that the first section, providing a compensation of $6,000 for each Congress and for its payment on the first day of each month while Congress was in session, at the rate of $3,000 per annum for the days on which the member was present at the session, and for the days upon which the member was absent on account of sickness, and the residue at the end of the session, is repealed. And in fact it is not claimed that any part of the act of 1856 pertaining to compensation is still in force, except the sixth section, now known as section 40, Revised Statutes. The question then is, Has the sixth section, as well as the rest of the act pertaining to compensation, been repealed by the act of 1866, or was it in force from and after the passage of that act? The rule of law governing the repeal of statutes, impliedly, by subsequent statutes, is well understood. It was held in Milne vs. Huber (3 McLean, 212) and in the United States vs. Irwin (5 McLean, 178) that "a later statute repugnant to a former one on the same subject-matter, so that they can not stand together, repeals it by implication."

And again, in Davies vs. Fairbairn, reported in 3 Howard, 656, it was held "that if the subsequent statute is not repugnant in all its provisions to a former one, yet was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule, it repeals the former."

In Johnson's estate (33 Pa. Reports, 511) and Gwinner vs. Railroad Company (55 Pa., 126) it was held—

"That a subsequent affirmative statute is a repeal by implication of a former one made concerning the same matter if it introduce a new rule upon the subject and be evidently intended as a substitute for the former law."

In Com. vs. Crossent Railway Company (53 Pa. Reports, 62) it was held—

"That if two acts be inconsistent the latter must prevail."

Is the act of 1866 repugnant to that part of the act of 1856 known as the sixth section? This section declares it to be the—

"Duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, respectively, to deduct from the monthly payment of members, as herein provided for, the amount of his compensation for each day that such member shall be absent from the House or Senate, respectively, unless such Representative, Senator, or Delegate shall assign as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family."

The language is specific, and is "to deduct from the monthly payments of members as herein provided for," clearly meaning that the deduction was to be made by the Sergeant-at-Arms from the monthly payments of members as provided by the act of 1856. We look to the first section to see how the monthly payment of the member is provided for, and we find that the member was to receive on the first day of each month during the session compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum. The member was not paid by the year, but by the session at the rate of $3,000 per annum on the first day of each month. Or, in other words, during the session, on the first day of each month, he was to receive $250, provided he had been in attendance regularly each day during the previous month. Remember that under the act of 1856 there was no provision for payment for absent days while Congress was in session. And it was the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to keep time upon the members and make the deductions for absent days, unless the member assigned sickness as a reason for his absence. The Sergeant-at-Arms was to deduct from the monthly payments, as in that act provided for; and the monthly payments in the act provided for being $250 per month, he could only deduct for each absent day in a month of thirty days the sum of $8.33, that being the amount of his compensation for each day.

Now, the act of 1866 declares that the compensation of each member shall be $5,000 per annum. There is no authority in the sixth section to deduct from the monthly payment of members as provided for in the act of 1866, but the authority of the sixth section is limited to deducting from the monthly payments of members as provided for in the act of 1856. You can not stretch the authority to deduct from the monthly payments of members beyond the limit expressly provided for in the act of 1856.

And as the payment there provided for could not exceed $8.33 per day in any month of thirty days, then if the sixth section is still in force, it would not authorize a deduction of more than $8.33 per day for absence.

At present our purpose is to confine ourselves strictly to the question whether the act of 1866 repealed the sixth section of the act of 1856 by implication. Is it repugnant to the act of 1866? And to say that the sixth section was intended by the Congress which passed the act of 1866 to stand, and authorize the deduction of $8.33 from a daily compensation amounting to $13.70, is but stating a proposition which bears upon its face the best evidence of repugnance.

Again, the act of 1856 was clearly intended, not only in the sixth section but in the first section, to insure the constant attendance of members upon the sessions of both Houses. The compensation was to be $6,000 for each Congress. It was not to be by the year or the month, but at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and the member was really not awarded, or intended to be awarded, any compensation for the days absent for any cause save sickness. But the act of 1866 changes the whole plan of compensation and puts the members upon a salary of $5,000 per annum. It makes no provision for deduction on account of any absence whatever, and in our judgment repeals the sixth section of the act of 1856 by implication as plainly and as clearly as it repeals the first section.

The best evidence that this was the intention of Congress is the fact that for twenty-eight years the sixth section of the act of 1856 has been treated by every Congress and every Speaker as repealed, and no attempt has been made during all these years to enforce it, nor has any member observed its provisions. We are, therefore, forced to the conclusion that the sixth section of the act of 1856 was repealed by the act of 1866 by implication.

But it is claimed that by the enactment of the Revised Statutes on June 22, 1874, the sixth section of the act of 1856 was reenacted and continued in force, and we now proceed to consider the second question involved.

In the appropriation bill approved March 3, 1873 (Stat. L., volume 17, page 486), the salary of members was increased to $7,500 per year. On January 20, 1874 (Stat. L., volume 18, page 4), Congress enacted as follows:

"That so much of the act of March 3, 1873, entitled 'An act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874,' as provides for the increase of the compensation of public officers and employees, whether member of Congress, Delegates, or others, except the President of the United States and the justices of the Supreme Court, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the salaries, compensation, and allowances of all said persons, except as aforesaid, shall be as fixed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of said act."

This act not only repealed that part of the act of March 3, 1873, fixing the salary of members of Congress at $7,500 per year, but it enacts that the salaries, compensation, and allowances of members shall be as fixed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of said act on March 3, 1873.

In Bradshaw vs. United States (14 C. Cls. Report) it was held by Judge Richardson—

"That the act of January 20, 1874, repealing the increase of salaries act and providing that the salaries, compensation, and allowances of all such persons shall be fixed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of said act, was intended to restore salaries and officers and employees to the same status of compensation that they previously occupied."

We turn now to that date, viz, March 3, 1873, and find, if our reasoning on our first proposition is correct, that at that time the act of 1866 was in force, fixing the compensation of the members at $5,000 per annum and repealing the act of 1856, including the sixth section of that act.

But it is claimed that section 40, Revised Statutes, was enacted with the enactment of the Revised Statute and is yet law. That would be true but for the saving clause in section 5601, Revised Statutes, which the committee seem to have overlooked in their report. That section provides as follows:

"The enactment of the said revision is not to affect or repeal any act of Congress passed since the 1st day of December, 1873, and all acts passed since that date are to have full effect as if passed after the enactment of this revision. And so far as such acts vary from or conflict with any provision contained in said revision, they are to have effect as subsequent statutes and as repealing any portion of the revision inconsistent therewith."

Now, the act of January 20, 1874, repealing the act increasing salaries of members of Congress and other officers, was passed after the 1st of December, 1873, and as that act expressly reenacts the laws fixing the salaries and compensation of members in force on March 3, 1873, which was the act of 1866, fixing salaries of members at $5,000 per year, the status is the same as if the act of 1866 was reenacted on January 20, 1874, by express words, and under and by virtue of section 5601, Revised Statutes, the fortieth section of the Revised Statutes, which is the sixth section of the act of 1856, is not to affect the act of 1866 reenacted by the act of January 20, 1874, because the act of January 20, 1874, was passed subsequent to December 1, 1873, the date when the Revised Statute went into effect. In Bradshaw vs. United States (14 Ct. Cls. Reports, page 81), it is held—

"The Revised Statutes were passed June 22, 1874, but embraced the statutes in force December 1, 1873 (Revised Statutes, section 5595). Between those dates Congress passed many acts repealing and altering previous statutes which were incorporated into the revision. It is, no doubt, the correct construction that all such acts are to be taken as having, to that extent, altered the Revised Statutes."

We therefore respectfully submit that the Sergeant-at-Arms has no legal authority to withhold from the members any portion of their salary on account of absence.

WILLIAM A. STONE,
ROBERT A. CHILDS,
THOMAS UPDEGRAFF.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a view of this question which has not been presented to the House. It is this, that it was not entirely a legal question with a member in signing a certificate as to whether section 40 of the Revised Statutes was repealed or not. It was not simply a question whether the facts were presented to the Sergeant-at-Arms or not. The views of the then Speaker of the House were what controlled, for his certification was essential before payment. The Speaker took the view that section 40 was in force, and required every member of the House to certify, not whether any deductions ought to be made, but whether they ought to be made by section 40 of the Revised Statutes.

Now, there were those of us on this side of the House who took the view that, while section 40 of the Revised Statutes was repealed by implication, the Speaker, by his action in courteously relying upon our statements and acting thereon without question, practically put us upon honor to disclose to him whether we had been absent for other causes than sickness of ourselves or members of our families. Gentlemen did not all take that view; but some of us did, and added to the certificates when we certified to the fact of absence that these deductions ought only to be made in the event that section 40 of the Revised Statutes was unrepealed. All reservations of that kind were disregarded and the deductions were made. Now, I submit to those who took the view that the section was repealed and that they were not bound in honor to disclose the facts to the Speaker that it is scarcely fair to punish us whose judgment was different because a minority of the Fifty-third Congress refused to take the action now proposed in this bill.

On March 2, 1895, in the closing days of the Fifty-third Congress, 150 members voted for the passage of a resolution against 70 who voted in the negative, to direct the Speaker to certify to the Sergeant-at-Arms for the payment of those balances. It required a two-thirds vote to pass the resolution, and 15 members answered "Present." Only for that reason did the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress fail to provide for making these payments.

Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Bynum] found on page 3161 of the RECORD of that Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I have been absent but one day since this construction of the statute has been enforced. I have not been sick a single day. So that so far as the effect of the law is concerned, I have no practical interest in it. I do not know that I should vote for this resolution had the construction been uniform. It, however, is a question, and a close question, whether it is or is not the law. A great many members of the House insist that the act of 1866 repealed the act of 1856; and they are strongly supported by the fact that after the act of 1866 became the law no deductions whatever were made for absence until the present session of Congress. No effort was made to enforce the provision of the act of 1856 which required a per-diem deduction on account of absence. For twenty-eight years it was the uniform construction of every Congress that the act of 1856 was not in force.

Now, the Senate of the United States is controlled by the same statute. The best lawyers in the Senate insist that the act of 1856 was by implication repealed, and the Senate has refused, even since the House has attempted to enforce it, to place any such construction upon it. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the members of the Judiciary Committee of the House are divided on this question; and a majority of the legal profession, I believe, are of the opinion that no deductions of pay are required.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, independent of the question as to whether this law under which this action was taken be still existing as a valid law or not, this House acted practically as if it were operating under a rule of the House, after a decision by the political majority of the House that it would so operate. There is no doubt of the fact that this House had a right to pass any rule to regulate its own business and to enforce the attendance of its members. It has now the right to pass a rule to fine a member $10 or $14 for each day of his unexcused absence. Whether that fine be put in the form of a deduction from his salary or a fine to be collected in some other manner makes no difference. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has made an appeal to the Republican side of this House, which I hope will be heeded, as it should be.

I want to appeal to the Democratic side of this House now not to stultify itself by coming here in one Congress and sustaining a rule one of the consequences of which was to take money out of the pockets of some of its members, and then come back in a subsequent House and declare that that rule was wrong because it has taken the money out of the pockets of some of its members. It seems to me that if it was the law then it is the law now. If the Speaker of the House had the power to do what he did, this House ought to sustain that power and not carry itself back. I hope the Democratic members of the House will not put themselves in the position before the country of self-stultification, and, as it seems to me, of almost worse than that, which this action, in my opinion, would put them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] I injected a statement in which I defined what I considered to be the position assumed in this debate by the gentleman from Texas. I remarked that his position seemed to be a peculiar one, that of talking one way and voting the other. Now, the gentleman from Texas rose, I thought, in unseemly haste and placed upon my remarks a construction not intended by me.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not intend to do that. I did not know that the gentleman made the remark.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman seemed to think that if a man was inconsistent he must necessarily be dishonest; and the answer made was that never since he had been a member of this House had he been in the habit of voting one way and talking the other way, an answer broader than the accusation I had made against him. I only had reference in what I said to this specific instance.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw all I said about the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, the gentleman is a member of the committee which reported the measure under consideration. He did not see fit to rise upon this floor and make a motion to strike out the objectionable feature, but left it to another gentleman, not connected with the committee, to make that motion. Now, I understand the gentleman's position, according to his own statement, to be that he proposes to vote in favor of this motion striking out the obnoxious feature of the bill. Whether or not such a vote is inconsistent with the statement that he has made in debate upon this question, I leave the RECORD to attest. Gentlemen who have heard his remarks upon the pending motion will bear me out in the statement that not a solitary thing has been said by him that does not militate against the motion to strike out. Herein lies the justification of the observation made by myself while the gentleman from Ohio was speaking.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to a question of privilege at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the time has passed in this House when any gentleman can be carried off his feet without retaliating. We had that demonstrated here the other day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has raised the point of order that——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am proceeding to state——

The CHAIRMAN. That the gentleman is not speaking to a question of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am endeavoring to proceed in order. I must choose my own language and the manner in which I shall arrive at my question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask leave to proceed in order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman that when a point of order is made and sustained there is but one thing for him to do, and that is for him to be seated; but that on a motion of a member he may be allowed to proceed. I feel no interest in the matter except to state that.

Mr. LEWIS. I make the motion that the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I would now like to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, what I desire to ask is this: Whether when a member is proceeding with a matter of personal privilege he is to be the judge of the language he is to use and the way in which he is to reach that question?

The CHAIRMAN. When a gentleman is stating a question of personal privilege, and any member of the House rises to the point of order, it is for the Chair to determine whether it is a question of personal privilege or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The question of sustaining a point of order, I believe, is subject to appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is the Chair to determine, or the member himself, the manner in which he shall reach his question of privilege—the character of the language he is to employ?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not lay down an invariable rule in regard to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair thinks it must be manifest to the gentleman himself——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the Chair is doing that very thing now—laying down an invariable rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman hear the Chair a sentence? The Chair thinks it must be manifest to the gentleman himself that what he was stating was not a question of personal privilege. If, therefore, another gentleman asks that the gentleman be allowed to proceed, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I desire to say that I have no difficulty whatever in hearing the remarks of the Chair, in view of the exceedingly loud tone of voice in which they are made.

Now, what I desire——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly. "The gentleman from Indiana" has no desire to be otherwise than in order. The Chair has hit the pith of the matter in the statement that it was impossible to lay down arbitrarily in what language a member should be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair? Otherwise debate is out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair. I do not consider it of sufficient importance for that. I have stated practically what I rose to state, and am reasonably well satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I twice asked permission of the Chair to be recognized, and the Chair denied me that right; and I took the guise of personal privilege with the view of saying what the Chair had denied me the opportunity to say in the regular way, and I have said it and am satisfied. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana take his seat and be in order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why, with pleasure. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to state that many gentlemen asked to be recognized upon this amendment after the time for debate had been limited to half an hour. The Chair parceled out the time to gentlemen who asked for it in the order in which they made application. Several gentlemen applied after the time had been parceled out, and among the latest the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] sent a request to the Chair for recognition. The Chair sent to the gentleman a statement of the facts in the case, and that is the only refusal the Chair made to recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is now recognized for the balance of the time remaining under the order of the committee—five minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Fifty-third Congress upon this question may go into the RECORD with the majority.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, of my five minutes, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee for a moment to the form of the certificate that was commonly accepted. In the start, it was insisted that the blank should be signed in precisely the form in which it was printed. Subsequently, the Speaker modified his opinion and permitted members to insert the word "legally," so that a member could certify: "I have been absent —— days, for which no deduction should be legally made." That form of certificate was commonly used. However, $12,000 or $13,000 was deducted from salaries where members appended a statement that they had been absent so many days for which deduction ought not to be made.

Now, there is just one other question. In the last Congress we were divided as to what the law meant. Republican members generally believed that that old statute was inoperative——

Mr. CANNON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There is just one question at issue here, and that is whether this money was wrongfully or rightfully withheld. This side of the House think it was wrongfully withheld and ought to be paid. The other side of the House think, or thought at the time, that it was rightfully withheld. Therefore it would be entirely consistent for them to vote to continue to withhold it. That is all there is in the matter.

Several MEMBERS. That is all.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, a word in conclusion of this discussion. Section 40 of the Revised Statutes, if it was in force in the last Congress, authorized the withholding of these salaries. If it was not in force, the money is due to members of the last Congress to the extent of $12,000. It was the Democratic contention that the statute was in force, and a majority of the Judiciary Committee of that Congress said that it was. The minority of the Judiciary Committee thought it was not in force, and many Republicans took that ground. Those Republicans and those Democrats who believed that the statute was repealed certified, notwithstanding their belief, in the form that has been read from the desk. Those who believed the statute was in force, or who were in doubt and upon their consciences did not desire to certify to a falsehood, also made certificates, and the deductions were made from them. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] says that the law was not in force. He was paid in full. Other gentlemen said they were not sure, and they were paid only in part. Now, to-day, if we appropriate this money, it is saying that, in the legislative opinion of this House, that statute is not in force. If we refuse to appropriate this money, then we say that the construction placed by the last Congress upon that statute was correct, and that it was and is in force. That is the whole matter, and now I am ready for a vote.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. One moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired by order of the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I make the point of order that no member of the Fifty-third Congress whose name appears on the list of those from whom deductions were made has the right to vote on this question. I make the point under the rule which provides that—

No member shall vote on any question if he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

Now, in the Forty-third Congress——

The CHAIRMAN. That rule is undoubtedly in force, and it is for each member to determine whether he is interested in the question or not.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the Chair hear me on that question for one minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. The Committee of the Whole will come to order.

Mr. BAILEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. When order is restored, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] to be heard further on the point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. One word on the question of order. I understand the Chair to decide, so far as the Chair can decide the question, that the rule forbids members who are interested in the decision of this question from voting. Now, I am perfectly sure that the object of the House in adopting the rule in question was to prevent members from voting in favor of their own interests. The rule could not have been intended to prohibit members from voting adversely to their own interests. I am perfectly sure, therefore, that while gentlemen who are interested in the refunding of this money might or might not feel a delicacy in voting against the amendment and for the appropriation, gentlemen who are interested can not be criticised if they vote against the appropriation. That is my own attitude in the matter. I am interested, but I am going to vote against the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply stated to the gentleman from New York that the rule is still in force, and that members of the House must decide for themselves how they shall vote. If a member actually interested in the question within the meaning of the rule should vote, then, in the opinion of the Chair, the question might be raised and the vote challenged. But the Chair hardly feels called upon to decide in advance who may or may not vote under the terms of the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Now, if the Chair will permit me, I should like to say one word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized on the question of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The rule is broad. It says no member shall vote on any question in which he is interested. It is voting at all that is inhibited; it is not voting one way or the other. We will assume, for instance——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Under the gentleman's construction of the rule, how can we pass an appropriation bill by the votes of members of the House, if it contains appropriations for their salaries?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Because we are interested in such an appropriation bill as a class, not as individuals. In this particular question we are interested as individuals.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I decline to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is arguing a point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The Chair has overruled the point of order, and I submit that the gentleman is now out of order in continuing his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York desires to be heard further. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The Chair has decided that the gentleman from New York is in order. The Committee of the Whole will please be in order, so that the Chair can hear the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. As I understand the rule, Mr. Chairman, a member may vote on a bill in which he has an interest as one of a class; but if his interest be that of an individual, he is inhibited from voting. That was the decision in the first session of the Forty-third Congress, when the question was raised as to the right of certain members to vote on a bill affecting national banks. Now, here certain members of the Fifty-third Congress have a direct, personal, individual interest in the question at issue, because under the appropriation proposed to be made they will be entitled to varying amounts; they will not all be entitled to the same amount. The position in which one member stands may be very different from that of another member.

Mr. RAY. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has declined to be interrupted.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for me to allow myself to be interrupted by all the able lawyers on the other side of the House and still adhere to the trend of my argument. I will allow the gentleman to interrupt me in a moment.

Now, the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], whom I concede to be a very able lawyer, is that we must construe the language of this rule as if it read, "No member shall vote on any question in which he is personally interested, provided he is going to vote in favor of the side on which his interest lies." I submit to the Chair and the House that what is prohibited here is that a member who is interested shall speak at all by his vote on a question in which he has a personal interest. He must sit silent; he must cast no vote on the question. Now I yield a moment to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY. The position which my colleague from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] takes on this question would prohibit every member of the present Congress from voting upon the pending appropriation, because every member of this House is individually concerned and interested in determining the question whether or not section 40 of the Revised Statutes is in force or has been repealed.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is an entirely different proposition. The question now presented is whether the $12,000 carried in this bill shall be paid in varying sums to members of the Fifty-third Congress. It is not a question of a revision or repeal of section 40 of the Revised Statutes. That section either is or is not repealed, and that is all there is of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

While the rule is in force it is for each member to determine for himself whether he is interested or will vote on any question.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois, to strike out the paragraph ending with line 4 on page 55, on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were—ayes 113, noes 55.

So the motion was agreed to; and the paragraph was stricken out.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, after line 4, insert:
"To pay William Tyler Page for clerical services rendered in the Clerk's office during the Fifty-fourth Congress, $500."

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, while this amendment was not formally agreed upon in the Committee on Appropriations, so far as the members have been seen they desire to have it adopted and incorporated in the bill. It pertains to the services of the assistant clerk of the file room, who has done great service and ought to be paid. So far as the members of the committee have been consulted, they agree that it is an entirely proper appropriation and ought to go into the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the Official Reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House of Representatives and the official stenographers to committees for moneys actually paid by them from March 11, 1896, to March 4, 1897, for clerical hire and extra clerical services, $720 each; and to John J. Cameron $240; in all, $5,280.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, after line 13, insert:
"To pay John H. Barnsley the difference between the pay of a folder and that of a messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day, from July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1897, inclusive, $594.95."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe the point of order would lie against that proposition. This man was doing nothing at that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the point of order ought to be sustained, for if it is sustained a very large number of items in the bill must go out on the same ground. It stands on precisely the same footing with them.

This is a compensation, as will be seen, to pay the person named in the amendment a small sum of money in addition to his regular salary. This particular person is on the rolls as a folder, but does not perform the duty of a folder, while he does perform, and performs exceedingly well, the duties of a messenger to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and also performs the duties of assistant doorkeeper at the door nearest to the Speaker's room, the most important one, perhaps, in the House. He has performed these duties since the beginning of this Congress, and exceedingly well—nobody better. Where others performing similar services, however, are receiving $1,200 a year, he receives but $60 a month as folder, from which he must pay a certain sum monthly to the janitor for the care of the room of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

It seems utterly unfair and unjust that this official, a courteous gentleman, should perform these duties and receive only half the compensation that other persons performing like services receive.

I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In reply to the statement of the gentleman from New York, I merely desire to say that neither this man nor anyone in his situation was performing any duties on the 1st day of last July. The truth of it is that the Republican party was so greedy for places for its favorites that for the first time in the history of the House it turned out the barbers in the Democratic cloakrooms and filled their places with men who did not perform any services; and now you come here and ask the House to agree to double the salary of this man and others who were doing nothing through all the summer time. You are ready and anxious to vote money to Republican employees, and yet I saw you stand here and vote that the act which provides for the deduction of the salaries of absent members shall apply to a Democratic Congress, and at the same time avowing your determination not to respect that statute when applied to your own cases.

I have seldom witnessed a more despicable piece of pettifogging than the arguments which have been presented on that side of the question. You ask us to say that the member who believes the statute has been repealed shall have no deduction made in his pay, while another who believes that it has not been repealed shall suffer, because his construction of law happens to be against his personal interest. You have advertised yourselves to the country as willing to let the judgment and conscience of the individual member regulate his salary. You have exhibited yourselves to the country as willing that those of us who believe the law is still in force shall obey it, while you, with consciences elastic enough to defy it, go on taking your salaries. You have earned as bad an opinion as the country could pass upon you on so small a question.

I wonder that the great Republican party is willing to carry its partisanship so far. I wonder that it is willing to follow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] in his assertion that because the Democratic House, in his opinion, has done wrong a Republican House must not rectify it. He contended then that the rule of the Democratic House was wrong. He was joined by a majority of his associates on that side. Many of you drew your full salary throughout the Fifty-third Congress, contending that under the law you were entitled to it, and yet with that money in your pockets you deny to others what you have taken for yourselves. Either the law had been repealed as to everybody or it was in force against everybody; and I can not comprehend the honesty and logic of men who exempt themselves from the provisions of a statute which they are eager to apply to others. Whatever we may think of your consistency, we thank you for approving the action of a Democratic House, which not only obeyed the law, but which reestablished the sensible and honest rule that when a man was absent on his pleasure or his private business he should not draw salary for public duties which he did not perform. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

To pay Charles Carter and Harry Parker, for caring for subcommittee rooms of the Committees on Appropriations and Ways and Means, $75 each, $150.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that item.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think it is subject to the point of order. It is an appropriation that has been made for many years in these precise words, and for the precise purpose, and for services actually performed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why does it not come in the regular bill?

Mr. CANNON. Simply because it is current law, and has been appropriated for for many years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why does it not come in the legislative bill instead of in the deficiency?

Mr. CANNON. Because it has always come in the deficiency bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I do not think that establishes its right to come in the deficiency bill. If it is a matter which should have come in the legislative bill, why, it should be appropriated for there and not in the deficiency bill. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The Chair can rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Harris A. Walters the difference between the pay of a folder and that of a messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day from July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1897, inclusive, $504.95.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order against that paragraph, Mr. Chairman, beginning with line 23.

Mr. TRACEY. That paragraph is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is identical in words with an amendment which I offered, which was stricken out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

To pay Robert A. Stickney for services rendered in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives from January 9, 1896, to March 4, 1897, inclusive, $1,383.34.

Mr. CANNON. I shall not make the point of order on this item.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order against that item, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CANNON. I call attention to the fact that the item is subject to the point of order if the preceding item was.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to raise the point of order against it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to have the gentleman state the facts about this.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some law is produced authorizing it, the Chair will assume there is none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand this man to have been regularly employed by the Clerk of the House, and that he actually performed the services in the file room.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the question I submit to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is whether the Clerk had the authority to make this employment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MCMILLIN. There is no such authority, I think.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in connection with that paragraph, the point of order having been made, that at the first session of this Congress a resolution was offered and referred to the Committee on Accounts, embodying the matters stated in this paragraph. That committee made an investigation and determined against the resolution, and reported it adversely to this House in June, 1896, and the report of the committee, adverse to the resolution, was ratified by a vote of the House. Hence there can not be any existing law under which the appropriation is asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did the Chair rule on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did rule; but if the gentleman desires to be heard, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire to be heard now. I want to say a word on the merits, and will when we reach another paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the Chair is ruling perhaps without full knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY] stated that the Committee on Accounts had investigated the subject, and that they found no law authorizing this employment. The Chair has made the ruling on that statement.

Mr. TRACEY. There is no question but that Robert A. Stickney has done this work, and is still doing it. But I stated that the resolution authorizing his employment was referred to the Committee on Accounts. I think the resolution authorized his payment out of the contingent fund. The committee made an investigation and reported the resolution adversely, for reasons that were satisfactory to the committee, and that report was ratified by a vote of the House in June, 1896, and there has been no subsequent action taken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This young man had been at work, and working right along every day since.

Mr. TRACEY. There is no question about his doing the work.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And now he ought to be paid for it.

Mr. TRACEY. There is no doubt he ought to be paid; he did the work.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would suggest that the appeal should be addressed to the gentleman from New York, who raised the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no interest in this, but it seems to me that when an intelligent young man is employed by the House of Representatives, or by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, when he pays his board and clothes himself, and does something, whether that is hard labor or not, he ought to be paid for it. I have an old-fashioned idea about not stealing.

Mr. DOCKERY. Had not the gentleman from Ohio better appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] who interposed the point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the point of order. This is a meritorious claim for a young man who has done work for the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has he received no compensation?

Mr. GROSVENOR. None, whatever; and he has paid his board.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that in the proper conduct of the business of this House the action on the part of a committee having jurisdiction upon the matter refusing to employ a man ought to be notice to this man to quit, and that the officers who did employ him ought not to pretend to employ him. That seems to be the case up to June, but from that to some time last year he was not employed with authority. I do not think any officer ought to employ without authority to employ.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He has been doing work for the House that is always required to be done.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But it seems that the Committee on Accounts determined the work was not necessary to be done, and when they do not need a thing done there should not be employment given and they ought not to have it done. I do not know anything about the merits of the case, except what the gentleman says. We ought to have some remedy, or the House will have itself loaded without end with employees. I think every employee required ought to be retained, and all who render service to the House ought to be paid.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not understand that the Committee on Accounts said that the labor was not needed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understood the gentleman to say the Committee on Accounts determined that it was not necessary to employ a man, and so reported.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understood the gentleman to say that they so reported to the House. I will ask the gentleman, did I understand that correctly?

Mr. TRACEY. Not at all correctly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would like to hear, then, what your statement was.

Mr. TRACEY. Now, I will make a little further statement in order that the matter may be more clearly understood. When the resolution was originally referred to the Committee on Accounts, we made an investigation. I made the larger portion of it myself. I talked with the Clerk of the House, and I talked with the Journal Clerk and with the file clerk. I ascertained first that there was a man detailed to do that work originally, and that after he had been there three months he was taken away and that then this young man went into the Journal Clerk's office. After talking with the Clerk of the House, and after being told by the Clerk of the House that he had no authority to employ him in that capacity, he said that the work was there to be done, and if he cared to do it he could do so. That information comes from the Clerk of the House to me. He went in with that understanding.

Now, the Committee on Accounts took this view of it: That inasmuch as they were charged with the responsibility of payments being made out of the contingent fund, that they at least ought to be consulted before accounts against that fund should be created. That is the view the Committee on Accounts took of it, and, taking that view, they could do nothing else than report that resolution adversely. They did. Now, as to the work. My investigation leads me to conclude that it is absolutely necessary that some one shall be there to do that work that this young man has been doing. I do not believe in the employment of men without authority of the committee charged with the responsibility of payment of the fund, or of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, by unanimous consent I would like a few minutes touching this and kindred items.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. In the last Congress, in the Congress before that, in every Congress that I have served in, there have been at least one-third more employees than enough to do all the work. We have not cut them off, we are not going to cut them off, whichever party is in power. The employees are around, they render themselves personally agreeable, and in this House of Representatives we desire to accommodate each other and to accommodate the employees without reference to which party dominates here.

Let me call attention to a few facts. Here in the document room they had enough employees to run the business of that room without Joel Grayson, but they did not do it. He was appointed. You all understand who he is. In sheer self-defense he was employed to work in that room, and he gets, I believe, $1,500 a year.

Again, in this very room where Mr. Stickney was employed there were enough employees there for one to have been detailed to do this work, but that was not done. Stickney was informed that he could go in there and work and take his chances of being paid. He was out of a job, he was thoroughly competent, and he relied upon the assumed fairness of the House to pay him if he went in and did the work; and he doing work which under proper administration somebody else might have done, the months passed on, and we put this item in the bill, but it is subject to the point of order.

Take another case. The gentleman from Ohio brought in an item of $500 to pay this young man in the file room. He did the work, but why was it necessary for him to do it? On inquiry, we found that the employees there wanted three or four months' vacation, and bundled up and went off, and this poor boy, being quite as competent as any of them, went in and did the work and took his chances of being paid. The committee did not feel like turning him down, and the point of order was not made on that item.

Again, take those two boys whose item went out on a point of order. They are laborers who have been attending to two large committee rooms. They have been there for years, and this allowance—$75, I believe—I believe has come to be the yearly provision for each of them. That item went out on a point of order, and rightfully when the point was made. Now, I have stated very frankly why these items were put in the bill, and I trust that if any of them go out, they will all go out.

Mr. MOODY. Whose fault is it that we have this superfluous number of employees?

Mr. CANNON. It results from the desire of members of this Congress and the desire of members of the last Congress and the desire of members of every Congress in which I have served to have their friends appointed on the House force somewhere.

Mr. FLETCHER. By whom were they appointed?

Mr. CANNON. By the Clerk and by the Doorkeeper and the officers generally. It is so now, it always has been so, and I suspect that as long as human nature remains as it is, it will continue to be so, at least during the gentleman's lifetime and mine. That is all I have to say about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Guy Underwood the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger in the hall library, at the rate of $3.60 per day from July 1, 1895, to June 30, 1897, inclusive, $594.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay, under resolutions of the House, Isaac R. Hill, at the rate of $1,500 per annum; Thomas A. Coakley, George L. Browning, and George Jenison, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each; C. W. Coombs, at the rate of $1,800 per annum, and James F. English, at the rate of $900 per annum, from March 4 to December 1, 1897, inclusive, $5,790.50.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. I call my friend's attention to the fact that even-handed justice should be done.

Mr. CROWTHER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McMILLIN. These are not on the same footing as the others. These men were employed by resolution of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has called my attention specifically to this paragraph, inviting me, as he did on prior paragraphs, to raise the point of order. It seems to me that there is a difference between this and those other paragraphs. This is a courtesy that has been extended to the minority for a great many years. When the Republicans were in a minority, the same courtesy was extended to them, permitting them to name certain employees of the House, and for that reason, because it has been customary to extend this courtesy to the minority, I do not wish to accept the invitation of my friend from Illinois to raise the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise a point of order against one of the men named in this paragraph, C. W. Coombs.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point comes too late, the question having been debated.

Mr. HULL. I tried to address the Chair as soon as the reading was concluded.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the record will show that there was no point of order made before the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] made the point of order before the gentleman from New York took the floor.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CROWTHER. That this is new legislation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In reply to that, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have the facts, and the facts are that the House passed a resolution authorizing the employment of these men.

Mr. GROSVENOR. For services to be rendered after the House was dead?

Mr. CANNON. It is subject to the point of order. It is merely a question whether the House wants to pass this by unanimous consent or not.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. There is one gentleman named in this paragraph against whom I wish to make a point of order. I remember distinctly the way in which he was put on the roll and the time to which his employment was limited, and I want to ask the Chair this question: If the point against the entire paragraph is not sustained, what effect will that have upon a point of order against a particular item in the paragraph? I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] raises a point of order against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that raising a point of order against the entire paragraph would not preclude raising a point against any particular part after the decision of the other point of order.

Mr. HULL. That is exactly what I supposed. But I want it clearly understood that my right to raise a point of order upon a part of the paragraph in this particular case is reserved.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the Chair will find it specifically stated in the rules that when any part of a paragraph is subject to a point of order the whole paragraph is obnoxious to the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be true.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the Chair will find it to be correct.

Mr. FOOTE. I should like to know the rate at which the gentlemen named in this paragraph are now paid, whether the paragraph allows them their present rate of pay or gives them an increased rate?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. Perhaps the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can answer it.

Mr. CANNON. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. FOOTE. I should like to know whether the rate proposed to be paid to the gentlemen named in this paragraph is the same that has been paid heretofore, or whether the paragraph proposes an increase?

Mr. CANNON. I understand there is no increase proposed. I can put the Chair and the House in possession of the exact facts. This paragraph is the usual form of such paragraphs—like those that have gone out on points of order. Paragraphs of this kind have appeared in the bill during many years. These people are employed at this time under a resolution of the House, and are paid from the contingent fund. Their employment, by virtue of the resolution under which they are now serving, can not go beyond the 4th of March next. A paragraph of the kind now under consideration, carrying employees of this kind over the interval between the expiration of one Congress and the commencement of the next, have been usual in deficiency bills heretofore. But the paragraph is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state for the information of the House that in all previous Congresses since I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations the majority have always extended to the minority, no matter which party was in power, the courtesy of adopting just some such provision as this.

Mr. CANNON. That is true; but it was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, yes; I agree that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. They were appropriated for in the general appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. It can hardly be said that paragraphs of this kind were adopted by unanimous consent. They were brought in as a part of the appropriation bill.

I know that in the case of Captain Currier, from my own district, an old soldier, a Democratic House put him through by resolution, and then, exactly as in this case, a provision was brought in on an appropriation bill to carry him over until the succeeding session.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true.

Mr. HENDERSON. This bill does for the Democrats exactly what the Democrats did for the Republicans.

Mr. HULL. This does more.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope that my friend from Iowa will not interpose a point of order against this provision.

Mr. HULL. I would like to be recognized for a minute or two.

Mr. DOCKERY. I appeal to my good friend from Iowa not to make a point of order.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] has raised a point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. CROWTHER. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. HULL. As a reason for my point of order, if it become necessary to make it, I wish to say that I remember very well the debate which was had on the resolution putting Mr. Coombs upon the pay roll of the House. The minority had been accorded the usual number of officers without Mr. Coombs, but he had been in the employ of the House for a great many years and had placed some members under obligations to him. When the Republicans undertook to fill his place with a new man, it was stated by some gentlemen on this side, as well as by gentlemen on the other, that we needed Mr. Coombs to educate our man. In other words, that a new man could not properly discharge the duties of the office. There was no pretense that two men were needed permanently for the performance of this duty. We have now had our man educated by this gentleman—if he ever needed it; and I never believed that he did. If Mr. Vail can not perform the duties of the office now, let him give way, but do not keep both.

This is a new office created by a resolution of this House to give Mr. Coombs a place until the 4th day of March. I do not believe that the House needs an extra man in this line of duty, or ever has needed one. The man who was appointed to the place was thoroughly competent to discharge the duties of the office from the day of his appointment, and his familiarity with the office now is unquestioned. I do not believe that Mr. Coombs himself can come knocking at the doors of Congress and as an object of charity ask this compensation. Not only he himself, but his son and his grandson are in the employ of the Government, his son, as I understand, holding two offices, the pay of which aggregates $3,600 a year, and spelling his name in one case with two "o's" and in the other case with only one. I believe that the present minority ought to have every courtesy extended to them which has been extended to us when we have been in the minority. I would be the last man to deny this much. But this is not courtesy to the minority, but favoritism for one man. But strike Mr. Coombs from this bill and we shall still extend to the other side the same courtesy which has been extended to us in the past. There are the usual offices accorded the minority still left. On this proposition to eliminate the name of Mr. Coombs from the bill and destroy pure favoritism I trust that my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who as the great economist of this House has taken the place of the sage from Indiana in guarding the Treasury, will unite with me in lopping off an office that is not needed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir; always.

Mr. HULL. Of course, I understand that some men are uncharitable enough to say that my friend from Missouri, through the Dockery Commission, discharged many clerks and put in others in whom he was interested.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, right there I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. HULL. I will in a minute.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me now.

Mr. HULL (continuing). I do not believe, for my own part, in such charges. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will unite with me in striking down this extravagant abuse, inaugurated by a Republican House on the appeal of our Democratic friends, backed by some gentlemen on this side of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say to the gentleman that I have not a single appointee in the Treasury Department at Washington.

Mr. HULL. I am very glad to hear it, and know the gentleman's denial will stop such gossip as I have referred to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me say further, Mr. Chairman, that the joint commission referred to was always unanimous in its findings, and during the two years of its existence partisanship was absolutely unknown to its deliberations.

The only thing that I attempted to accomplish relating to patronage was to protect the appointees of certain prominent Republicans, gentlemen some of whom I now see before me, and it gave me pleasure to speak in their behalf. I repeat, I have no appointees in the Treasury Department at Washington, and I did what I could to protect the appointees of Republicans on this floor and representatives of my own political faith.

Mr. HULL. Then you and I are together on that, as I have none.

Mr. DOCKERY. There was not one single appointment that came to me as a result of the work of that commission. On the contrary, let me say to the gentleman from Iowa and to the committee that it was probable I could have secured one or two appointments, but I declined to ask this recognition, because I did not want to put myself under the suspicion of effecting reforms that patronage might follow.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has stated with great clearness and a great deal of fairness the real situation of the pending question. The employees who are embraced in the point of order of the gentleman from Missouri do not stand on the same footing as those who have been ruled out on the points of order made heretofore.

In the first place, they are officers of the Government borne on the rolls of the Government by appropriations heretofore made. In the second place, they were retained by a resolution agreed upon in this House, against which there is no decision or opposition, giving to the minority that same courtesy that we when in the majority gave to the other side, now in the majority. There has never been a violation of that courtesy since I have been a member of this body, now some eighteen years past. I trust it will not be insisted that there shall be a violation of it now.

I make that remark as to those who are appointed as a courtesy extended to the Democratic party and selected by caucus, and who are already borne on the annual rolls. A resolution of the House authorized their appointment, and there is not now nor has there been any question as to the propriety or regularity of their appointment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly on the question of order pending.

It is easy to say smart and cutting things. It is the cheapest intellectual production you can find in any legislative body. But I think there are some things that are easier; and one is, to be perfectly fair and candid with each other.

My colleague mistakes the case entirely when he says that Colonel Coombs's friends pleaded for the passage of the resolution in his behalf in order that he might become a teacher or instructor of his successor. I participated in that debate myself in behalf of Colonel Coombs, and used no such argument. I never heard it used until it was used on this floor to-day, from the fresh and gushing memory of my colleague from Iowa.

Colonel Coombs was pleaded for because of the merits of the man, and for that reason alone. I have served here for some fourteen years, and I can not name a man who is more efficient or of greater help to my constituents than C. W. Coombs. It is for that reason that I fought for the resolution to put him on here. I was impelled by no other purpose, Mr. Chairman.

There is a man from my district whose body is full of lead, received for his country, who was put by two Democratic Houses on the rolls as an additional officer, and kept there and tided over the 4th of March by an appropriation bill exactly as this bill.

It is usual; it is simply fair play between side and side of this House, and I beg of the gentleman who makes the point of order to have respect for the traditions of the House, to the courtesies of the House, and withdraw the objection and let this go in as it has done heretofore by the Committee on Appropriations, which ranks second to none in scanning closely matters represented in the bill and recommended to the House.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, this case has taken a very wide scope and has developed some remarkable statements. The name of C. W. Coombs on this deficiency appropriation bill is absolutely new legislation. There is no question at all about that. And I well know that the resolution appointing this gentleman a special messenger of this House was adopted at the earnest solicitation of my esteemed friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. He tells us that Colonel Coombs has assidnously attended to his constituents. What other member on the floor of this House can get up and say the same thing?

Mr. BINGHAM. I can.

Mr. STEELE. I can.

Mr. GROUT. I can.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let us poll the House and see.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You had better poll the House and see how many members will stand up.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will guarantee that he has refused no request.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We will guarantee that his son is drawing two salaries.

Mr. GROUT. He is not his son.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not believe he has ever refused to give attention to the request of any member.

Mr. HEMENWAY. His son is drawing two salaries.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know nothing about that, but I do not believe it. He can not do it under the law.

Mr. CROWTHER. In the discussion of the various propositions upon this bill, it has been claimed by gentlemen on the other side that the Republicans were greedy in their desire to obtain place, even so far as to turn out laborers from the barber shop, for the purpose of putting in constituents of their own. Yet here is a Republican House, by nearly 100 majority, that gave this gentleman the position of special messenger, when we had selected another gentleman to fill the position that he had occupied.

Mr. HULL. And if the gentleman will yield for a suggestion, in order to do it, the House created a new office.

Mr. CROWTHER. Created a new office.

Mr. HULL. An office that never was known before.

Mr. CROWTHER. Now, in the development of this discussion, let us see what we find. On page 325 of the Blue Book you will find the name of C. C. Coombs, an attaché of the Surgeon-

General's Office. He is a son of C. W. Coombs, the special messenger of the House of Representatives. He is drawing there $1,400 salary.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is he not under the civil service?

Mr. CROWTHER. No, sir—yes; Democratic civil service. On page 193 of the Congressional Directory you will find the name of C. C. Coombs, credited to the District of Columbia, as having been born here, and as having been appointed to perform the duties of an office at the other end of the Capitol, drawing a salary of $2,220 per year. That is the same son of C. W. Coombs, the special messenger of the House of Representatives. Go over to the Senate Chamber and you will discover on the roll of that body the name of Charles Coombs, another son of C. W. Coombs, special messenger of the House of Representatives, drawing a salary of $900 a year—a total for one family under this great roof here of $6,320 per annum. Will my Democratic friend, when he goes down on the hustings in Texas next year, tell the people there about Republican extravagance, and refer to this remarkable instance of Democratic economy and Democratic civil-service reform? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled, under this condition of affairs, to raise the question of order against this paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana and Mr. BLUE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, after the gentleman gets through with his remarks, I shall call for a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to bear testimony to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] in regard to the manner in which this employee, Colonel Coombs, was placed upon the rolls of the House. Gentlemen argue that the House created a new office for this man. If that is true, then the point of order is not well taken, because if it created a new office, this is simply to provide a fund for the payment of that official.

A MEMBER. Only until the 4th of March.

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman says that it was limited to the 4th of March, but I understand that it was the purpose of that resolution at the time to add this employee to the force of the House and put him in the same attitude as the other employees of the House and that he should be paid just as they were paid. I wish further to bear evidence to the fact that this man has been as faithful in work as any employee of this body, and I desire to say in corroboration of what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] said, there is no man in the employment of the House who has done more for my constituency than has this esteemed employee, Charles W. Coombs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, as I have been unfortunate in obtaining recognition to-day, I want to add my testimony as to the intelligence and fidelity of Mr. Coombs. I have resorted to him frequently, and with success, for documents, where it was impossible for me to get them without his aid.

Mr. HULL. Why did you not get them from a Republican employee that we have in that position?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I found Mr. Coombs so efficient that it was not necessary to go to anyone else.

Mr. BLUE. If this little patronage is to be made a great political question, if this whole business is to be parceled out simply upon partisan lines, then it seems to me the House has come to a very low plane indeed. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] appealed rightfully and properly to the equity and sense of fair dealing of this body; and I do not care whether this man has grandchildren or great-grandchildren in the service, where they have been appointed by their Democratic brethren. It was their right to ask appointment at the hands of their friends. It is simply a question of efficiency. After the House has passed upon this subject and generously appointed Mr. Coombs, it does not become it to resort to this method of removing him, out of mere partisan feeling.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does my friend profess to argue here upon this floor that it is right and just for one man to occupy two positions?

Mr. BLUE. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that that is the question here.

Mr. HENDERSON. He does not occupy two positions.

Mr. CROWTHER. A member of his family is in Government employ.

Mr. BLUE. What has that to do with Mr. Coombs's employment here? The gentleman from Missouri certainly will not insist upon that.

Mr. FOOTE. Will the gentleman kindly explain why there are two House messengers in place of one; and why Colonel Coombs was kept in that place after Major Vail was put there?

Mr. HENDERSON. That was adjudicated by this House.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was by a vote of the House.

Mr. BLUE. In reply to that, when he was placed there the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] urged, and urged properly, that, under the growing necessities of this great Republic and the increased work of the House of Representatives, it was necessary that he should be added. One of the great objections I have to the manner of conducting this patronage is that it gives inexperienced officials, and that is one of the reasons, among many others, why this man was retained by the House. He was retained on account of efficiency. The new employee was not prepared to meet the emergency. I have no fault to find with Major Vail. He has been faithful and industrious. We might as well be candid and treat this as it should be treated in the proper disposition of the business of this House, and not attempt to raise points of order in this manner to carry out partisan purposes, to the detriment of the business of the House.

Mr. FOOTE. Allow me to ask one more question.

Mr. CANNON. I hope we can have this point of order decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order. It seems these employees were employed under the present rules of the House to perform specific duties, and to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. Now, the very fact that these resolutions can not carry it after the end of the present Congress—while the present occupant of the chair is aware that from time and long-honored custom of the House such employees have always been accorded to the minority, and is in full sympathy with that idea—if the point of order is insisted on, as it is, the Chair thinks that their employment after the 4th of March by appropriation is not sustained by any law, and is therefore subject to the point of order; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. Do I understand this point of order only pertains to Colonel Coombs?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is raised against the paragraph. [Cries of "Read!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the following assistants in the document room, authorized and employed under resolutions of the House, namely: One at the rate of $1,600 per annum, one at the rate of $1,200 per annum, and two at the rate of $1,000 per annum each from March 4 to June 30, 1897, inclusive, $1,573.31.

Mr. CANNON. I call the attention of my genial friend from New York to the fact that this clause is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order if my genial friend from New York does not.

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. This is a clause in an appropriation that has no law to support it. It has been brought in here for years, along with these others that were brought in, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] made the point of order. However, I am going to deal even-handed justice all along the line.

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Charles M. Thomas for extra services as clerk in the office of the disbursing clerk of the House of Representatives, $300.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon this.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I would like to inquire if these points of order are being made by the members of the committee who reported the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. They are so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is no law on which this appropriation is based, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Texas has discovered that there was no law for this since the bill has been reported?

Mr. SAYERS. I knew that there was no law for it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. When you reported the bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry as to whether it is competent for this House to appoint one of its officers as what is known as an "annual clerk," or "annual employee." Can the House do it? Is it in the power of the House to give to itself a proper complement of officers? If it is, then it is competent for the House, by the language of this resolution, to extend the period for which an officer shall serve beyond the 4th of March. The House perhaps may not be able to compensate him, or to provide for his compensation, but if it can create the office, if it can authorize the service, then a deficiency is created, and it is the function of this bill to provide for that deficiency; so that the point of order does not, in my judgment, apply against this class of cases. I think there can be no question but that this House can appoint its own officers and can extend the term of their service beyond the 4th of March. We may not be able, I repeat, to pay them beyond the 4th of March, because they are paid out of the contingent fund, but we can require the service, we can create the office, we can appoint the officer, and if there is no provision of law for his appointment, then it becomes a proper subject to be acted upon in a deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the last paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Noah L. Hawk for extra services as acting assistant deputy sergeant-at-arms, $600.

Mr. SAYERS. I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, just at this point I want to see if it is possible to pour oil on the troubled waters. I wish to try, if it be possible, to reestablish that feeling of good fellowship which has heretofore almost invariably prevailed between members on both sides of the House and which ought now and hereafter to prevail. It is a blessed thing to do unto others as you would have them do unto you. It is a Scriptural injunction, I believe, to do good to those who may have spitefully used you. Therefore, although the paragraph relating to the Democratic employees of the House has just been stricken out of the bill on a point of order, I want to do the usual and the right thing by all the employees regardless of politics. As the result of a slight misunderstanding, the committee has stricken from the bill the provision for the compensation of such employees as from time immemorial it has been the custom of the majority to give to the minority in this body. Therefore, in offering this amendment I am not doing unto others as they have done unto me, but I am proposing to do unto others as I would have them do unto me, and to that end I send to the desk an amendment carefully guarded, couched in the usual language, and similar to one which it has been the custom of the House to adopt at the close of the last session of each Congress for many years.

The amendment proposes to give to the employees who are borne on the rolls of the House and Senate one month's additional compensation after the close of this Congress, which they have so faithfully and efficiently served. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

Insert after line 13, page 57, after the word "dollars" the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1897, including the Capitol police, the Official Reporters of the Senate and of the House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the Fifty-fourth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, that is nothing more than I expected; but I want to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr GROSVENOR. I desire to be heard on that point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom in this House, as I have said, almost from time immemorial, for an amendment of this character to be offered either to the sundry civil bill or to the general deficiency bill, and to be acted upon favorably by the House. It has also been the custom, or at least it has been the practice of the presiding officer, when he had any doubt as to the point of order, to submit the question to a vote of the House and let it determine for itself whether the amendment was in order or not. A similar amendment to this has been held to be in order by many illustrious men who have occupied the chair in the past, such men as Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, Mr. Carlisle, of Kentucky, and a host of our ablest parliamentarians. The custom of voting the employees one month's extra pay was inaugurated in the Twenty-ninth Congress.

In looking over the records, I find that a similar appropriation to the one proposed was made on the following dates: August 3, 1846; March 3, 1847; August 7, 1848; March 9, 1849; September 20, 1850; March 30, 1851. In 1854 the method was changed somewhat by voting a 20 per cent increase of pay to each employee at the close of the session in lieu of one month's pay, and that practice was adhered to until 1860. So that from 1846 to 1860 the custom was followed at almost every session. From 1860 to 1879 the practice was to a great extent abandoned. In 1879, however, the custom was resumed and it has generally prevailed since then. Of recent years it has generally been the custom, without regard to the political complexion of Congress, to allow one month's extra pay to the employees of the Senate and House, especially at the end of the second session, and sometimes twice during the same Congress.

Precedents will be found as follows:

Sundry civil act of August 7, 1882; Forty-seventh Congress, first session. (22 Statutes at Large, 338.)

Sundry civil act of March 3, 1883; Forty-seventh Congress, second session. (Ibid., 632.)

Sundry civil act of July 7, 1884; Forty-eighth Congress, first session. (23 Ibid., 226.)

General deficiency act of March 3, 1885; Forty eighth Congress, second session. (23 Ibid., 469.)

Joint resolution of October 20, 1888; Fiftieth Congress, first session. (25 Ibid., 663.)

General deficiency act of March 2, 1889; Fiftieth Congress, second session. (25 Ibid., 928.)

General deficiency act of March 3, 1891; Fifty-first Congress, second session, (26 Ibid., 885.)

Resolution of August 5, 1892; Fifty-second Congress, first session. (27 Ibid., 403.)

General deficiency act of March 3, 1893; Fifty-second Congress, second session. (27 Ibid., 684.)

Urgent deficiency act of December 21, 1893; Fifty-third Congress, second session. (28 Ibid., 20.)

It will be noted from the foregoing that the almost unbroken practice has been to allow an extra month's pay at the end of each session. This was not done at the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and thus a greater reason is afforded why it should be allowed now. It was not given to the employees of the House at the last session; it is only asked at this session, being for two years' service. It has frequently been given, as I stated, at the end of each session of a Congress—sometimes at the close of three sessions of the same Congress.

Now, as it seems to be the fashion for gentlemen who are advocating or opposing amendments to this bill to state that they have no personal interest in the matter under consideration, I suppose that I must follow the fashion, and I believe that implicit confidence will be placed in my statement when I say that there is not a single person on the roll of this House or at the other end of the Capitol who has been appointed on my solicitation or because he is my political friend. I offer this amendment as a matter of justice and right—not because anyone in whom I am personally interested is to be benefited by its adoption to the extent of one dollar. I hope that the Chair in ruling upon this point of order will recognize the custom and the precedents which have hitherto prevailed and which I have hastily cited. I insist that custom makes law, and that custom in this case makes this amendment in order. If the Chair should entertain any doubt on this point, I hope the Chair will give the Committee of the Whole the benefit of the doubt and let the committee by a vote determine for itself whether my amendment is in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I take it, for the purposes of this argument, which will be very brief, that the rule of stare decisis applies in matters of parliamentary construction as well as those of legal dispute and decision. Whether that proposition is a good one or not, I know there is one principle of parliamentary law that applies here: Where the Speaker of the House or the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole makes a decision, and that decision is appealed from and the Chair is sustained, that becomes a rule of the House. It is so laid down by every writer on parliamentary law. And where no appeal is taken the same rule applies.

Now, for many years this appropriation has been recognized as in order by Chairmen of Committees of the Whole on the state of the Union. I hold in my hand the one hundred and eighteenth volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, being a part of the proceedings of the Fifty-first Congress. I desire to read a decision made at that time on this very question by the gentleman who was then acting as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. The occupant of the chair was Judge Payson, of Illinois, a very able man, a widely experienced parliamentarian, and a good lawyer. This same point of order was made at that time by a gentleman long in this House from the State of Indiana, Judge Holman, and here is the decision of the Chair, given after very full argument:

This is not a new question in the House of Representatives, nor is it new to the present occupant of the chair. When the general deficiency bill was under consideration at the last session of this Congress, the present occupant of the chair had the honor to preside as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The same question was then presented in the shape of an amendment; and at that time the Chair took occasion to examine the entire line of precedents and the history of legislation with reference to this matter, as well as the rulings which had been made upon it up to that time, and sees no reason now for changing the opinion then formed in regard to it.

The decisions have been practically unanimous for a great many years past, and especially since the present occupant of the chair has been in public life, beginning with the ruling of Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, and others succeeding him, including the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Carlisle, the Speaker of the last House, and so on down to the present time, with but a single exception, this amendment has been held to be in order, either by the direct ruling of the Chair or by an overwhelming majority in the committee when the question has been submitted for its decision.

So we have not only the rulings of distinguished parliamentarians, but we have the vote of the House sustaining those rulings or reversing rulings which have been adverse.

Following the precedents—without expressing an opinion as to what judgment the present occupant of the chair might entertain if this were an original proposition—but following the precedents and the rulings heretofore made, the Chair holds the amendment to be in order.

I do not care to add anything further. I can see no reason why the present occupant of the chair should overrule his predecessors. The House has power to appropriate funds for the payment of its employees. And its decisions are the law governing the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAYNE). The Chair is ready to decide the point of order. The Chair is aware of the line of precedents that the gentleman from Ohio has mentioned, which grew out of the practice of the occupants of the chair in submitting this question to the Committee of the Whole, instead of deciding it for themselves under the rules. The question is not new to the present occupant of the chair. The same point of order was presented during the last session of Congress upon a similar amendment, and the ruling was then made by the present occupant of the chair that the amendment was not in order. That decision was founded upon the reading of the rule of the House, which is very plain. These officers are employees of the House at certain fixed annual salaries. To give them a month's pay in addition to the annual salary is to change the salary fixed by law or resolution of the House. It is in effect adding so much to the salary. If it is not an addition to the regular salary, it is a gratuity. In either case it is not in conformity with existing law.

If this question did not appear entirely clear upon its merits to the present occupant of the chair, he would have had much more hesitancy in deciding the case when first brought to his attention; but he can see no excuse for submitting it to the House unless it is so submitted in the form of an appeal. The rule seems plain, and, although the precedents have been examined, the Chair has been unable to find any reason given for holding that this proposition is not in violation of the rules, except that it has been entertained by the votes of Committees of the Whole.

The Chair does not recollect whether the decision made by the present occupant of the chair at the last session was appealed from or not, but the House, by its acquiescence in the decision, sustained the ruling then made, and certainly made it the rule for the Chair during the present Congress that an amendment of this kind is obnoxious to the rules and subject to a point of order. Therefore, while feeling for the opinions of the eminent gentlemen whose names have been cited—Mr. KASSON, of Iowa; Judge PAYSON, of Illinois, and Mr. CARLISLE, the former Speaker of the House (especially the latter)—upon questions of law or parliamentary law the highest respect, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, as already stated before in this debate, this is not a new question, and it has almost invariably when raised been submitted to a decision of the Committee of the Whole itself. I hold in my hand a ruling of Speaker Carlisle when he occupied the chair at a similar time to this, several Congresses ago, and I will send it to the desk in order that it may be read and generally heard and understood, and will also ask to have read the ruling of the then occupant of the chair, Mr. Rogers, of Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Fiftieth Congress, second session, Mr. CUMMINGS, of New York, offered a similar amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Rogers] was in the chair. A point of order was raised, and the Chair stated (see page 2235 of the RECORD, February 23, 1889):

"That hitherto on more than one occasion an amendment precisely similar or having the same purpose in view has been submitted to the House, and the most recent decision was that of the Speaker himself, who held the amendment to be in order. The Chair happens to have that decision before him and will ask the Clerk to read certain paragraphs from it.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"'The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon an examination of the records that on two occasions heretofore an amendment similar to this—the Chair thinks in precisely the same language—has been offered and a point of order made against it, and in both instances the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, by a very large vote, held the provision to be in order.

"'Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; but does that action of the Committee of the Whole establish a rule for the control of the House? It must be apparent, Mr. Speaker, there is no law authorizing this item.

"'The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair is not absolutely bound by any decision of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, although such decision is certainly entitled to very great respect when the question has been discussed and decided by that committee, consisting as it does of the same members that compose the House itself. In order to preserve uniformity in the rulings upon this question, the Chair thinks he ought to admit the amendment and allow the House to vote upon it.

"'Mr. HOLMAN. And hold that there is a law authorizing this appropriation; that it comes within the third section of the twenty-first rule?

"'The SPEAKER. The provision seems to have been held in order heretofore upon the ground that it had been included in an appropriation bill, and was the law at least for that year.'"

The Chairman, Mr. Rogers, of Arkansas, said:

"If the Chair had doubts as to the correctness of the ruling of the Speaker, he would nevertheless adhere to it, since he would not feel at liberty while occupying the Chair temporarily to dissent from it. The Chair admits the amendment, and the committee can vote on it."

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I could multiply instances similar to that showing where this question has been repeatedly brought up before the House and the point of order made, and when the Chair had any doubt upon the question it was submitted to the committee, and invariably the committee declared that it was in order. Almost invariably, since the Twenty-ninth Congress, with the exception of the period during the war, the House has acted favorably on a similar amendment. I insist that the custom establishes the law in these matters. This has been the custom for all of these years, and I hope it will prevail now.

I do not care to elaborate to any great extent this question, or to refer further to the rulings of prior Speakers, or the presiding officers of the Committee of the Whole. It is with the greatest deference and respect that I appeal from the decision of the honorable gentleman who now occupies the chair, for whose fairness and judgment I have the greatest respect, but I desire the committee itself to have an opportunity of determining the question by a direct vote as to whether or not the amendment is in order, and then let the Committee of the Whole vote on the question upon its merits and decide whether or not this amendment shall become a part of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a word or two on the appeal, and then I am ready to vote. I suppose in former times the good-natured Chairmen of the Committees of the House have avoided the responsibility of deciding themselves the question, and have submitted it to the vote of the Committee of the Whole. As we meet the most of the employees around the Capitol, we have admitted this question from time to time when presented to the Committee of the Whole, and have decided it under the influence of good feeling and friendship for these people, and have stretched parliamentary usage, giving the appropriation whether there was law or no law about it.

The Chair has correctly announced the rule made by this Congress. It is clearly obnoxious to the point of order, and I hope the Chair will be sustained.

The question being taken, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The ruling of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, after line 13, insert:

"To reimburse the Clerk of the House for expenses incurred and to be incurred for services of a clerk and stenographer, at the rate of $100 per month, from December 2, 1895, to June 30, 1897, $1,888.04."

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the question of order on that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I simply wanted to know who made the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I am the man.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think the gentleman perhaps will not insist on that.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well, then; I wish to withdraw the amendment in order to save the gentleman from Texas from insisting on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn; and the Clerk will read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to offer an amendment at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the provisions of joint resolution of March 3, 1893, authorizing members to certify monthly the amount paid by them for clerk hire, be, and the same are hereby, extended for a period of thirty days from March 3, 1897, to Members and Delegates of the Fifty-fourth Congress who do not appear as Members or Delegates on the roll of the Fifty-fifth Congress; and to enable the Clerk of the House to pay said Members and Delegates the amount, not exceeding $100 each, which they certify they have paid or agree to pay for clerk hire hereunder, a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve the point of order on that to hear from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The effect of the amendment will be to permit the outgoing members of the House, those who were not elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress, to retain their clerks and pay them for one month longer. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CANNON. Would my friend think well of adding a month's extra pay for the outgoing members?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand the gentleman is not going out, and probably he would not be willing for that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer the amendment as an act of justice or generosity, or whatever you please. I think the Congressman who goes out and must wind up his business at the end of a short session is entitled to this consideration. He has a large amount of unfinished business on hand, and I think that the propriety of having his clerk continued in employment and paid for one month in which to wind up his business is entirely proper. I regard it as a very wise and just provision. I do not expect to go out on the 4th of March, and do not know when I shall go out. I have no personal interest in this.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. As one of the outgoing members, who would receive the benefit of this $100, I want to ask you how you defend any such proposition in the interest of economy and good government?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I generally do what I think is right, and I never defend myself. [Laughter.] That is a rule I go upon.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Your time is so taken up in doing what is right that you have no time to defend yourself?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a word, so that gentlemen will understand what this is. This is an amendment not to furnish private secretaries to members of Congress, but to furnish private secretaries to outgoing members of Congress for a month after they cease to be members. Now, I reserved the point of order. This is clearly subject to the point of order, but, so far as I am concerned, I do not intend to stand here in the presence of my colleagues who are going out and play wicked man upon this proposition. So far as I am concerned, I shall not raise the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I will play the wicked man, Mr. Chairman, and will renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] makes the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Just allow me a word. There is nothing novel or unreasonable in this. In this same appropriation bill we are paying sums to the families of dead members. There is a provision here to pay the widow of a deceased member $5,000. We extend the franking privilege upon public documents to outgoing members until the 1st of next December. We give to them public documents that are printed by order of this Congress until the beginning of the next Congress. So the fact that we extend this matter into another term is in keeping with legislation already on the statute book.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill extends the franking privilege until next December?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I say it is the law now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was saying that the principle of extending some rights to outgoing members is not a new one, but an old one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

To pay balance of judgment of the Court of Claims No. 16697, in favor of the Southern Pacific Company, certified to Congress in House Executive Document No. 168, Fifty-third Congress, second session, $1,310,427.08.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to strike out the last word. We have reached a point in this bill where appropriation is made to pay judgments of the Court of Claims. I said yesterday that when this point in the bill was reached I should offer an amendment to provide for the payment of the findings of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act. I have in my hand here a copy of a bill which has been reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], chairman of the Committee on War Claims, making appropriations for some of the findings of the Court of Claims under this Bowman Act. I believe the claims in this bill amount to $523,000. The bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on War Claims. All of the findings of the Court of Claims to date are not included in this bill, but only those that have been found favorably up to the meeting of this Congress, as I understand it, are included.

Mr. Chairman, that is only a portion of what the Court of Claims have found to be just. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] on yesterday said that these were Southern claims. I deny it. This bill which I hold in my hand provides for claimants in eighteen States of this Union.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask, to what point is the gentleman speaking?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I moved to strike out the last word in the item just read. I said, Mr. Chairman, that I denied the statement that these are Southern claims. I see that this bill provides for claimants in eighteen States of this Union. I have the list in my hand. It provides for claimants in the State of Illinois. That is not a Southern State. It provides for claimants in the great State of Massachusetts, the land of steady habits. That is not a Southern State. It applies to claimants in the great Keystone State of this Union, the State of Pennsylvania. This is not a Southern State. It applies to claimants in the State of Kansas; and lastly, it applies to claimants in the State of Ohio, a State highly prolific in voters, the mother of Presidents, and of men who are competent to be President who have not yet been elected. So that, Mr. Chairman, it does not apply alone to Southern claimants, but it applies to claimants everywhere in this Union, if they happen to have such claims. I do not see why they should be characterized as Southern claims. I know that my friend does not mean to put a stigma upon them when he makes that statement. There are claims in his own State of Illinois in this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think, regardless of where they live, they ought to be paid. We have inquired whether they are right, just, and honest; and if so, regardless of their locality, we ought to pay them. I am going to offer this amendment, a substantial amendment, to put about $500,000 of the findings of the Court of Claims in this bill. My friend says that they ought to be regularly considered. When would they come up? On private bill day? But what did we see on yesterday? It was private bill day, and he took the entire day from us, when we could have considered these claims, to consider this general deficiency bill, one of the bills of highest privilege, that might be considered any day and every day in this House. He takes away private bill day, and yet comes and says you ought not to offer your little amendment to the bill, when your bill can have consideration on a private bill day. We can not get it considered that way. I hope my friend will not make the point of order. I am not prepared to say, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order would not be good, if made. I hope it will not be made by any gentleman on this floor. I state the fact myself that the bulk of this money goes to the South. There is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to have two or three minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman ask?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that I may be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the committee. I was going to say that while it is true the claimants lived in many Northern States, the bulk of the money goes South. But I hope that no gentleman upon this floor will object to a bill because of that fact. We do not object down there to the pension bills, where 90 per cent of the money appropriated, and twenty-five times as much or fifty times as much as included in this bill, goes to other sections of the country. We sit here, those of us who are from the South, voting this pension money, of which the South pays about one-third, say $50,000,000, and gets back only $6,000,000 or $8,000,000, as I remember the figures in a general way. There is no complaint of that. Now, when we come with a bill where the bulk of the money goes South, it is true, we are met with the charge that these are Southern claims. I have shown that they are not Southern claims.

One other gentleman who sat near me stated yesterday that the statute of limitations ran against them. Mr. Chairman, that is the unkindest cut of all as to these claims. It is a fact that there is not a claimant in this bill that has not been knocking at the door of the two Houses of Congress for more than thirty years. You can not plead the statute of limitations against a claimant who was seeking all this time to get his rights. They can not sue the Government. There never was a time when they could bring suit until the passage of the Bowman Act, on the 3d of March, 1883. Then they proceeded under the direct orders of this House and the other body to bring their actions in the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims made its favorable findings. They amount in all to a little less than $1,000,000; but in this bill we have inserted a little over $500,000. They are unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that these findings in favor of the claimants ought to be paid. In addition to that, at the last session of this Congress, the long session, this House and the other body passed a bill to pay these identical claims. That bill went to the President of the United States, but in the exercise of his constitutional prerogative he vetoed the bill. He did not veto it because these claims had a place in it. He expressly stated that he vetoed it on other grounds. So that the Executive has no objection to them, the Senate of the United States voted unanimously to pay them, and this House voted to pay them. In the Fifty-first Congress both bodies passed a bill to pay $550,000 of them. So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to let this mere drop in the bucket go through. Let the people of the South, if they are entitled to it, get the benefit of it; if they do not live there, or wherever they live, if they have shown their loyalty to the Government of the United States throughout the war they are entitled to it, through every law and principle of justice, through every act of Congress that has been passed; and it seems to me that it is but sheer justice that we should pass the bill now as a part of this appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman state to the committee why it is that that bill includes some of the claims on which findings have been found in the Court of Claims, and others are not included?

Mr. RICHARDSON. My friend asks a very pertinent question, why certain claims are in this bill and certain other claims of the same character are not in it. This bill contains only the claims referred to the Court of Claims by the House and Senate, upon which that court has acted favorably and reported its findings to Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman did not evidently catch my question. Why is it that this bill does not contain all the claims which have been referred to the Court of Claims, and upon which the Court of Claims have made favorable findings? Why are some included in the bill and others left out?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because this bill was introduced at the beginning of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and, as I understand, it includes all the favorable findings of the Court of Claims that had been filed with the House prior to the meeting of this Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Are these the same cases that were embodied in the Senate amendment to the bill which was vetoed by the President last year?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They are.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then why is it that other claims for which the Court of Claims has rendered judgment, as well as for these, are omitted?

Mr. RICHARDSON. All the favorable findings up to the beginning of the Fifth-fourth Congress are included.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I will not ask to have it read if the gentleman from Illinois intends to insist on the point of order, because the reading would take twenty or thirty minutes, but I beg the gentleman not to insist on his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want to know whether I will make the point of order on his amendment or not?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do.

Mr. CANNON. I gave the gentleman notice yesterday that I would make the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; but I had hoped that a good night's sleep would have softened the gentleman's heart. [Laughter.] I offer the amendment, Mr. Chairman, and ask to have it read by title.

The amendment was read by title, as follows:

For the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that unanimous consent is asked that this amendment be considered as read.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. To that amendment, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order upon this bill and not in pursuance of existing law. The Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction of it. It belongs to the Committee on War Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GIBSON. I simply want to utter one sentence bearing directly upon the question, and that is, that these are the same identical claims that were passed by both Houses of Congress at the last session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3508) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution; and Joint resolution (S. R. 206) to construe Senate joint resolution No. 148, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1475) for the relief of Basil Moreland; and

A bill (H. R. 1031) granting relief to the heirs of Albert Augustine for property taken for the Cayuse war.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LEWIS. Would it be in order for this House of Representatives to give effect to the Constitution of the United States? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks that is a parliamentary inquiry. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois what is included in the items which have just been read under the title, "Judgments of the Court of Claims?" What are these judgments for?

Mr. CANNON. They are, in the main, judgments for what are known as the "letter-carrier cases." They are not mere findings; they are judgments, properly certified.

Mr. RICHARDSON. One of the items, I notice, is in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Is that for carrying the mails?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; that is a regularly certified judgment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know; but what I ask is, What was the judgment rendered for?

Mr. CANNON. For carrying the troops of the United States, and, I suppose, the mails of the United States, munitions of war, and so on. It is a final judgment of the Court of Claims, properly certified.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I see that the amount is $1,310,428.10 for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. What does the gentleman say that amount is for?

Mr. CANNON. I say it is the amount carried by a judgment of the Court of Claims, which is properly certified, and on which the time for appeal has expired.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the report of the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, which states that this is a judgment for which an appropriation is asked for services performed in the transportation of the Army and the mails, and for passengers and freight in other branches of the public service; and that all such transportation was performed over roads that never received any subsidy from the Government. That is the report of the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why make an appropriation to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of this great railroad corporation, amounting to over $1,000,000, when we can not get the pitiful sum contained in the amendment I have offered for the benefit of hundreds of loyal claimants whose cases have been passed upon favorably by the same court and the same judges? I know the gentleman from Illinois will say that there is a difference; that in the one case there are findings of fact, and in the other case a judgment or finding of law, but I ask the gentleman what is the substantial distinction between the two cases, and why does one have any more merit than the other?

Mr. CANNON. Simply because the law provides that in the one case that—

Whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for consideration.

Under the Bowman Act, covered by the amendment of the gentleman, the finding of the Court of Claims, by the express terms of the act of Congress, does not constitute a judgment, but is to be returned to the House for its further consideration. Now, in both the letter-carrier case and the case of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company the court took jurisdiction of the law, and a final judgment was rendered and certified for appropriation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, I want to ask the gentleman to read section 7 of the Bowman Act. I have it not before me, but according to my recollection that section provides that these findings shall have all the solemnity—that is not the express language, but is its effect—all the solemnity of a judgment; and the section further provides that these findings shall be certified to Congress, that the cases shall take their places at the head of the Calendar of the House, and shall be first determined; that if not decided in the existing Congress, they shall not lose their places, but shall go over to the next Congress and stand at the head of the Calendar until they are disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is exactly correct; and many of these cases under the Bowman Act have taken their places upon the Calendar and slept there when the gentleman's party was in full power in the House and Senate and the Presidency, and when he, a great leader of his party, and his party associates allowed them to sleep there. [Applause.] If he had been as anxious and as agonizing then as he is now, I dare say his constituents would have rejoiced in appropriations for these claims.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON (interrupting the reading). I move that the Committee of the Whole rise temporarily.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the general deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and to ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the bill will be regarded as read a first and second time, will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, printed. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] reserves all points of order.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For provisions, Navy, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $11,182.44.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 67, after line 13, insert the following:

"That hereafter the accounting officers of the Treasury shall not receive, examine, consider, or allow any claim against the United States for pay or allowances which have been or may be presented by officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, their heirs or legal representatives, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, which have heretofore been or may hereafter be adopted as a basis for the allowance of such claims, which accrued more than six years prior to the institution of proceedings on which such decisions were or may be made."

Mr. CANNON. This is a very wise amendment. Without occupying time upon it, unless some one else desires to discuss it, I will ask that the vote be taken at once.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Subsequently,

Mr. CANNON asked and obtained leave to print in the RECORD, in connection with the amendment just adopted, letters from the Auditor and Comptroller and an extract from the last annual report of the Comptroller of the Treasury, bearing on the same. The documents are as follows:

[Mate Hugh Kuhl, United States Navy.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1896.

SIR: Mate Hugh Kuhl, United States Navy, has presented a claim to this office for commutation of rations while serving on receiving ships and monitors, under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of The United States vs. Fuller (decided January 20, 1896), in which it was held that mates are petty officers and entitled to rations. In the adjustment of the claim, I have allowed the claimant commutation for rations from June 22, 1874, the date of the adoption of the Revised Statutes, for the time he was attached to receiving ships and monitors, to December 31, 1895.

If mates are not officers within the meaning of section 1410 of the Revised Statutes, they are not officers within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65), and are not entitled to mileage. United States vs. Mouat (124 U. S. R., 303). I have therefore deducted in the settlement of his claim all mileage heretofore paid him, and allowed him the cost of his transportation in the same manner as allowed to other petty officers of the Navy when traveling under orders. He is not entitled to rations nor commutation therefor when attached to a navy-yard. Button Case (20 C. Cls. R., 423); Hubert's (21 C. Cls. R., 53).

In submitting the question of the right of the Auditor to deduct allowances which have heretofore been made in this class of claims, I desire to invite your attention to acts of 1890 and 1892, wherein Congress has applied a statute of limitation to claims of officers of the Navy for sea pay and rations on receiving ships, viz, the act of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 544).

In the act of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 544), making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations, etc., at page 544, there is a proviso attached to the appropriation "For provision of the Navy" that no part of the sum called for in the executive document "shall be used for the payment of any claim for rations on receiving ships or for the payment of any claim which may have been allowed under the decisions of the Supreme Court which have been adopted by the accounting officers as a basis for the allowance of said claims which accrued prior to July 16, 1880." The petition in the case of Strong was filed in the Court of Claims July 16, 1886, and Congress, by limiting the time to 1880, placed a statute of limitation on that class of claims.

By the act of July 29, 1892 (27 Stat., 313), the accounting officers are prohibited from allowing any claim for sea pay or commutation of rations which has been or may be presented by officers of the Navy, their heirs or legal representatives, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, which have heretofore been adopted as a basis for the allowance of such claims which accrued prior to July 16, 1880. It is clear to my mind that this proviso was intended to apply to claims settled under the authority of the Strong decision, and does not apply to claims for sea pay and rations, or commutations of rations under a subsequent decision of the courts, although similar to that of Strong's.

There is another reason why, in my opinion, the act above referred to does not apply to this class of claims. The Court of Claims in the case of Boatswain Frary (24 C. Cls. R., 117) said: "To entitle officers and other persons, with some exceptions, to rations, they must be either at sea or actually attached to and doing duty on 'a sea going vessel,' whether such vessel be at sea or not. That Congress intended to exclude receiving ships from those designated as sea going vessels is conclusively shown by the exception in section 1579, which, after prohibiting the allowance of rations to persons not on a sea going vessel, excepts petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships." While in the Fuller case the Supreme Court held that mates are petty officers: "The exception of mates from other petty officers in section 1569 indicates that they are petty officers, and the exception of petty officers from those who are not entitled to rations under section 1579 indicates that as such they are entitled to a ration."

As no rations or commutation of rations have been allowed to officers on receiving ships since the adoption of the Revised Statutes, and the courts have held that officers so serving are not entitled to a ration, and that mates, being petty officers, are entitled when so serving, it is quite clear to my mind that Congress did not intend to include mates within the acts prohibiting the accounting officers from settling claims on receiving ships. And another reason suggests itself, that Fuller's case was not pending before the courts when the act of 1892 became a law, as his petition was not filed in the Court of Claims until March 17, 1894.

To avoid the necessity of reexamining this class of claims on appeal, I have the honor to submit to you for approval or disapproval the conclusions which I have reached in this case: First, that the claimant is entitled to commutation for rations from June 22, 1874, the date of the adoption of the Revised Statutes, during the time he was attached to receiving ships and monitors; second, that he is not entitled to mileage when traveling under orders, but to the cost of his transportation; third, he is not entitled to rations nor commutation therefor when on duty at a navy-yard; and, fourth, the acts of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 544), and July 29, 1892 (27 Stat., 313), do not apply to claims of this class.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. PUGH,
Auditor.

The COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1897.

SIR: An answer to your letter of February 18, 1893, submitting for my approval, disapproval, or modification your conclusions and decision in the case of Hugh Kuhl, mate United States Navy, has been delayed, awaiting the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Wisconsin Central Railroad Company vs. United States (164 U. S., 190), decided November 16, 1896, and Baxter vs. United States, decided by the Court of Claims January 4, 1897. These cases fully sustain certain conclusions reached by you in this matter. You submitted the four following points as decided by you:

"First. That the claimant is entitled to commutation for rations from June 22, 1874, the date of the adoption of the Revised Statutes, during the time he was attached to receiving ships and monitors;

"Second. That he is not entitled to mileage when traveling under orders, but to the cost of his transportation;

"Third. He is not entitled to rations nor commutation therefor when on duty at a navy-yard; and,

"Fourth. The acts of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 544), and July 29, 1892 (27 Stat., 313), do not apply to claims of this class."

With these conclusions I concur, and approve your decision.

Concerning the deduction of the sums heretofore paid as mileage in excess of the actual cost of transportation while traveling under orders, said mileage was allowed on the theory that the claimant was an officer of the Navy. The claim for commutation of rations is based on the decision of the United States Supreme Court (United States vs. Fuller (160 U. S., 593), decided January 20, 1896), to the effect that mates are not officers. This brings into present consideration the whole question of the status of the claimant during the time rations are now claimed, and both rations and mileage being parts of the same subject-matter, to wit, the compensation of the claimant, the application of the claimant opens the whole matter, and necessarily involves the right to offset sums improperly paid as mileage, when in excess of the cost of transportation, under former decisions, as well as those herein specifically mentioned.

In presenting this claim to Congress for appropriation it is suggested that attention be invited to the limitation on the consideration of other claims of a similar character found in the act of July 29, 1892 (27 Stat., 313).

I transmit all of the papers in the case.

Respectfully, yours,

EDW. A. BOWERS,
Assistant Comptroller.

The AUDITOR FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

[Extract from Report of the Comptroller of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1896, pages 7 and 8.]

It not infrequently happens that constructions placed upon acts of Congress relating to the compensation or other emoluments of officers of the United States, the language of which is somewhat ambiguous, become by reason of long continuance the settled practice of the Executive Departments as constituting the true construction of the statutes. Many years afterwards the construction of these acts by the accounting officers may be reversed by the courts and a larger amount than had been theretofore allowed is held to be due these officers. Immediately after such decisions claims covering the entire period of time since the enactment of the laws are presented either by the officers themselves, or in many cases, where the construction of the accounting officers has continued for a long period unreversed, by the heirs of officers already dead.

As Congress has for more than thirty years furnished a tribunal in the Court of Claims in which the validity of this character of claims might have been tried immediately after the construction was placed upon the acts by the accounting officers, if such construction was deemed erroneous, it is confidently believed that no injustice will be done if the jurisdiction of the accounting officers over claims of this character is taken away, especially as it is a matter of common notoriety that in many cases the claims have been instigated by diligent attorneys rather than by the officers themselves. An example of such legislation in a particular case may be found in the act of July 28, 1892 (27 Stat., 313), wherein it was provided:

"That hereafter the accounting officers of the Treasury shall not receive, examine, consider, or allow any claim against the United States for sea pay or commutation of rations which has been or may be presented by officers of the Navy, their heirs or legal representatives, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, which have heretofore been adopted as a basis for the allowance of such claims, which accrued prior to July 16, 1880."

The case particularly referred to in that enactment was that of United States vs. Strong (125 U. S., 656). It appears that the petition in the Strong case was filed in the Court of Claims July 17, 1886, and as the statute of limitations relating to that court excludes from its jurisdiction any claims accruing prior to six years from the date of filing the petition, the date "July 16, 1880," referred to by Congress in the above-quoted clause, relates to claims which would have been barred in the Court of Claims in the test case.

Like legislation applicable to all claims of a generally similar character is respectfully recommended. The time of the accounting officers is fully occupied in the settlement of current matters and should not be taken up in the adjustment of a class of claims which might have been presented to the courts by the claimants at earlier dates if at the time they had felt themselves aggrieved by the determination of the accounting officers.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we now return to a paragraph on page 21, which was passed over by unanimous consent.

The Clerk read from page 21 of the bill the following:

Public schools: For amount required to pay for care of schoolrooms at Miner School building for the current year, $140.90.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the paragraph just read insert:

For rent of Miner School building, $1,250, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it was agreed that at the conclusion of the reading of the bill we would recur to two paragraphs, possibly three, upon which there was to be debate for an hour and a half on each side.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I have three amendments which I think, for the convenience of the committee, can be considered together. If one of them should be adopted, it may determine the others. I will send them up to be read by the Clerk, and then if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should prefer to have them considered separately, we can do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, at the end of line 24, insert:
"Except those for services over bond-aided Pacific railroads and their nonbond-aided branches."
On page 60 strike out all of lines 18 to 24, inclusive.
On page 5 strike out all of lines 4 to 10, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman wishes these to be considered together, and the gentleman asks consent of the committee for their consideration in that form.

Mr. CANNON. Let them be pending, and I will look over them. The gentleman from Texas, if he desires to proceed now——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the time agreed upon for debate is to be equally divided, and if there be no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to control one-half of the time and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the other.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CANNON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3718) to authorize the Montgomery, Hayneville and Camden Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Alabama River between Lower Peachtree and Prairie Bluff, Alabama; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SAYERS. I will yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committtee, on Saturday afternoon last I left the House, I think, between 4 and 5 o'clock, when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] was addressing the committee on some river and harbor items. Later in the afternoon some discussion took place in which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] took part. In the course of their remarks they attacked the Supreme Court of the United States, and I propose now, in the limited time just allotted to me, to defend that court.

This is not a political question. It is not a partisan question. The question is whether it is proper to attack this court, a great coordinate branch of the Government, supposed to be of equal and independent power with the legislative branch, in the course of remarks on this floor. The gentleman attacked not only, as I conceive, Mr. Justice Shiras, a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, for his decision in the income-tax cases, but the attack was broad enough to affect, and must necessarily and logically involve, not only every member of the majority of the court, but every one of the nine justices who compose the entire court.

I call the attention of the committee to the language which was then used by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who, with his recognized ability, aspires to be the leader of the Democratic party in the next Congress. He said:

It is known to all who are posted that the man who tore down the Constitution and overrode the decisions of a hundred years, who set aside the power which was placed in the hands of Congress to assess the wealth of the nation and require it to bear a portion of its expenses, was and is named Shiras, and that name, Mr. Chairman, ought to be mentioned in connection with that reprehensible and ever-to-be-criticised decision wherever it is referred to at any time. Let posterity not forget him. It is not likely to forgive him.

Then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] said:

Now, then, let us see how strangely that provision was overturned. Eight judges were present when the matter first came before the Supreme Court of the United States. They divided equally upon the main question of constitutionality. The ninth justice was absent. Those who took the one side and those who took the other were well known. They identified themselves. There was another hearing when the ninth judge was present, so that the full bench then heard the case. The ninth judge joined in with the four who held the law to be constitutional; and lo and behold! one of the four, without ever vouchsafing an explanation, without ever giving any reason, changed his mind in such a way as to lift from wealth a tax of from forty to sixty millions of dollars annually, and cast it as an additional burden upon poverty and toil!

That ought not to be commented on! It ought not to be mentioned here, according to the tender notions of some gentlemen! Why ought it not to be? Men have a right to change their opinions; great as well as little men often do so. But when fifty or sixty million dollars of annual revenue are in the scale—when a trained lawyer and judge, after full argument, deliberately reaches a conclusion, and then when, so far as we know, without additional light, without additional good reason to carry him the other way, he suddenly, when it becomes necessary, finds himself upon the side of aggregated wealth and power and monopoly and against the mass of the producers of the land, with the result that there is a deficit in the Treasury and that heavier burdens must be heaped upon the people—why should there not be some comment? What is there wrong in the comment? Why should it be withheld? I said in this House about one year ago, and I repeat, that when the history of that judge shall be made up, and when all else in his life shall have been forgotten, his name will be kept from oblivion, not for praise, but as that of one by whose marvelous conversion a great principle of taxation was, for the time, overthrown in a land of free people under free institutions.

What was the "great principle of taxation" overthrown by that decision of theirs? The principle of taxation—the only ruling of the court—was that an income tax is a direct tax; not that no income tax could be imposed on the people of the United States, but that it must be apportioned according to the inhabitants of the various States, or, in the language of the Constitution, "among the several States, according to their respective numbers."

Now, let us look for a moment at the question; and the original argument goes back to the 9th day of July, in the city of Chicago, when William J. Bryan delivered his famous speech, "The crown of thorns and cross of gold," in which he used the language:

It was not unconstitutional when it went before the Supreme Court for the first time.

I draw the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that there were three questions involved in the income-tax case, that is to say, in the bill in equity brought by Mr. Pollock, against the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York, praying that sections 27 to 37, inclusive, the income-tax sections of the Wilson tariff bill, should be adjudged to be unconstitutional and void. And the points were that the tax on the rents and income of real estate is a tax on the land itself, and hence a direct tax under the Constitution; that the income derived from State and municipal bonds can not be taxed by the Federal Government; and further, that a tax upon the income derived from personal property is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution.

On the first two questions the court decided in favor of the plaintiff. The court decided that to tax the income of municipalities was unconstitutional and void, because it involved an attempt to tax the instrumentalities of the States. All the eight judges concurred in that view at the first hearing, and six out of the eight judges held the tax on the rents and income of real estate to be unconstitutional and void. So these gentlemen, including Mr. Bryan, are wrong when they say that a large part of the act was not held to be unconstitutional on the occasion of the first hearing by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, what opinions were then rendered? The prevailing opinion was rendered by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, and Mr. Justice Field also filed a concurring opinion. The dissenting opinion was rendered by Mr. Justice White and concurred in by Mr. Justice Harlan. So the record shows that all the judges, with the exception of Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice Harlan, on the occasion of the first hearing, held the tax on the rents and income of real estate to be unconstitutional and void. And what proportion of the tax was involved? It stated, I believe, in the second opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, that that affected something like $39,500,000,000 out of the total of $65,000,000,000. So you see, gentlemen, that about one-half of the income tax was held to be unconstitutional before the second hearing occurred in the following May. You remember that the first hearing was in March, and the decision was filed on the 8th day of April, 1895. It is true it was announced in the prevailing opinion on the occasion of the first decision that the court was evenly divided on some points; that is, upon the question if an income tax be considered an indirect tax, whether it should not be uniform, and on the question as to whether the invalidity of the provision as to rents and income of land did not necessarily invalidate the other sections of the income-tax law applying to the incomes of personal estate, and upon the question whether a tax upon the income of personal estate was a direct tax or not.

Upon those three questions the court was equally divided. But I submit to you, gentlemen, as lawyers, that no judge of any court should ever be attacked for changing his opinion on a pure question of law, such as that which was involved in this income-tax case. I submit that it would be a very dangerous principle to encourage the practice of certain country lawyers, when defeated, to go down to the tavern and damn the court.

Now, gentlemen, there is no evidence as to how the judges stood on the points left undecided on the occasion of the rendition of the first decision. Non constat, as far as the record goes, that Mr. Justice Shiras ever thought that the income-tax law was constitutional. We know that he thought the tax on the rents and income of land was unconstitutional.

Moreover, let us see how fairly they work out the problem. Mr. Justice Brown, another member of the court, changed his opinion on the occasion of the second hearing. Read his second opinion—that is, his dissenting opinion—on the occasion of the rehearing, and you will find that he then held that a tax on the rents and income of land could be upheld, and that it was not a direct tax, whereas on the occasion of the first hearing he sided with the six judges who formed the majority.

But, no matter how those judges stood or how Mr. Justice Shiras stood on the occasion of the first argument, I submit it is a dangerous precedent to allow any member of the National Legislature—of course he has the power to speak as he sees fit—to allow without rebuke any member of the National Legislature to attack our great court of last resort, and I have deemed that it was right for me, as the only member of the Committee on Appropriations, I believe, except the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON], who is a sound-money Democrat, to protest on behalf of the Democracy of the North and East against their being held up to the people of this country as in favor either of an income tax or in favor of attacking the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What has the question of silver Democracy or gold Democracy got to do with this question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I believe that the issues which I have mentioned, quite as much as the soft-money craze, helped to turn the North and the East against the Democracy in the last Presidential campaign. I say to the leaders of the party in the West and Southwest that they can not hold the Democracy of the North and East with them unless they abandon their policy of insisting upon the imposition of an unconstitutional and iniquitous income tax, which will largely affect the people of the Eastern and Northern States. Nor can they pursue their attacks on the Federal judiciary without endangering the success of their party in the future.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] asks, Who could have anticipated the unconstitutionality of the income tax? I say to him that in two speeches in this House, the first on the 30th of January, 1894, and the second on the 12th day of December, 1894, I stated that the income tax was unconstitutional, and that it would be held to be unconstitutional when it should come before the Supreme Court of the United States on another occasion. To be sure it was only my belief as a lawyer, but at the same time I cited instances of the contemporaneous construction of the meaning of the words "direct" and "indirect" taxes, such as those by Gouverneur Morris, Luther Martin, and Theodore Sedgwick, and I referred to many cases which appear in the majority opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, let us go one step further. I take these figures from the able and admirable paper written by Senator HILL, in the Forum of February, showing how this income tax is an unfair tax and a tax which discriminates against my State. It appears that while the amount of the income tax returned was $15,943,746.69, the States which voted for the Democratic-Populist candidate returned only $1,880,201.38, whereas the State of New York would have paid nearly one-fourth of the whole tax, or, to be exact, $3,784,489.04.

Then let us consider for a moment the fairness of that tax. How do the gentlemen who defend these sections of the Wilson bill defend the unfair exemption of mutual life insurance companies, and in favor of building associations? Gentlemen must admit, for it is admitted in one of the opinions of the dissenting judges of the Supreme Court (that of Mr. Justice Harlan), that they are unfair and indefensible exemptions. He says:

> Undoubtedly the present law contains exemptions that are open to objection. * * * The provisions most liable to objection are those exempting from taxation large amounts of accumulated capital, particularly that represented by savings banks, mutual insurance companies, and loan associations.

Now let me say a word about this law. Why talk about the Supreme Court of the United States and say it has reversed its decision which had been made a hundred years earlier? Such is not the fact. The only decision reversed was that in the Springer Case, which was decided in 1880 and reported in 102 United States Reports. The old Hylton Case, in 1796, merely held that a tax on a carriage was an excise, because a carriage is simply a consumable commodity; and then, in the case of the Pacific Insurance Company against Soule (1868) it was held that a tax upon the business of an insurance company was an excise or duty; and in the case of Veazie Bank against Fenno (1869) it was held that the tax of 10 per cent upon the State-bank circulation was a duty; and in the case of Scholey against Rew (1874) it was held that the tax upon the devolution of the title to realty or a succession tax was an excise tax or duty. And as said, Justice Brown, in his dissenting opinion, said it must be admitted, however, that in none of these cases was the question directly presented as to what are taxes upon land within the meaning of the constitutional provision; and it is pointed out, also, by Chief Justice Fuller that from the case of Hylton to that of Springer it never had been decided that taxes on rents or income derived from land are not taxes on land.

In the case of the Pacific Insurance Company against Soule, my father was of counsel, and of his brief Mr. Justice White says:

> The brief on behalf of the company, filed by Mr. Wills, was supported by another signed by Mr. W. O. Bartlett, which covered every aspect of the contention. It rested the weight of its argument against the statute on the fact that it included the rents of real estate among the sources of income taxed, and therefore put a direct tax upon the land. Able as have been the arguments at bar in the present case, an examination of those then presented will disclose the fact that every view here urged was there pressed upon the court with the greatest ability, and after exhaustive research, equaled but not surpassed by the eloquence and learning which has accompanied the presentation of this case. Indeed, it may be said that the principal authorities cited and relied on now can be found in the arguments which were then submitted.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I say, whether we disagree with the Supreme Court or not, the final decision of that court should be upheld; and it is a very dangerous precedent to attack judges of that great court because their views happen to contravene our views. Now, let me say a word in conclusion; and that is as to the dangerous proposition advocated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Not if it is to come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] goes one step further. He indulges in a general attack upon the judiciary. He says that he wishes to curb the Executive; he says he wishes to curb the Federal judiciary. In other words, he desires to give unlimited power to the legislative department of Government. Ah, gentlemen, does he imagine and do those who accord with him imagine that they are the people? We are merely representatives of the people; we are not the people themselves. As was well said by Judge Story, in his great work on the Constitution, "The courts stand between the people and the legislature;" and they are placed there to do what? To check the encroachments and usurpations of the legislative department of Government.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] proceeds, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to page 53 of the bill, to correct a clerical error.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 53, line 18, strike out the capital "N" and insert in lieu thereof a capital "M."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will, by arrangement, so as to equalize the time given by the gentleman from Texas, yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend from Illinois for his courtesy in yielding me a small portion of time in which to reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT]. I do not propose on this occasion to go into a general discussion of the questions that he has raised. He says that I made an attack on a member of the Supreme Court in some remarks I made a few days ago. I intended it as an attack on the soundness of his decision, and if it is not sufficient, I am ready to renew it any day in the world. I do not admit, as a representative of the American people, that there is anything in the American Government so sacred that I, as a representative of the American people, can not attack it when it goes wrong. [Applause.]

Concerning my distinguished friend's suggestion as to what ought to be my conduct as a Democrat, with some years of service here, I simply beg to submit to him that I do not recognize his right to read me lectures as to what should be Democratic conduct after he has taken his bag and baggage out of the Democratic party and run for Congress with a Republican nomination. [Applause.] I am at the old camping ground, engaged in the old war against class and unjust legislation, with the old principles backing me, and I do not admit that I have departed from the faith, or that those associated with me have.

My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] informed me some days ago that he expected at a future time to reply to what I had said regarding Mr. Justice Shiras, and I will reserve until that occasion the principal part of what ought to be said concerning that distinguished individual.

Mr. MADDOX. Notorious, you mean.

Mr. McMILLIN. I accept the amendment—notorious. Mr. Chairman, no man has a higher reverence for the institutions of my country than I have. When I can say that I have stood here for eighteen years, engaged in the thickest of the fight, having fled from no combat, and yet have never had a single point of order made upon me that I was out of order in debate, I believe I can at least boast that I have been somewhat decorous in my methods of discussion. I have not spared the wrong or wrongdoer in my criticisms; nor shall I.

Sir, no man in this Government ever attacked the Federal judiciary when it went wrong more fiercely than did Thomas Jefferson, and the people made him President, and they hold his memory sacred, because he did not fear to do his duty in that and other things.

When General Jackson sent to the Senate, to be borne perpetually upon its files, his protest against the resolutions of censure, he necessarily criticised the action of a coordinate branch of the Government.

When the President of the United States sends his veto messages here, he necessarily criticises a coordinate branch of the Government. I repeat, sir, there is nothing in American government that is beyond criticism. On the stump, in the daily press, everywhere and by everybody, we, as legislators, are criticised. What sanctity shields the bench from just comment or criticism?

What I said of Justice Shiras was, that the man who tore down the Constitution, who overruled the decisions of one hundred years, who took away from the people the right to impose upon the wealth of the country taxes to meet the expenses of the country, was named Shiras. I repeat it to-day, and I am glad if I have got through his heretofore thick skin at last. Did he not decide that an income tax was unconstitutional? And did he not have to overturn the decisions of one hundred years to do it? [Applause.] As I have indicated, it was not my purpose on this occasion to go into a general discussion of the merits of this question. I think that if I have my health I shall be able to show some facts which may shed a slight degree of light upon the methods of proceeding when the Constitution was overridden and the taxing power of the people destroyed. But for the present I shall content myself with calling the attention of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] and the committee to what members of the Supreme Court of the United States have said about that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I could not say anything harsher than what Mr. Justice Harlan, Mr. Justice Jackson, Mr. Justice White, and Mr. Justice Brown have said upon that extraordinary income-tax decision. I therefore send to the desk to be read some extracts from the opinions of those distinguished jurists. I ask the Clerk to read the paragraphs that I have marked.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the Clerk reading from?

Mr. McMILLIN. He is reading from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan, of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. From what volume is he reading?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is a volume that I would commend to the gentleman's careful and prayerful consideration, for his moral and political improvement. It is the Democratic campaign book in the last campaign. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Prepared by the gentleman, I believe?

Mr. McMILLIN. Prepared by me; but I vouch for the accuracy of every word that is there attributed to these justices of the Supreme Court. All the extracts were taken literally from their opinions.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will you allow the prevailing opinion of the court to go into the RECORD with what you are having read?

Mr. McMILLIN. Not in my time. I do not want the reading of it taken out of my time, as it is very limited.

The extracts read at the request of Mr. McMILLIN are as follows:

DISSENTING OPINION OF SUPREME COURT.

[Extracts from Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, 158 U. S.]

HARLAN, J.: From this history of legislation and of judicial decision it is manifest—

* * * * * * *

That upon every occasion when it has considered the question whether a duty on incomes was a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution this court has, without a dissenting voice, determined it in the negative, always proceeding on the ground that capitation taxes and taxes on land were the only direct taxes contemplated by the framers of the Constitution.

* * * The practice of a century, in harmony with the decisions of this court, under which uncounted millions have been collected by taxation, ought to be sufficient to close the door against further inquiry based upon the speculations of theorists and the varying opinions of statesmen who participated in the discussions, sometimes very bitter, relating to the form of government to be established in place of the Articles of Confederation, under which, it has been well said, Congress could declare everything and do nothing.

In my judgment, to say nothing of the disregard of the former adjudications of this court and of the settled practice of the Government, this decision may well excite the gravest apprehensions. It strikes at the very foundations of national authority, in that it denies to the General Government a power which is, or may become, vital to the very existence and preservation of the Union in a national emergency, such as that of war with a great commercial nation, during which the collection of duties upon imports will cease or be materially diminished.

* * * * * * *

But this is not all. The decision now made may provoke a contest in this country which the American people would have been spared if the court had not overturned its former adjudications and had adhered to the principles of taxation under which our Government, following the repeated adjudications of this court, has always been administered. Thoughtful, conservative men have uniformly held that the Government could not be safely administered except upon principles of right, justice, and equality, without discrimination against any part of the people because of their owning or not owning visible property, or because of their having or not having incomes from bonds and stock, but by its present construction of the Constitution the court, for the first time in all its history, declares that our Government has been so framed that in matters of taxation for its support and maintenance those who have incomes derived from the rental of real estate or from the leasing or using of tangible personal property, or who own invested personal property, bonds, stocks, an investment of whatever kind, have privileges that can not be accorded to those having incomes derived from the labor of their hands, or the exercise of their skill, or the use of their brains.

I may say, in answer to the appeals made to this court to vindicate the constitutional rights of citizens owning large properties and having large incomes, that the real friends of property are not those who would exempt the wealth of the country from bearing its fair share of the burdens of taxation, but rather those who seek to have everyone, without reference to his locality, contribute from his substance, upon terms of equality with all others, to the support of the Government. * * *

The practical effect of the decision to-day is to give to certain kinds of property a position of favoritism and advantage inconsistent with the fundamental principles of our social organization, and to invest them with power and influence that may be perilous to that portion of the American people upon whom rests the larger part of the burdens of the Government, and who ought not to be subjected to the dominion of aggregated wealth any more than the property of the country should be at the mercy of the lawless. * * *

BROWN, J.: It is certainly a strange commentary upon the Constitution of the United States and upon a democratic Government that Congress has no power to lay a tax which is one of the main sources of revenue of nearly every civilized state. It is a concession of feebleness in which I find myself wholly unable to join.

While I have no doubt that Congress will find some means of surmounting the present crisis, my fear is that in some moment of national peril this decision will rise up to frustrate its will and paralyze its arm. I hope it may not prove the first step toward the submergence of the liberties of the people in a sordid despotism of wealth.

As I can not escape the conviction that the decision of the court in this great case is fraught with immeasurable danger to the future of the country, and that it approaches the proportions of a national calamity, I feel it a duty to enter my protest against it. * * *

JACKSON, J.: The practical operation of the decision is not only to disregard the great principles of equality in taxation, but the further principle that in the imposition of taxes for the benefit of the Government the burdens thereof should be imposed upon those having most ability to bear them. This decision, in effect, works out a directly opposite result, in relieving the citizen having the greater ability, while the burdens of taxation are made to fall most heavily and oppressively upon those having the least ability. It lightens the burden upon the larger number in some States subject to the tax, and places it most unequally and disproportionately on the smaller number in other States. Considered in all its bearings, this decision is, in my judgment, the most disastrous blow ever struck at the constitutional power of Congress. It strikes down an important portion of the most vital and essential power of the Government in practically excluding any recourse to incomes from real and personal estate for the purpose of raising needed revenue to meet the Government's wants and necessities under any circumstances. * * *

WHITE, J.: It takes invested wealth and reads it into the Constitution as a favored and protected class of property, which can not be taxed without apportionment, whilst it leaves the occupation of the minister, the doctor, the professor, the lawyer, the inventor, the author, the merchant, the mechanic, and all other forms of industry upon which the prosperity of a people must depend subject to taxation without that condition. A rule which works out this result, which, it seems to me, stultifies the Constitution by making it an instrument of the most grievous wrong, should not be adopted, especially when, in order to do so, the decisions of this court, the opinions of the law writers and publicists, tradition, practice, and the settled policy of the Government must be overthrown.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to print with my remarks such extracts from the prevailing opinion in the income-tax cases as I shall see fit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much space in the RECORD does the gentleman propose to occupy?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. A very few lines.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no objection, if the matter to be printed does not occupy more than a few lines.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. As a rule, I never print what I do not deliver.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand, there were five judges who read opinions in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] asks leave to print, in connection with his remarks, extracts from the decision of the court.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Limited, as he says, to a few lines. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose this afternoon to occupy the time of the House, but in view of what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has said, it seems proper for me to say that he has been rightly informed—that it was, as it still is, my intention to reply to the criticisms of the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] upon the course of Mr. Justice Shiras in the income-tax cases. I hope at some day in the near future to have the attention of the House on that subject.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I indicated in the beginning of my remarks all that I wanted now was to insert in the RECORD these extracts in answer to what my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has said. I give notice that in response to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] may say, we shall desire a little time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole recur to page 11, line 23, for the purpose of correcting a typographical error.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out, in line 23, page 11, the word "four" and inserting "eighty-two."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] desire to proceed with his remarks now?

Mr. SAYERS. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the committee might rise now and allow this debate to be concluded on Monday.

Mr. CANNON (after conference with Mr. SAYERS). Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas and myself have agreed (as I have consumed ten minutes and he twenty minutes) to ask that the remainder of the debate upon this proposition be limited to two hours, one hour on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the residue of the debate on the pending paragraphs be limited to two hours, one hour on each side. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the general deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House now adjourn.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 631) for the relief of the legal representatives of George McDougall, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. R. 206) to construe Senate joint resolution No. 148, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 1811) to extend the uses of the mail service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

A bill (S. 3608) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9168) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the city of McKeesport to the township of Mifflin, Allegheny County, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 3926) to correct the war record of David Sample;

A bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree;

A bill (H. R. 10102) to remove the political disabilities of Col. William E. Simms;

A bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TRUMAN H. ALDRICH, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. FOSS, for five days, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. SMITH of Illinois, for to-day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BROMWELL, for one week, on account of important business.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TILL TUESDAY.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the motion to adjourn is submitted, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether it would not be agreeable to him that the House adjourn from to-day until Tuesday next? Monday, as we all know, is the anniversary of Washington's birthday—a national holiday.

Mr. CANNON. If I could discover some way of postponing for one day the termination of the session of Congress, I would say yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The motion was rejected.

The question being then taken on the motion of Mr. CANNON that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Mille Lacs Lake, Minnesota—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Red Lake and Red Lake River, Minnesota—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1811) entitled "An act to extend the uses of the mail service," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3010) which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. HULICK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: The bill (S. 2469) entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to quitclaim and release unto Francis Hall and Juriah Hall and their heirs and assigns all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the east 20 feet front by the full depth of 100 feet of lot 2, in square 493, in the city of Washington, D. C., as laid down on the original plan or plat of said city." (Report No. 3005.)

By Mr. COLSON, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (S. 2988) entitled "An act for the relief of W. J. Tapp & Co." (Report No. 3006.)

By Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: The bill (S. 2986) entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown." (Report No. 3007.)

By Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 3670) entitled "An act to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts, widow of the late Gen. Benjamin S. Roberts, United States Army." (Report No. 3008.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5397) granting a pension to Mrs. Katherine Ogden, widow of Second Lieut. Charles C. Ogden, Company E, Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SWANSON (by request): A bill (H. R. 10337) to provide for the inspection of trees, plants, buds, cuttings, grafts, scions, nursery stock, and fruit imported into the United States, and for the inspection of nursery stock grown within the United States which becomes a subject of interstate commerce—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FOOTE: A bill (H. R. 10340) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. TRELOAR: A bill (H. R. 10338) for the relief of A. F. Fleet, superintendent of the Missouri Military Academy, Mexico, Mo.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DINSMORE: A bill (H. R. 10339) for the relief of Mary A. Hancock, widow of Samuel Tow, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 22, 1897.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of Sabaoth, with a psalm of thanksgiving we enter Thy presence to-day to thank Thee for Thy great gifts to the people of this land in the birth and life and character of the person whose natal day we celebrate. Garnering from wide fields sheaves to be the seed corn for the generations of his land in after time, faithful in his apprenticeship to every task, however lowly, that was laid upon him, steadfast under the clamor of rancorous tongues, constant in defeat, unspoiled by success, calm amidst turbulence, wise in council, giving himself to his native land with unsparing fullness, imparting his life to the country in word, in deed, in thought, in inspiration, and crowning all by an humble, devout, and reverent piety toward God, faith in the Divine Saviour, and obedience to Thy laws, he has given to us and to the world an illustration of the grandeur of character uplifted above genius and talent, a character as lofty and stainless as the shaft that rises by the shore of his beloved river, builded by the grateful hands of his countrymen, with gifts from the kings and nations of the earth to show their loyal love for this grand American, modest as the mansion that stands by the bank of the same river, his home—now cared for and preserved by the loving hearts and diligent hands of the daughters of the country.

We bless Thee for this great gift of the most illustrious American, and pray that the influence of his life and character may pass into the souls of the rising generation of American citizens, and that all may feel the benison of his presence and power. As we listen to the reading of his Farewell Address to-day from the lips of Thine honored servant, we pray that we may catch more and more the contagion of this great soul, and that its influence may pass through all the land, molding us to a higher enthusiasm, a deeper and devouter patriotism and love for the Government which under God has been transmitted to us from the hands of our forefathers as a gift to the generations to come. So bless this and all the services in commemoration of our great Washington, and may the blessing of God rest upon our whole people. We humbly ask through Jesus Christ, our Divine Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 19th instant.

The SECRETARY. On February 19 Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That on Monday, February 22, current, immediately after the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address be read to the Senate by Mr. DANIEL, a Senator from the State of Virginia, and that thereafter the Senate will proceed with its business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the resolution just read, the Chair has the honor to present the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who will read the Farewell Address of President Washington.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Vice-President's desk, read the Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the Executive Government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our Western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secures to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a Constitution of Government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established goverment.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which may impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your Representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference for public opinion or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing, with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my Administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow-citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GO: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 19, 1796.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. HILL presented the credentials of Thomas Collier Platt, chosen by the legislature of New York a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented the credentials of HENRY M. TELLER, chosen by the legislature of Colorado a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. CANNON. I present the credentials of Joseph L. Rawlins, chosen by the legislature of Utah a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897. I ask that the credentials be read.

The credentials were read, as follows:

STATE OF UTAH, Executive Department.

To the President of the Senate of the United States of America:

I, Heber M. Wells, governor of the State of Utah, do hereby certify that on Tuesday, the 3d day of November, 1896, the legislature of the State of Utah was chosen; that on Monday, the 11th day of January, A. D. 1897, the said legislature met in regular session as provided by law, and was duly organized on the said day; that on the 19th day of January, A. D. 1897, the same being the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of said legislature, each house of said legislature did openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, proceed to name one person for Senator in Congress from the State of Utah; that by such vote no person received a majority of the whole number of votes cast in either house, and thereupon that fact was entered upon the journal of each house; that at 12 o'clock meridian on the 20th day of January, A. D. 1897, the members of the two houses convened in joint assembly and the journal of each house was then read, and it appearing therefrom that no person had received a majority of the votes of either house, the joint assembly then proceeded to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator; that no person receiving a majority of all the votes cast on that day, the joint assembly met at 12 o'clock meridian of each succeeding day until and including the 3d day of February, 1897, and took at least one vote for Senator on each day, and that on said last-named day Joseph L. Rawlins received a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly and a majority of the votes of all the members elected to both houses, and was thereupon declared duly elected, which fact was entered upon the journal of the joint assembly.

Now, therefore, I do hereby certify that Joseph L. Rawlins was by the legislature of the State of Utah duly elected Senator in the Congress of the United States of America from the State of Utah.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Utah to be hereunto affixed this 6th day of February, A. D. 1897.

HEBER M. WELLS.

By the governor:
[SEAL.] JAMES T. HAMMOND,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HOAR. I simply wish to say that those credentials do not seem to me to be in proper form, because they do not designate for what term the legislature undertook to elect a Senator. I think it is exceedingly important that the States of the Union should get into the practice of having correct credentials, because at some time in the original organization of the Senate at the beginning of a Congress the raising of such questions may make a great deal of trouble.

The simple thing to say is, I, A. B., governor or executive of a certain State, certify that at a certain time C. D. was duly elected by the legislature of that State a Senator of the United States for the term beginning so and so. That is the whole of it, and that simple form, which is now adopted in most of the States, which was adopted in the case of the reelection of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], covers everything. The attempt to go into minute statements as to what they did leads very often to leaving out the point, as it has been left out in this case.

Mr. CANNON. The point having been raised as to the insufficiency or unusual character of the credentials presented in behalf of Joseph L. Rawlins, a Senator-elect from Utah, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee if it will be desirable that other credentials shall be prepared and sent to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe that any Senator would make the slightest question when the matter came up, because everybody would notice that there was but one office to which the legislature could have intended to make the election. My only purpose in making the suggestion was because, of course, it is better to make it at a time when there is no possible dispute than to make it at a time when there may be a dispute; and one of the dangers of our constitutional mechanism is that some time when we are originally introducing into the Senate one-third of the number at the beginning of a Congress sharp points may be raised in order to have a strife for party ascendancy. We see how this practice is prevailing in State legislatures in regard to their organization, and it seems to me to be of infinite importance to get the Senate and the States of the Union into habits of constitutional proceeding about which no plausible or specious pretense of a cavil may be raised.

If it was the case of my own State, I should not think of sending the credentials back to be changed, because the present condition of public sentiment is such that nobody would raise any such question; but I merely want to call attention to it, because I have several times called attention to this matter, and in a great many instances the States have adopted the simple form which was prepared and approved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections some years ago.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts, and I accept his assurance that there will be no opposition to the swearing in of Mr. Rawlins when he shall appear here. The young men who now have charge of the offices of governor and secretary of state in Utah will doubtless so perfect themselves that by the next time the legislature of that State elects a Senator they will present credentials in proper form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be filed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 1021) granting relief to the heirs of Albert Augustine for property taken for the Cayuse war; and

A bill (H. R. 1475) for the relief of Basil Moreland.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND PETITIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of the session all petitions and bills may be introduced by any Senator who shall so elect by handing them to the clerks at the desk for proper reference without addressing the Chair, and that the printing of the title of the bill in the RECORD shall be equivalent to the first and second reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BERRY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bald Knob, Ark., and a petition of sundry citizens of Newport, Ark., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petitions of M. M. Hawkins, cashier of the Arkansas Democrat Company, of Little Rock; of C. C. Thompson, of Little Rock, and a petition of the Arkansas Democrat Company, of Little Rock, all in the State of Arkansas, praying for the passage of House bill No. 4566, relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CALL presented 19 petitions from citizens of Pensacola, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the salaries of letter carriers; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENNEY presented a petition of the legislature of Delaware, praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Delaware in general assembly met, That we the representatives of the people of the State heartily commend the administration of President Cleveland in its endeavor to secure a treaty of arbitration between the two great English-speaking nations of the world.

We recognize that arbitration is the handmaiden of peace, and believe that civilization demands that the two greatest nations of the world shall be bound together by the strongest ties of friendship. We rejoice that the Anglo-Saxon nations have learned the lesson that wisdom and justice in policy are stronger security than weight of armament.

We commend the treaty of arbitration to the Senate of the United States and request that it ratify the same at the earliest day consistent with its grave responsibility in the premises.

We believe that by so doing it will lay the corner stone for that splendid edifice of international arbitration.

Adopted at Dover, February 5, 1897.

EMORY B. RIGGIN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
HEZ HARRINGTON,
Speaker of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9821) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to charge a fee for the issuance of transcripts from the records of the health department, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted to Mr. DANIEL on the 18th instant, making an appropriation for survey and plans for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 20th instant, authorizing a survey on the Warrior River, Alabama, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 20th instant, making the appropriation for Cumberland Sound improvement available on the 1st day of April next, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3012) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or any court in said District having general equity jurisdiction, to decree a sale of real estate in said District, belonging to insane persons, for purposes of reinvestment, and for other purposes, to report it adversely and ask that it be indefinitely postponed, a House bill upon the same subject having been passed by the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3623) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction of the police court of the District of Columbia," reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 20th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ROACH on the 12th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3698) appointing commissioners to revise the statutes relating to patents, trades, and other marks, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. SMITH on the 15th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

EDITION OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for printing additional copies of the report of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior relative to the administration of the pension laws. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the Department of the Interior, 3,000 additional copies of the report of the Assistant Secretary for 1896, relative to the administration of the pension laws.

PASSPORT REGULATIONS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 257) providing for printing the reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries, to report it favorably, without amendment. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 3722) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Letcher Stevenson, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. McMILLAN (for Mr. FRYE) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WETMORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CANNON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CANNON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS subsequently, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. LODGE this day, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

TICKET BROKERAGE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3545) amendatory of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and the several acts amendatory thereof. The bill is known as the antiscalping bill, and this is an amendment which I intend to propose thereto. I move that it lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REMOVALS FROM OFFICE FOR ALLEGED POLITICAL REASONS.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate true, full, and accurate copies of all affidavits and depositions, including the names of the affiants and deponents, and all letters and documentary evidence on which the removal of Dr. M. S. White, John Zeller, William Holmes, Mary A. Dalton, and Mary Flynn, or any of them, were removed from their positions in the Bureau of Animal Industry, at South Omaha, Nebr., or in any manner justifying said removals, or any of them.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire if these officials were removed by the head of the Department or by the President?

Mr. ALLEN. They were removed by the head of the Department.

Mr. HOAR. Not by the President?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. By unanimous consent, we were to vote on a certain amendment to the Indian appropriation bill at 1 o'clock to-day. That hour has already passed, and I insist upon the amendment being disposed of. I ask that the bill may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to make a couple of reports from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think under the unanimous-consent agreement I am not permitted to yield to anyone until this matter is disposed of.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a single remark. I desire this morning, and before we proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, to ask the unanimous consent of the Sentate to call up and pass the bill of which I spoke on Saturday, upon which I suppose the lives of four persons sentenced to be hanged in the Territory of New Mexico depend, or at any rate the right of appeal for those persons depends. I wish to suggest that we have passed the hour of 1 o'clock, and therefore it can make no difference with the Indian appropriation bill. I think the bill to which I refer can be passed upon being read. I wish the Senator from South Dakota would allow me to ask unanimous consent for that purpose now.

Mr. VEST. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he speaks of the New Mexican bill?

Mr. PLATT. That is the measure.

Mr. VEST. It can not be passed without debate and opposition.

Mr. PLATT. All right.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the Indian appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the resolution of the Senate the Chair lays before the Senate the bill indicated by the Senator from South Dakota.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay on the table the committee amendment relating to schools, which was under debate when the Senate was last in session.

Mr. ALLEN and Mr. PALMER. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to have the amendment read. There was an agreement made Saturday afternoon, to be found on page 2047 of the RECORD, by which we agreed to take a direct vote on this amendment at 1 o'clock to-day.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I was going to call the attention of the Chair to the agreement.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is not in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LODGE. I did not know that the agreement cut off a motion to lay on the table. There can not be a more direct motion than that.

Mr. PASCO. If the Senator from Massachusetts will look at the agreement, he will see what it is.

Mr. LODGE. I had an understanding with the Senator from South Dakota at the time that I should make the motion.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I did not so understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. There was that——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair what has become of the amendments of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]?

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose for the purpose of stating that I certainly never would have given consent to the unanimous-consent agreement had I supposed that, having stated to the Senate that I proposed to offer amendments to the amendment, by direct vote upon this amendment I should be deprived of that privilege. Neither would I have consented to it if I had supposed that it took from any Senator the right to move to lay this amendment upon the table; and I think that ought not to be insisted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts rose to a parliamentary inquiry. Will the Senator from Massachusetts please state his inquiry?

Mr. HOAR. The parliamentary inquiry is, What has become of the amendments of the Senator from New Hampshire?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the amendments indicated have not been offered. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] moves to lay upon the table the pending amendment. That motion the Chair will entertain and submit to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to appeal to my colleague, if it be in his power—I am not sure that it is—to permit a vote upon the amendments of the Senator from New Hampshire before he makes his motion to lay the committee amendment on the table, because the adoption of those amendments might make some difference.

Mr. LODGE. My desire is simply to get a direct vote on the committee amendment. The Senator from New Hampshire does not object to my motion, I understand?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. FAULKNER. I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts not to insist upon the motion to lay on the table. The sole object of such a motion is to cut off debate, and there is a unanimous-consent agreement that will bring us directly to a vote upon the main question. Therefore there is no reason whatever for the motion to lay upon the table. We are bound to vote without debate. This debate is out of order and in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement. I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts, therefore, not to insist upon his motion——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let us have a direct vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. And to allow the unanimous-consent agreement to be put in operation by submitting the question on the amendment. I wish to say that the unanimous-consent agreement does not cut off the Senator from New Hampshire from offering any amendment to this amendment. The unanimous-consent agreement was to vote upon this question and any pending amendment, of course, or any amendments that might be offered to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay on the table the pending amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I rise to know whether the Chair decides the motion to lay on the table to be in order in view of the unanimous consent? I supposed when we secured the unanimous-consent agreement that the project of moving to lay on the table was abandoned, as the unanimous-consent agreement required a direct vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the agreement indicated is an agreement made between Senators upon the floor, but under parliamentary rules the Chair must entertain the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand now that a unanimous-consent agreement was made on Saturday that a direct vote should be taken upon this amendment to-day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the agreement.

Mr. PASCO (to Mr. ALLISON). Here is the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend for a moment to enable the Secretary to read the agreement.

The Secretary read from page 2047 of the RECORD of February 20, 1897, as follows:

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the amendment with regard to sectarian schools at 1 o'clock on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is just as easy to take a vote on the amendment as on the motion to lay on the table, and then we will comply with the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion?

Mr. LODGE. If I may have consent to say a word, I should be glad to do so. I desire simply to say that I stated to the Senator from South Dakota that I should make the motion, and did not suppose that there was any objection to it, as it is the most direct form of voting on the amendment. If a vote is taken on the amendment, the Senator from New Hampshire will be cut off from an opportunity to offer his amendments, as I understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not.

Mr. LODGE. Not on my motion; but if a vote is taken otherwise, he will be cut off.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think beyond doubt I can offer amendments to the bill if the Senate votes to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. If there is any question about it, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Hampshire may be allowed to offer any amendment to this amendment after it has been voted upon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. With that understanding, I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws the motion to lay on the table. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 16, page 45, it is proposed to insert:

Of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools, apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1898, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 40 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895: Provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for.

So as to make the clause read:

SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including pay of architect and draftsman, to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,200,000, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska: Provided, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been read.

Mr. BROWN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I am unable to ascertain his view upon this matter, and therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I notice from the recapitulation that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] has not voted. I am paired with that Senator, so I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Allen,	Cullom,	Martin,	Smith,
Allison,	Elkins,	Mills,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Teller,
Bate,	Hansbrough,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Berry,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Blanchard,	Hill,	Pasco,	Wetmore,
Brice,	Hoar,	Perkins,	White,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Wilson.
Carter,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Chilton,	McMillan,	Roach,
Cockrell,	Mantle,	Shoup,

NAYS—8.

Brown,	Chandler,	Lodge,	Platt,
Cannon,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Thurston.

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Kenney,	Sherman,
Baker,	Gear,	Kyle,	Squire,
Blackburn,	George,	McBride,	Turpie,
Burrows,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Vest,
Caffery,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Call,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Gray,	Nelson,	Warren,
Clark,	Hale,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Harris,	Proctor,
Davis,	Irby,	Quay,
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Sewell,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now submit an amendment to the amendment just agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Alaska," in line 18, page 45, insert:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to inquire if that is the exact wording of the act of last year?

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will not object to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was simply going to state that it is the exact language of existing law. It was enacted in the last appropriation act:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

We did not repeat it, because the word "hereafter" makes it a permanent, enduring law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have it repeated, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have submitted a further amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "for," in line 5, page 46, the following proviso:

Provided further, That all appropriations for the education of Indian children in sectarian schools shall absolutely cease and determine at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1898.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. We have made a declaration that it is the policy to dispense with the education of Indian children in sectarian schools. It seems to me that that is as far as we can go; that we can not bind the next Congress by any such amendment as the one now proposed.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is true the declaration has just been made, but a similar declaration was made a year ago and it was not carried out. I simply desire to say that this amendment has the approval of a large number of Senators, I am sure, who voted in favor of the committee amendment, and I think I am safe in saying that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not object to it. If we mean what we say we mean, I can see every reason why this amendment should be adopted, and I trust it may be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I regard the amendment offered a moment ago by the Senator from New Hampshire as wholly unnecessary, it being a repetition of existing law. I regard this amendment as unnecessary, in view of the legislation of last year, as not adding to or taking from existing legislation. Therefore I shall vote for it.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to raise a point of order on the amendment. This bill is threatened with amendments without number, which in their nature, it seems to me, involve general legislation. If this amendment means anything, it means to enact something in the nature of general legislation. It has no reference to the expenditure of the appropriation which is voted; and simply that we may maintain the rule upon the subject which was enforced by the Chair, the Vice-President then occupying it, at the last session of Congress, I insist upon the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin again state his point of order?

Mr. VILAS. The point of order is that the amendment involves general legislation, and is in violation of that rule which prohibits, without exception, without qualification, any general legislation upon an appropriation bill in any case.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reply to the point of order made by the Senator from Wisconsin, I think it is only sufficient to say that the Committee on Appropriations brought in an amendment which does violate the rule of the Senate had it not been reported by a standing committee of the Senate, which it was, and hence it was not obnoxious to the rule. This amendment is simply an amendment to the committee amendment, and if the committee amendment, which involves general legislation, is to be held to be valid, it seems to me that the point of order made by the Senator from Wisconsin, that the Senate can not amend the amendment, is not tenable and that the point of order must necessarily fall.

Mr. VILAS. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, I will state that the amendment now proposed is not an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee. That amendment has been adopted. If it had been proposed as an amendment to that amendment, the question would have been possibly a little different, although I hardly think it would have been different in that case.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, on Saturday last I stated to the Senate that I should offer these two amendments as amendments to the committee amendment. This morning, by unanimous consent, the Senate solemnly agreed to permit these amendments to be offered as amendments to the committee amendments, and upon that agreement they have been offered.

Mr. LODGE. And, let me say, I withdrew the motion to lay the amendment upon the table, on the understanding that these amendments should be offered and voted upon, and that was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. It has become the fashion lately to get unanimous-consent agreements which no one knows about except one or two persons who ask for them. I do not know how to answer a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. LODGE. The agreement was made when the Senator was in his seat.

Mr. VILAS. Of course, if there was a unanimous-consent agreement I will take no steps whatever in disregard of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. VILAS. If that unanimous consent were given, then the question still remains whether general legislation can be ingrafted upon this appropriation bill by offering an amendment to an amendment. If this amendment had been offered to the amendment before it was adopted and had been adopted as a part of it, it would have made the whole amendment obnoxious to the objection which I raise.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it would not.

Mr. VILAS. But the amendment not having been proposed until after that amendment was adopted, the point of order must be urged now or it can not be urged at all. It is well taken now, as it would have been well taken to the entire amendment if this legislation had been incorporated as a part of the amendment by the adoption of the amendment to the amendment before the vote just taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Wisconsin to insist upon the point of order?

Mr. VILAS. I do insist upon the point of order. I do not understand that the unanimous-consent agreement in any way affects the right to raise the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say, in regard to the point of order and the unanimous-consent agreement, there was no question that the Senator from New Hampshire had a right to move those amendments to the amendments before the question was put on the amendment itself. He waived that right on the distinct understanding that he was to move them after the main amendment had been voted on. That agreement was made here in the presence of the Senate, immediately after the reading of the Address, when we were discussing these points. I had the floor. I made a motion, which was recognized by the Chair, to lay the amendment on the table. I withdrew that motion on the distinct understanding that the Senator from New Hampshire was not to lose any right to move his amendments after the amendment had been voted upon. I made that specific point. He waived his unquestioned right to move those amendments before the main amendment was voted upon. Now a point of order is raised to cut him out after that agreement was squarely and fairly reached, and I was part of it, because I withdrew the motion which I held the floor to make, and the Chair had recognized me, as the Chair will remember, for that purpose.

As to the point of order, Mr. President, I do not think there is anything in it, because this is an amendment to an amendment; but, in any event, it seems to me that in ordinary fair dealing, after the Senator from New Hampshire specifically withdrew his amendments at the proper stage where they could be offered on the plain understanding of everybody concerned, he should offer them unobstructed subsequently, and have a vote upon them; and after I had withdrawn my motion in order to give that opportunity and come into the agreement, I think it is too late to make the point of order.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, whatever the unanimous-consent agreement was, if anybody knows, I do not desire to trench upon it in the slightest degree, and I will not, at whatever expense to my own judgment, for I recognize the practice of the Senate and the binding obligation upon Senators to observe a unanimous-consent agreement, no matter how obtained. I should like to make one suggestion upon that point, however, and that is that no unanimous consent ought ever to be entered as obligatory upon the Senate until the basis of it, the request for it, shall have been clearly stated from the chair.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LODGE. That was done.

Mr. VILAS. This practice of somebody asking unanimous consent, and it being simply said, "Is there objection? The Chair hears none," whereby the Senate does not know what is being agreed to, oftentimes in the confusion leads to, and has in many instances within my observation lead to, many evils. But I will put the Senator from New Hampshire, so far as this point of order is concerned, precisely on the same footing upon which he would have stood if he had offered his amendment to the amendment of the committee before that amendment was adopted. That is all, I am sure, the Senator from New Hampshire can ask for.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I ask, and all my amendment contemplates.

Mr. FAULKNER. The point of order, then, will not have effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. VILAS. I do not desire to be understood for a moment as trenching upon that privilege, since it seems to have been agreed to, although I did not know it.

Now, the point is just the same. Of course the Senator from

New Hampshire would not have pretended that he could impose upon the pending bill general legislation by an amendment to an amendment, or that if an amendment in itself proper is reported by the committee to the bill, the same committee to which the bill had been committed for examination, he will not pretend that he could have added to their amendment what would make that amendment inadmissible when otherwise it was admissible. That is precisely the effect of the amendment which he now proposes. Suppose the amendment of the committee still to be pending before the Senate, it was an amendment admissible to be made. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment which if adopted to it will put general legislation upon the bill. I object for the reason that the rule of order prevents the consideration of it; and if that be so, the rule of order must be just as pertinent to amendments to amendments as to an amendment directly to the bill itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, my amendment simply defines what the amendment of the committee contemplates.

Mr. LODGE. It is doubtless germane.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a definition, and, as it were, a fixing of the time during which the amendment of the committee shall run.

Mr. BURROWS. It is a limitation of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a limitation of the amendment of the committee, and nothing else.

Mr. VILAS. It obviously is more than that.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all.

Mr. VILAS. Here is an amendment proposed by the committee which seems to me to be entirely proper, not open to any point of order at all. It simply specifies how the Secretary of the Interior shall expend a certain appropriation made to be expended within the next fiscal year. That is the amendment proposed by the committee, a strictly proper amendment, limiting and determining the uses of the particular appropriation made in the bill. Now comes in the Senator from New Hampshire and says by his amendment no matter how that money shall be expended, but hereafter no Congress shall appropriate any more. Practically that is what he says.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make an inquiry, if permitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Are there any amendments now for any such purpose that do not absolutely cease on the 30th of June, 1897?

Mr. LODGE. We are now providing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

Mr. VILAS. I am unable to hear the Senator from Massachusetts. I should like to hear his remark.

Mr. HOAR. Are there any amendments now in force that do not absolutely cease on the 30th of June, 1897, and when this bill passes will there be any amendments in force that do not absolutely cease on the 30th of June, 1898?

Mr. VILAS. There will not be, unless the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is adopted; and if it be, its force will begin after the 30th of June, 1898.

Mr. HOAR. I can not understand that this is anything in the bill but the declaration of a legislative purpose.

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

Mr. HOAR. It does not offer to change existing law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. VILAS. What is its effect? It does not touch the expenditure of these appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. Strip this matter of everything else; suppose we were to introduce and enact now a bill appropriating $100,000 for a monument to somebody, and some one should introduce an amendment, "Provided, That we never intend to appropriate anything more for the purpose." That is the whole of it.

Mr. VILAS. That is not quite the whole of it. This is a declaration which ought to have, if we have any right to make it at all, the force of law. It is either legislative in its effect or it is nothing. Is it a matter of mere opinion that we are expressing, or are we engaged here in enacting law? It does not relate to the particular appropriation in the least degree. It is a declaration of the policy of the United States in the form of law, obligatory upon the United States hereafter, just to the full extent that any law we can pass is obligatory upon a future Congress. No law that we can pass is obligatory upon future Congresses if they choose to repeal it. This is as obligatory upon them as any of them. Therefore it is legislation or it is nothing. Is it a stump speech to be inserted in the bill? Is it an expression of opinion, of policy? Is it something proffered to carry out the idea of some society or some class of opinion in the country or is it an act of Congress when it shall have passed? Clearly, in any point of view we may regard it, this is, it seems to me, general legislation.

Mr. President, I am not actuated in making the point of order half as much by any opposition to the particular amendment pending, about which I care very little, though I think it is obnoxious to the objection that we are undertaking to obtrude our opinions upon another Congress, as I am anxious to see, for future purposes in reference to the bill, where it may become vastly more important, that this rule is not trampled under foot. The rule is explicit:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

There is no qualification of it. There is no exception to it. It was upon the most elaborate and careful debate, in which the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] rendered, as I thought, a service to the Senate and the country, at the last session of Congress affirmed and applied. I hope that it will continue to be, and that is the end of my interest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin makes a point of order against the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. Not knowing how he would vote, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with that Senator and withhold my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I inquire if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with that Senator and withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and withhold my vote.

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. VILAS. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] that we might transfer our pairs and vote, in order to make a quorum.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I assent to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. Let the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] stand paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. MCBRIDE. Very well.

Mr. VILAS. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCBRIDE. I vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. In justice to my colleague [Mr. HOAR], I feel bound to state that he announced a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. PUGH. I thought the Senator from Massachusetts, with whom I have a general pair, had voted. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I find that he has not voted, and I shall have to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Brown,	Davis,	Lodge,	Platt,
Butler,	Elkins,	McBride,	Proctor,
Cannon,	Gallinger,	Mantle,	Stewart.
Chandler,	Gear,	Peffer,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Pettigrew,

NAYS—26.

Cameron,	Irby,	Pugh,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Sewell,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cullom,	McBride,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Davis,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Bate,	Elkins,	Mantle,	Roach.
Berry,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Shoup,

Carter,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,	White.
Chilton,	Kenney,	Pettigrew,
Clark,	Lindsay,	Platt,
Cockrell.	Lodge,	Pritchard,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll on the question as to whether or not the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is in order.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], who, I think, has not voted, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote.

Mr. VILAS. I suppose the arrangement made with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] on the previous vote can stand, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] will remain paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] and I can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WETMORE. I desire to say that on the former roll call I voted under a misapprehension. Had I understood the question, I should have voted "yea" instead of "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 22, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Allison,	Davis,	McBride,	Platt,
Berry,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Pritchard,

So the amendment proposed by Mr. GALLINGER was decided to be not in order.

Mr. LODGE. A vote being refused on that amendment, I now move to lay the whole amendment on the table, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think that can possibly be done. The Senate has adopted the amendment, and having adopted the amendment, it is not within the province of the Committee of the Whole to consider it in any form.

Mr. LODGE. It has been since amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it has not been amended since adopted by the Senate, and it is not now in order to move to lay the amendment upon the table, the Chair thinks.

Mr. LODGE. There was an amendment inserted, as I understand, making provision for a tribe of Indians in Alaska, which is a part of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LODGE. If there is not any doubt about that fact——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not familiar with the history of the amendment, but the Chair is informed that the amendment referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts was a separate amendment, and is not an amendment to the amendment which has been adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Chair is misinformed.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a mistake. That was an amendment to a pending amendment, and it was adopted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As I understand, the amendment offered by the committee was adopted. Afterwards the Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment, which was an amendment to the bill, and that was accepted and adopted. I do not think the motion to lay upon the table, therefore, can possibly be in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not the parliamentary status.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. According to the information furnished the Chair by the Secretary, the amendment of the committee was adopted and the amendment subsequently offered was a separate amendment and not necessarily connected with the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment be read as it now stands.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that the amendment of the committee was adopted by a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is proper that I should make a statement in this connection. I had an amendment to the committee amendment, which I would have offered had I not got unanimous consent to offer it as an amendment to the amendment after the vote upon the committee amendment. Accepting that unanimous consent as covering that ground, I withheld my amendment and offered it under the unanimous agreement, and it became a part of the committee amendment to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I call for the reading of the amendment as proposed by the committee and as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read. The Chair is only aware of the situation as informed by the Secretary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to call attention also to the fact that when the proposition was made that the Senator from New Hampshire should have leave to offer the amendment it was not suggested that it should be offered as an amendment to an amendment, but that he should have permission to offer the amendment, which he had the right to do. It was an amendment to the bill after the bill had been amended by a yea-and-nay vote of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. On Saturday last I had stated half a dozen times that I proposed to offer this amendment to the committee amendment. It was perfectly well understood in the Senate, and this discovery is something new in reference to the parliamentary status.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Hampshire had unanimous consent to offer two amendments, and the second one has just been thrown out by the Senate on a point of order, though he had unanimous consent to offer both of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. And, therefore, I feel at liberty to offer my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. In line 18, page 45, after the word "Alaska," insert:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the Secretary read the entire amendment of the committee as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 16, page 45, insert:

Of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of the Indians in Alaska; and it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will do.

Mr. FAULKNER. All that has been adopted; and the Senate having adopted it, it is beyond the province of the Committee of the Whole to interfere with it.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment has been amended since it was adopted.

Mr. FAULKNER. But that does not make the slightest difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that it is not in order at this time to strike out what has been already voted into the bill.

Mr. LODGE. That rule was suspended by unanimous consent by the insertion of the paragraph just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that it is not in order now to move to lay the amendment as amended upon the table.

Mr. LODGE. Then I shall make the motion later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can be made later in the Senate, when the bill reaches that point.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, on Saturday last I offered an amendment to the pending bill which properly should be considered at this point. For information, I ask that the amendment be now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 5, on page 46, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That for the purchase, lease, repair, and construction of school buildings and the purchase of school sites for the use and accommodation of Indian pupils now being educated under the contract system, the sum of $1,000,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to expend this sum, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for this purpose, and to have such schools in readiness for the use and accommodation of said pupils on or before the 1st day of July, 1898.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is his purpose to go through with the committee amendments before amendments from individual Senators are received, or whether he is willing to have other amendments offered and acted upon as the reading of the bill proceeds?

Mr. PETTIGREW. My purpose is—and that was the order of the Senate—that the committee amendments shall be disposed of first. I think, however, the Senator from Montana simply wishes to make a statement and then withdraw his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment of the Senator from Montana is before the Senate.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senate, I merely desire to say that since offering the amendment I have been informed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs gives it as his opinion that the appropriation already provided by the committee amendment is sufficient to cover all the purposes of making provision for the education of Indian pupils under Government control, and that he believes that all necessary arrangements can be perfected by July 1, 1898. Such being the case, Mr. President, it is manifestly unnecessary that the amendment should be acted upon, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 6 on page 46. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Support of schools," on page 48, after line 17, to insert:

For the purchase of the east half of section 16, township 107, range 48, Moody County, in the State of South Dakota, to be used as an industrial farm for said Flandreau School, at a price not to exceed $25 per acre, $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the proposed amendment of the committee is voted on I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota in charge of the bill what the necessity is for this expenditure of $8,000 for the purchase of 320 acres of prairie land adjoining the Flandreau (S. Dak.) Indian School?

Mr. PETTIGREW. This school has been enlarged from a school with a capacity for 150 students to one with a capacity for 300 students. The superintendent of the school urged the purchase of a section of land, so as to embrace the Sioux River in the school farm. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends the purchase of 320 acres of land. The superintendent of the school recommended the purchase of this identical tract with an additional tract equal in area. The land described in this amendment adjoins the school tract and reaches the Sioux River. The superintendent of the school thought the land could be purchased for $30 per acre. I thought it could be purchased for $25 per acre.

This school is located at the county seat of Moody County, and within a very short distance of the center of the town, and, therefore, farming lands there are more valuable than they would be at a greater distance away.

Mr. GALLINGER. How far is the land from the town?

Mr. PETTIGREW. About three-quarters of a mile.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would further ask the Senator from South Dakota how much farming land they have now at the Flandreau Indian School, in South Dakota?

Mr. PETTIGREW. About 80 acres. There are 160 acres in the school tract, part of which is planted in timber and the rest of it is occupied by the buildings and school grounds.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let me ask the Senator, if we pass this amendment and it becomes part of the statute, who is to make this purchase? I notice that there is a limitation put upon this provision. But I will call the Senator's attention to a subsequent amendment upon which there does not seem to be a limitation as to the price paid per acre. Who is to make the purchase?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I suppose it will be done under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the same as the expenditure of all other appropriations under this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not distinguished as an economist—I mean that in the sense of being economical in voting the people's money for public purposes. I have contended for liberal and sometimes for extravagant appropriations, very likely. But it seems to me that we have come to a point in our national history that commands every Senator of the United States who is here in the capacity of a lawmaker to call a halt on the indiscriminate use of the public moneys for purposes we can get along without.

Here we have a proposition to purchase 320 acres of prairie farming land at $25 an acre in the State of South Dakota. Why, Mr. President, there are hundreds of thousands of dollars of mortgages held in the little State that I have the honor in part to represent upon land in those Western States, where the men who loaned their money upon it can not realize $5 an acre, and certainly not $10 an acre, and during the last political campaign we were treated to elaborate discussions, as we have been in the Senate of the United States by Senators representing those Western farming regions, and we have been told that the policy of this Government—the gold policy, as they are pleased to denominate it—has utterly ruined the agricultural interests of the great West and has destroyed the value of farm lands to an extent that is fearful to contemplate; and yet we are asked here to go in the country—I myself have driven past this Flandreau school in South Dakota—and pay $25 an acre for 320 acres of prairie land. I do not believe we are prepared to make any such bargain as that.

Concerning this matter of farming, so far as the Indians are concerned, here is a people who have been in direct contact with the whites in this country from the foundation of our Government; they have observed all our processes of civilization, including that of agriculture, and yet, at the very close of the nineteenth century, we are paying out of the public funds money to send men to those Indians to teach them how to farm.

Turn back to page 9 of the bill, and you will find that we have provided that certain farmers and stockmen shall go to those agencies, and we shall pay them out of the public funds to instruct the Indians in the method of plowing up that prairie land, planting corn and sowing wheat and gathering pumpkins.

I do not believe it is a legitimate or proper expenditure of the public funds, and I do not believe we ought to put upon the bill this provision of general law which I have no doubt is horrifying to the Senator from Wisconsin, who does not chance to be in his seat now, whereby we go into the business of purchasing 320 acres of prairie farm land at $25 an acre. I have not very much regard for the Indian as an agriculturist. He may be entitled to a great deal of credit in other directions, but as a farmer he is a monumental failure. I do not believe we are going to do ourselves justice if we vote large sums of money out of the public Treasury to try to educate him after he has had an opportunity to learn to plow and sow for one hundred and fifty or two hundred years.

Now, I am not quite sure what these men who are sent out to the Indians to instruct them in farming are going to teach the Indians. I clipped the other day from one of the leading journals of this country an editorial, by its agricultural editor no doubt, concerning the work that is being done in the Agricultural Department here, for which we are paying vast sums of money—millions of dollars. It is entitled "Secretary Morton's masterwork," and I suppose these farmers who are going out there will probably take this little brochure with them to instruct the Indian how to raise chickens. I wish to read this editorial for the benefit of the Senator from South Dakota, who is something of a farmer himself.

During Mr. Morton's term of office as Secretary of Agriculture he has enriched modern literature with works of the most erudite character; in fact, it may be said of people who have read them that "still they gazed, and still the wonder grew, that one small head could carry all he knew." But now that he is about to retire from the duties of office he has evidently determined that there shall be some particular thing by which the country shall remember him, and so he has devoted his powers of intellect to the preparation of what may be called his opus magnus, the crowning achievement of a life that has been devoted to the welfare of his country.

This work is in the form of a bulletin which deals with tapeworms in poultry. This is a subject which has hitherto been sadly neglected, and when it is learned that a mild and inoffensive chicken is sometimes made the repository of thirty-three distinct, separate, and known varieties of tapeworms, besides being a hiding place for others that may be styled irregulars or guerrillas, it can be seen that it was time that the problem of how to free the chicken from such thraldom should be solved.

All of these parasites have high-sounding and formidable names, and it is fearful to think that the chicken which is scratching the onion bed or indulging in some other equally innocent occupation bears within it an enemy of the name of Bothriocephalidæ. How a chicken can carry around such a burden, augmented, too, by the weight of more than a score of other parasites of equally as aristocratic titles, is puzzling to understand, and a chicken so burdened could truthfully say, with Hamlet, "I have that within me which passes show."

It is to the destruction of these things that Secretary Morton is directing all his energies. In fact, he puts the matter so plainly before the public that there is no reason why anybody who has chickens should not be able to destroy the whole array of tapeworms. All that is necessary is to prevent the chickens from eating the larvæ from fishes, earthworms, slugs, snails, and house flies. Once that has been accomplished, the way to freedom is clear. A notice posted on the fence or hung from the roosts in the hen house would undoubtedly prove a warning to every sensible chicken and lead it to change its diet. It is scarcely possible that a chicken would longer indulge in a dinner of earthworms and slugs after knowing that the natural result would be the presence in its anatomy of Mr. Bothriocephalidæ. Mr. Morton has once again proved himself to be a public benefactor.

It has occurred to me that if these 320 acres in South Dakota are to be devoted to chicken farming with this bulletin of knowledge that has been issued from the Agricultural Department at the expense of the taxpayers of this country, it might possibly be well to vote this donation; but I do not apprehend it is for any such purpose. This Indian school has now 80 acres of land, for which the Government has paid good money. It is now proposed all at once to increase those 80 acres to 400 acres, and then we will send out farmers from the Everglades of Florida and the ice-bound coasts of New England to teach those Indians how to cultivate 400 acres of prairie land for which the Government has paid its money that belongs to the taxpayers of this country.

I am against it. I notice, on turning to page 52, that the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, who, of course, knows a great deal more about this matter than I presume to know, has made another provision. He goes out to Pierre, near the capital of the State, where a farm is discovered that he is going to buy, and he is going to pay $50 an acre for it, and there is no provision that we shall pay less than $50 an acre. That is the flat price for which this South Dakota farm is to be sold to the Government for the purpose of enlarging the farm of another Indian school. These provisions are put into the bill by the committee of which the Senator is chairman. They are general legislation, obnoxious to the rule had they not been reported by the standing committee. I think the Senator from Wisconsin ought to be in his seat and raise his hands in holy horror at this introduction into appropriation bills of matters that carry general legislation.

I do not believe we want the farm at Flandreau at $35 an acre; I do not believe we want the farm at Pierre at $50 an acre. So long as these Indians are too lazy to cultivate the land they occupy; so long as we are sending men from all over the country out there at the expense of the taxpayers to teach them how to cultivate the land they occupy, it seems to me we had better consider their comfort a little and let them rest in peace, quietude, and happiness on the acres they already have through the benefaction of this great and generous Government of ours.

The Senator from South Dakota, of course, has a good reason why we should go into this purchase by the wholesale of agricultural lands in his State at the expense of the Government, and for the supposed benefit of the Indians who chance to inhabit South Dakota. But these are days when it is the duty of every honest legislator to keep from every appropriation bill that passes Congress every single dollar of appropriation we can get along without, and I trust that the House of Representatives may not be burdened with this amendment, that the committee of conference may not be compelled to spend its valuable time considering this matter, but that the Senate may take it in hand, and may say to the Senator from South Dakota and the distinguished committee of which he is a member, "We do not propose to go into the purchase of farming lands in South Dakota, 320 acres in one instance and 100 acres in another, when we do not need them, when the condition of the public Treasury does not warrant any such ridiculous expenditure."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think this provision is pretty well guarded. It provides that we shall purchase this land at a price not exceeding $35 an acre, and use so much of the appropriation as is necessary. Now, the necessity for the farm has not been discussed by the Senator from New Hampshire, and I presume by his speech and the reading of the extract he has accomplished the object for which he rose. It seems to me that instead of trying to confer upon these Indians a college education, a practical education is what they need more than anything else, and that if we should teach them to read and write the English language, the rudiments of mathematics, and then give something practical in the way of farming, so that when they return they can make a living, we shall have accomplished a better purpose than by bringing them on the cars, for instance, to Carlisle or Hampton or to the Lincoln Institute at enormous expense to give them purely a classical education.

Therefore I think a good purpose is served in securing a sufficient amount of land to employ these boys. At this school there will be 150 Indian boys, and 400 acres of land is none too much. Perhaps it is not necessary for them to learn to read the bulletins, to become familiar with scientific terms about chickens, but they should be taught how to manage cattle and farm animals and to till the soil. That is the most important education we can confer upon them; and the committee thought it was wise to make this provision.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think in a matter of this importance (with very much of the criticism which the Senator from New Hampshire has so well stated I agree) that the Senate ought at least to be advised of what the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior and the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are on this purchase or the necessity for it; and I hope the Senator in charge of the bill, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, will have the recommendation from the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs read to the Senate for its information and guidance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that I have not those papers here, but we can pass over this item.

Mr. GALLINGER (to Mr. PETTIGREW). Make the statement, and I will accept it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The superintendent of schools recommends the purchase of the entire section of land, so as to embrace the Sioux River. The committee thought that one-half of it would be sufficient, and therefore designated that half of the section which does embrace the river, for farm purposes. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior recommend the purchase not only of this tract, but also of the other tract, at Pierre, S. Dak. If the item is passed over, I will secure those letters, if the Senator desires.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the item will be passed over, and that the Senator will have the recommendations of those officials read before the amendment is voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEAR in the chair). The amendment will be passed over, without objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 14, on page 49.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment, to be added after line 14, on page 49.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 14, on page 49, it is proposed to insert:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the support of this school during the present fiscal year is hereby reappropriated, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the work of repairing and furnishing the buildings at this school.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 49, line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "seven;" in line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert "for extension and completion of steam plant, $6,000; for erection of warehouse, $3,000; for erection of barns, $3,000; for repairs of hospital, $1,000; for erection and equipment of laundry, $2,500;" and on page 50, line 3, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fifty-six thousand nine" and insert "seventy-two thousand three;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., at $167 per annum each, $50,100; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,700; for erection of shops and equipping the same, $2,000; for extension and completion of steam plant, $6,000; for erection of warehouse, $3,000; for erection of barns, $3,000; for repairs of hospital, $1,000; for erection and equipment of laundry, $2,500; in all, $72,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "for addition to schoolroom, $3,200," and in line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand five" and insert "thirty thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., at $167 per annum each, $25,050; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; for addition to schoolroom, $3,200; in all, $30,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand" and insert "one thousand eight hundred;" and on page 52, line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phœnix, Ariz., at $167 per annum each, $66,800; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,800; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for erection of additional buildings, $30,000; for erection of shops and equipment of same, $3,000; in all, $104,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 10, to insert:

For the purchase of not less than 100 acres of good farming land in the immediate vicinity of the Indian training school at Pierre, S. Dak., to be used as an industrial farm for said school, and to be, in his judgment, suited for such purpose, $5,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that this amendment may go over with the other amendment just passed over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 52, line 22, after the word "dormitory," to insert "to be built of stone;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., at $167 per annum each, $16,700; for pay of superintendent at said school $1,200; for general repairs and improvements, $2,500; for school building and dormitory, to be built of stone, $10,000; in all, $30,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For the support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., at $167 per annum each, $41,750; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,600; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for steam-heating plant, $10,000; in all, $58,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 9, before the word "and," to strike out "sixty-three thousand" and insert "sixty-two thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., at $167 each per annum, $41,750; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,600; for water supply for irrigation and fire protection, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for erection of additional buildings, $10,000; in all, $62,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "four;" and on page 55, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to make the clause read:

For the support and education of 125 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., at $167 per annum each, $20,875; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,400; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for erection of school building, $10,000; in all, $35,275.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 11, to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall employ Indian girls as assistant matrons and Indian boys as farmers and industrial teachers in all Indian schools when it is practicable to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 19, after the word "with," to strike out "the rules" and insert "such conditions, rules;" and in line 20, after the word "the," to insert "conduct and methods of instruction and;" so as to make the clause read:

That all expenditure of money appropriated for school purposes in this act shall be at all times under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and in all respects in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to the conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may be from time to time prescribed by him, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Senator from South Dakota in charge of the bill explain to the Senate the need of the proposed amendment on the fifty-fifth page. The House legislated as follows:

That all expenditure of money appropriated for school purposes in this act shall be at all times under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and in all respects in conformity with the rules and regulations as to the expenditure of money as may be from time to time prescribed by him, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

The committee seem to have injected into this provision something about the conduct and methods of instruction. I do not see why we should dictate to the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that they should take cognizance of the methods of instruction in these schools. We are paying superintendents and teachers for that purpose, and it strikes me that the amendment is entirely unnecessary, and that it had better not be adopted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The committee thought this wording was better, and would tend to a better expenditure of the money. I think it is largely a matter of opinion. It is for the Senate to decide whether one wording or the other shall be used. The wording of the bill as it comes from the other House simply gives greater latitude than the wording proposed by the Senate committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator what he understands the term "conduct and methods of instruction" to signify? What is it that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are going to do different from what has been done in these schools? What does it include? Is it as to whether the pupils shall study algebra or something else, or is it something outside of the ordinary studies pursued in the common schools of this country? That is the point I wish the Senator from South Dakota to answer.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that my opinion as to what the words mean is a matter of entire indifference. The Senator has his own opinion, probably.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit that it is not a matter of entire indifference to the Senate. The Senator brings in a bill; he amends the House provision, and then he cavalierly says to a Senator who asks him a civil question that it is a matter of no consequence what he believes or what the committee believes. I will not press the matter, and will not even take the trouble to vote on it; but the Senator's answer is not such an answer as he should give as to a change in a statute which is a great deal of concern to the American people. I am willing to have it passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 1, page 56.

Mr. BATE. I believe it was agreed that this provision should be passed over until we got through the reading of the bill, when we shall return to it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I suggest that we temporarily pass over pages 56, 57, and 58, and down to line 7 on page 59, and dispose of the other committee amendments.

Mr. BATE. That is right. That is the way we did at the last session, and I think it is proper that it should be done now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, agreed to by the Senator from South Dakota, the matter referred to will be passed over.

Mr. VILAS. What was done with the amendment to which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] objected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I hoped to see the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire did not object.

Mr. VILAS. If the matter has been disposed of, I will not object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The question can be treated as still open, if the Senator from Wisconsin desires to discuss it.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, after line 14, to strike out:

For the purchase of an electric dynamo and placing the same in position for electric lighting of the public buildings at the Oneida Industrial School, in Wisconsin, $1,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I trust the committee will not insist on striking out this item. It is a small affair. The appropriation is recommended by the local agent and also by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have a letter from the superintendent of that school which perhaps I had better have read, and I think it gives the Senator the information desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
INDIAN SCHOOL SERVICE,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT
ONEIDA INDIAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL,
Oneida, Wis., February 5, 1897.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 23, 1897, page 1312, we find the amendment to the Indian appropriation bill reading as follows: "At the foot of page 51, after line 24, add the following words: 'For the purchase of an electric dynamo and placing the same in position for electric lighting of the public buildings at the Oneida Industrial School, in Wisconsin, $1,000.'"

As you are the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, and since the bill must soon come before your committee, I have the honor to say that what is intended is the purchase of an electric-light plant, including engine, dynamo, switch board, wiring, lamps, etc., and should the amendment pass your honorable body and become a law, I am somewhat afraid that this amendment would cover only the purchase of a dynamo.

It seems to me that it would be better were this wording changed a little and the words "engine and other fixtures" added after the word "dynamo;" so that the amendment would read: "For the purchase of an electric dynamo, engine, and other fixtures, and placing the same in position for electric lighting of the public buildings at the Oneida Industrial School, in Wisconsin, $1,000."

I would most respectfully ask your consideration in this matter, and if in your judgment you deem it advisable, would request that you have the House bill amended accordingly.

Very respectfully,
CHAS. F. PEIRCE,
Superintendent.

Hon. JAMES K. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that I have no objection to the clause being corrected to conform to the letter, if the Senator from Wisconsin desires it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I suggest that the language proposed by the superintendent be inserted, and that the committee amendment be rejected. I move to add, after the word "dynamo," in line 15, page 59, the words "engine and other fixtures;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of an electric dynamo, engine, and other fixtures, and placing the same in position for electric lighting of the public buildings at the Oneida Industrial School, in Wisconsin, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out lines 15 to 17, inclusive, on page 59.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, after line 17, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the employment of the surveyor on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation in Idaho for six months after the termination of his services for two years, as provided in the fourth article of the agreement with the Nez Perce Indians, ratified and confirmed by the act of August 15, 1894, his compensation, at the rate of $1,200 per annum, to be paid from any surplus remaining of the $10,000 set apart by said article for the purchase of two portable sawmills.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age or disability any allottee of Indian lands under this or former acts of Congress can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same may be leased, in the discretion of the Secretary, upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by him, for a term not exceeding three years for farming or grazing purposes, or five years for mining or business purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 25, after the word "construction," to insert "of ditches and reservoirs;" in the same line, after the word "purchase," to strike out the comma; on page 61, line 1, after the word "irrigating," to strike out "machinery;" in the same line, after the word "tools," to strike out the comma; in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" and in line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And of this amount not exceeding $2,700 may be used for the temporary employment of persons of practical experience in irrigation work, at a compensation not to exceed $100 per month each, and not exceeding $1,500 for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of such persons.

So as to make the clause read:

For construction of ditches and reservoirs, purchase and use of irrigating tools and appliances on Indian reservations, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to his control, $40,000; and of this amount not exceeding $2,700 may be used for the temporary employment of persons of practical experience in irrigation work, at a compensation not to exceed $100 per month each, and not exceeding $1,500 for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of such persons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 14, to insert:

For the survey of lands in the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, $20,000, to be immediately available; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to survey the whole of said reservation as soon as possible, without reference to the location of allotments to Indians on said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 21, to insert:

For examination in the field of the surveys made within the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, including clerical work in the office of the surveyor-general, $4,000.

Mr. CHILTON. I should be glad to have an explanation of that amendment, if the Senator from South Dakota will be good enough to make it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The reservation is a very large one, there being about 1,000 acres of land for every man, woman, and child upon it. The reservation was established in 1889 and these Indians placed upon it. Under the treaty of 1889 it was provided that the lands should be surveyed and allotments made to the Indians. Yet in spite of this fact no surveys have ever been made upon this reservation. I have tried for several years to secure surveys of the reservation, so that allotments could be made, but I have been unable to do so for some reason. It is a well-known fact that there are three or four families—Frenchmen who have married Indian women—who have from thirty to forty thousand head of cattle and graze this entire area, and it is for their interest not to have it surveyed. I do not know anything about the influence they may exert, or whom they influence, or what they do, but for some reason we have been unable to get these lands surveyed, so that allotments can be made to the Indians. It seems to me it is an exceedingly important provision.

Mr. CHILTON. As I understand the Senator, the law heretofore provided for a survey, but it has not been carried out.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It has not been carried out.

Mr. CHILTON. I think on that statement the amendment should pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 20, to insert:

For resurvey of the lands of the Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory, $141,500, to be immediately available: Provided, That such resurveys shall be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey by such persons as may be employed by or under him for that purpose; and such surveys shall be executed under instructions to be issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and subdivisional surveys shall be executed under the rectangular system, as now provided by law: Provided further, That when any surveys shall have been so made and plats and field notes thereof prepared they shall be approved and certified to by the Director of the Geological Survey, and two copies thereof shall be returned, one for filing in the Indian Office and one in the General Land Office; and such surveys, field notes, and plats shall have the same legal force and effect as heretofore given to the acts of surveyors-general: Provided further, That all laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby declared to be inoperative as respects such surveys: Provided further, That hereafter in the public-land surveys of the Indian Territory iron or stone posts shall be erected at each township corner, upon which shall be recorded the usual marks required to be placed on township corners by the laws and regulations governing public-land surveys.

Mr. GALLINGER. This seems to be a provision for a resurvey of the lands of the Chickasaw Nation, and the very large appropriation of $141,500 is to be made for this purpose, and it is to be immediately available. As a matter of information (and I trust that the Senator from South Dakota will be a trifle more courteous to me than he was when I last appealed to him for information), I desire to ask the Senator what the immediate necessity is, considering the deplorable condition of our Treasury, to appropriate $141,500 for a resurvey of lands that must have been surveyed or else it could not be a provision for a resurvey?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say, in the first place, that these lands were surveyed many years ago, but from all appearances they were surveyed not on the ground, but in Washington or somewhere else. There is no evidence of the survey. Notes were made up; it is possible that the surveyors went into the field; but from an investigation on the ground, it is found that there are no corners remaining, and no trace of the survey. If it was made, it was so erroneously and badly made that to retrace it would cost more than to resurvey it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire of the Senator if this appropriation has been asked for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It has been recommended by the Geological Survey. I do not know whether it is asked for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or not. In fact, it is not under his supervision. He has nothing to do with it. This is one of the Five Civilized Tribes. It is in that country where we are trying to break up a form of government which is uncivilized and intolerable, and it is necessary to dispose of the title to the lands before we can break up the tribal ownership of the property. Therefore we have provided for a survey of all the lands embraced in the other nations in the Indian Territory. That survey will be completed by the appropriation provided for on page 62, just preceding this appropriation, and this appropriation will complete the work. It seems very important that it should be completed. It is exceedingly important that something should be done to break up the conditions which exist in that country; for it is a remarkable fact that, with a population among the Five Civilized Tribes of about 400,000 people, there is on an average a murder committed every day. There were 365 murders last year among this sparse population. They own a tribal patent for the land, and until we can subdivide in some way those lands and the title is conferred upon the individuals who belong to the tribe, and their tribal government is broken up, these conditions must continue.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator when was the original survey made of these lands?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I can not give the date, but it was many years ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are there any plats in existence, so far as the Senator knows?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand that the plats were made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think this is a pressing matter that we ought at this juncture——

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is a very pressing matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. To still further deplete the Treasury and perhaps create the necessity of issuing bonds, which always troubles the Senator from South Dakota when we do it, to carry on the affairs of the nation. Does the Senator think this is a pressing necessity at this time?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is undoubtedly a pressing necessity. Of course I do not care to go into a discussion of the financial question on the pending bill unless we must do it, but the President of the United States only a few weeks ago informed us that there was a surplus of $125,000,000 in the Treasury, and that there was no deficiency, and no prospect of any.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course the Senator himself has informed the Senate that that is not according to the facts, so that the point he has made now is without potency. I take it we could not have a vote on this question unless we called for a quorum of the Senate. I am not proposing to do that; but I submit that if this is the way the Senate is going on to increase the expenditures of this Government beyond that which the House of Representatives proposes to do, if this is a sample of all the appropriation bills that are to come before us during the present Congress, a condition of things more deplorable than now exists will confront us in the near future.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was absent from the Chamber for a few moments. I have just now come in, and I notice what has been under discussion.

I wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that while I sympathize with many of his criticisms and much he has been saying through the day, there is no doubt of the absolute necessity for this appropriation for the resurvey of the lands of the Chickasaw Nation. That country was to be surveyed under a treaty between that nation and the United States made years and years ago. The survey that was made forty, or possibly fifty years ago, was so defectively made as to be now absolutely worthless. There is only now and then a marked corner in the entire country. There are miles and miles where there can not be the slightest indication found of the previous survey made. There were field notes, there were reports made, and they are matters of record, but there is nothing on the ground to show the subdivisions of the land. There are a great many people there; the country is being filled up by white people as well as by Indians. These lands ought to be subdivided as near as possible and allowed to go into the possession of those Indians, and it is necessary that a survey shall be made preliminary to any such division.

There can be no question that this survey ought to be made, in my judgment. It has been strongly recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Director of the Geological Survey, who has immediate charge of the surveying of that country. They both urge the necessity of a sufficient appropriation to allow the survey to be made, and I hope the Senate will retain the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire only to add——

Mr. VILAS. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow me to ask one question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; I always yield to the Senator from Wisconsin except when he proposes to violate a unanimous-consent agreement and make a point of order. I always yield to him on other occasions.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Wisconsin never makes any such proposals, I am sure.

I should like to inquire whether there have not been conveyances with reference to the old survey? The old survey, however indistinct its monuments may now be from lapse of time, would, of course, control titles so far as sales had been made by descriptions with reference to the plat and field notes of the old survey. Is there not danger that unless this new survey shall be directed to reestablish the old there will be a confusion in the surveys made under the direction of the Director of the Geological Survey and those made under the direction of the surveyor-general some time past?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There can be no such difficulty as is suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, from the fact that there have been no conveyances of any of these lands. They belong to the Chickasaw Nation. They have not been divided in severalty; they are held by the nation in common. The difficulty is that there are simply no marks in almost all cases. There is now and then a corner mark, but they are very rare. I presume the survey which will be made under the direction of the Geological Survey will be a practical reestablishment of the old lines. I have very little doubt that that will be the case. But there will be no difficulty about any conveyance, for under the old surveys none has been made.

Mr. VILAS. It might be well to direct the reestablishment of the old lines as far as possible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have only an added word on this question. If I believed that there was danger of this provision becoming a law, violative as it is of the rules of the Senate, it being general legislation upon an appropriation bill, I should call for a quorum of the Senate and for a vote upon the question and put myself on record. But, fortunately, we have a Republican House. This is not a Republican Senate. That Republican House is economical. It proposes, so far as is possible, as it did in this bill, to keep the appropriations down to as low a point as possible. The Senate seems determined to swell them beyond all conscience. I believe, and I have faith to believe, that when this matter gets before the conference committee it will disappear from the bill and not trouble the Treasury.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am not disposed to allow the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire to go unchallenged. His effort at economy can be well exercised when we come to those great appropriation bills which carry so many million dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to follow it up.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope the Senator will follow it up. Economy can not be practiced by trying to strike off small items of appropriation for things absolutely necessary. I can point the Senator to bills where he can exercise his genius in the way of economy to great advantage.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have discovered them.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator can decrease the appropriation for our vessels that will not float, especially if the water is at all deep. They need something under them to hold them up. He can stop the building of battle ships. With the treaty of arbitration there is no necessity for $10,000,000 for fortifications. There are numerous other items in the same direction. In this bill the Committee on Appropriations have increased the House appropriations less than $300,000.

The Senator talks about a Republican House and its economy. I wish to call his attention to the fact that it is currently reported that the appropriations of this Congress made by the House of Representatives are $40,000,000 more than ever before, and will amount to $1,040,000,000. If we are going into a political debate over the Indian appropriation bill, we can talk out the session, and I am fully as willing to do it if it is necessary, as the day is long.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single observation. The Senator from South Dakota is not quite fair when he states what the appropriations will be at the end of this Congress. No man is wise enough to know what they will be until we come to make a tabulation when the Congress has come to an end.

I do not agree with the Senator in his criticisms of our Navy. I do agree with the House of Representatives in changing their mind and not providing in the present naval appropriation bill for the construction of another battle ship. While, under ordinary circumstances, if the Treasury was in funds, I should be in favor of continuing the building of battle ships, so that this country might take the position that properly belongs to it among the nations of the world, I think that the House has acted wisely in doing, as I understand they have done, in dropping out the provision that they originally had inserted in the naval appropriation bill for the construction of one more battle ship. We have had some trouble with the battle ships; it may be that they are somewhat experimental; but I have not discovered that anything has occurred to warrant the opinion that our expenditure of money for that purpose, or for the purpose of fortifications, has been an idle expenditure.

The Senator talks about an arbitration treaty. Mr. President, that arbitration treaty is where the Senator knows it is. While I support it, I do not expect it is going to be ratified in the immediate future. I think it is not disclosing any secret of the executive session when I state that much.

The Senator, of course, is more interested in the purchase of farms for Indian schools in South Dakota than he is for battle ships, or almost any other kind of a ship. I traversed to a very considerable extent the Senator's State. It is a great State; but I did not see water enough to sprinkle a lawn in the entire State except as they got it from artesian wells. Of course, he does not care much for battle ships as far as his people are concerned, but some of the rest of us have a greater interest in our naval armament and in the proper fortification of our coast than the Senator has. He can retreat to the Black Hills in the case of an invasion, and he is all right; but those of us who live on the coast may not be able to get so far away from the scene of hostilities.

Now, Mr. President, this is all I care to say. I have no fear that the pending amendment is going into the bill, and, for that reason, I am willing that we should pass it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 19, to insert:

For completing the survey of the boundary lines of a portion of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., as provided by article 6 of the agreement with the Blackfeet Indians, ratified by the Indian appropriation act approved June 10, 1896, $3,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use a like sum for said purpose of any appropriation made for the benefit of the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation in accordance with the provisions of said agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 3, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to appoint a commission to consist of three persons to negotiate with the Rosebud Indians and with the Lower Brule Indians in South Dakota for the settlement of all differences between said Indians; and with the Rosebud Indians and the Lower Brule Indians, the Cheyenne River Indians in South Dakota, and with the Standing Rock Indians in North and South Dakota for a cession of a portion of their respective reservations and for a modification of existing treaties as to the requirement of the consent of three-fourths of the male adult Indians to any treaty disposing of their lands; all agreements made to be submitted to Congress for its approval. And for the expense of such commission and negotiations thereunder the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated; and each member of said commission shall be paid not to exceed the sum of $10 per day while engaged in the performance of said work and actual traveling expenses and subsistence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 21, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue negotiations with the Crow, Flathead, and other Indians, as provided for by act approved June 10, 1896, $10,000; this amount to be available as soon as the present appropriation of $10,000, made by said act for such purpose, shall be exhausted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 2, to insert:

For payment in full of salary and expenses of John T. Oglesby, special United States Indian agent, while engaged, under order of the Indian Office, in the transportation of the remains of Paul F. Faison, United States Indian inspector, from Oklahoma Territory to Raleigh, N. C., fiscal year 1897, $70.

Mr. CHILTON. My connection with the Committee on Indian Affairs gives me familiarity with some of these items. This particular one, while very small, it seems to me is a novel appropriation. I am not aware of any precedent for such an expenditure and I should like to have the Senator from South Dakota state whether there is any such precedent within his knowledge.

This man Oglesby was instructed by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to proceed with the remains of a deceased employee from Oklahoma to North Carolina, and this appropriation is to reimburse him, as I understand, for the actual expenses of that trip. It would seem rather an unfair thing not to pay this employee his expenses incurred under the order of the Secretary of the Interior, therefore I shall not object to the payment of this claim; but, Mr. President, I can not shut my eyes to the fact that this is a very dangerous beginning. There are three or four hundred pension inspectors, I believe, scattered over the country, and many post-office inspectors, together with two or three hundred thousand other employees of the United States Government. If every employee who goes from one State to another with a brother employee's dead body is to recover the expense of the trip, it seems to me we open the gate for new and larger appropriations as time goes on. Therefore, as I say, while, in view of the peculiar circumstances, I shall not attempt to draw the line on this item, yet in the interest of economical government I offer an amendment which will prevent similar cases in the future. I think the Senator from South Dakota ought to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 8, on page 65, of the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the heads of Departments shall not authorize any expenditure in connection with the transportation of remains of deceased employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It does not seem to me that that amendment is necessary. The amendment placed in the bill by the Committee on Appropriations does not provide for transporting the remains of this deceased officer. All such expenditures were paid by his family. It simply provides for paying the traveling expenses of a special agent who was directed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to accompany the remains. If the man had died anywhere else and an officer had been detailed by an order from the Department, we would have paid his traveling expenses. It is entirely proper that we should pay them in this case the same as in the case of any other officer traveling under the direction of the Department. Perhaps the service performed is not one which the Department could have ordered him to perform—that may be a subject for discussion—but that it was a service which it was proper should be performed, and that the Commissioner was actuated by the very best of sentiments in directing the agent to accompany the remains, I do not think there can be any doubt. We have avoided in this provision any recognition of right in the Department to pay the funeral expenses of any of its officials. That was especially discussed in the committee, and it does not seem to me necessary to allude to that and place the amendment of the Senator from Texas in the bill. I hope, therefore, it will not be adopted.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] is entirely mistaken. This man gets nothing for the transportation of the dead body but what he would have received if he had been traveling on the order of the Department in the performance of his regular duties. He receives no additional compensation for this service.

Mr. CHILTON. The question is simply this: The Senator from South Dakota states the case exactly as I understand it. There is no question of fact in regard to it. This man was an employee of the Indian service, and a brother employee having died, his remains were transported from one part of the continent to another. The Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs directed this man Oglesby to go with the body. Now, I think it would be an invidious thing not to allow Oglesby his expenses, for he acted under the orders of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. But the point is that this appropriation opens up a new field. I asked the Senator from South Dakota if there was any precedent for such a thing, and he did not answer that part of my question. My impression is that there is no such precedent. The Secretary of the Interior, having directed this man to escort the body of the deceased employee from Oklahoma to North Carolina, authorized that expenditure. When the account got to the Treasury Department, that particular item was disallowed, and that is the reason it is put in this appropriation bill.

I do not object to reimbursing this individual for his expenses, but I do say it is in the interest of good government that we should not allow this practice to go on.

All can understand that with a vast number of officers in this country, scattered over a territory three or four thousand miles in extent, a custom may grow up in this way that will become a matter of abuse. I would stop the practice in the future. That is all I desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. CHILTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEFFER. Before the roll is called, I desire to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment, in line 8, on page 65, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the heads of Departments shall not authorize any expenditure in connection with the transportation of remains of deceased employees.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], whom I do not see in the Chamber. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. BACON. In that case, as I have a general pair with that Senator, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bate,	Cullom,	Hill,	Pasco,
Berry,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Peffer,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Kenney,	Pugh,
Caffery,	Gear,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Cannon,	Gibson,	Martin,	Turpie,

Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,	White,
Elkins,	Kyle,	Quay,	Wolcott.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 65, after line 8, to insert:

To reimburse David F. Day, United States Indian agent at the Southern Ute Agency, Colo., for personal expenses incurred in defending the suit brought against him by José B. Lucero, for damages for malicious prosecution, which suit was subsequently decided in favor of said Day, $367.80.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is a proposed expenditure in line with other expenditures; in other words, I desire to inquire if there are any precedents for it? Does the United States Government stand between its agents and those who may maliciously prosecute them and pay the expenses of the prosecution? I should like to know as a matter of information.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, in this case the party who prosecuted this agent had been in the habit of coming upon the Southern Ute Reservation and selling whisky in violation of law, thus disturbing the peace and quiet of the Indians. In this instance he had come upon the reservation by force and had driven an Indian from his home and taken possession of his house. The agent thereupon removed him from the reservation, or at least ordered him to be removed, and thereupon he sued the agent for malicious prosecution. The agent employed attorneys to defend him, by reason of which he incurred considerable expense, and obtained a verdict in his favor. The committee thought it exceedingly proper that that money should be reimbursed, and hence this item in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that the Department has examined the matter and recommends that the amount should be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 65, after line 14, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is directed to negotiate through an Indian inspector with the Yankton tribe of Indians of South Dakota for the purchase of a parcel of land near Pipestone, Minn., on which is now located an Indian industrial school.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 19, to insert:

For commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to superintend the sale of lands, ascertain who are the owners of the allotted lands, have guardians appointed for any minor heirs of deceased allottees, make deeds of the lands to the purchasers thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, which deeds shall operate as a complete conveyance of the land upon payment of the purchase money therefor, and to carry out the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1893, relative to lands of the Puyallup Indian Reservation, Wash., as set forth on pages 633 and 634 of volume 27 of the Revised Statutes, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 8, to insert:

That all that part of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah except such lands as have been heretofore allotted or selected for allotment to said Uncompahgre Indians is hereby declared open to public entry under the land laws of the United States: Provided, That no one person shall be allowed to make more than four claims on lands containing gilsonite.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know if we have disposed of the amendments down to line 9 on page 66.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendments have been agreed to down to that point, I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What disposition was made of the next amendment, inserting the clause from line 9 to line 15, in relation to the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation? Was that agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the last amendment agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Those are separate amendments, and we have disposed of them separately, as I understand, down to line 9 on page 66.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that they were all separately agreed to. There was no dissenting vote.

Mr. VILAS. Is the amendment embraced in lines 9 to 15, inclusive, on page 66, yet before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the last amendment that was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. Agreed to without objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understands.

Mr. VILAS. I object to the agreement, because I was here at the moment the Clerk finished reading that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was following the Clerk in the reading and I heard no proposition submitted to the Senate. I proposed to object to that amendment myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will sustain the objection, of course, though he did not hear the objection, and the amendment will be regarded as before the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. Perhaps this amendment might go over with others; but I am myself perfectly willing to dispose of it at this time, as well as any other.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let us dispose of it right now.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think we might as well dispose of the amendment now. Of course it is before the Senate and still open to discussion.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I desire to raise a point of order to that amendment. The point of order is that the amendment is obnoxious to the first paragraph of the third section of Rule XVI, which reads:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Perhaps I had better call attention to the force of the objection. This is general legislation.

Mr. PLATT. What is the amendment?

Mr. VILAS. It is the amendment on page 66, proposing to insert the clause from line 9 to line 15, inclusive, in relation to the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah.

Mr. CANNON. Before the Chair rules on the point of order I desire to be heard upon it. Is the Senator from Wisconsin intending now to get a ruling upon the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is waiting to hear the Senator from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to what this amendment is. It proposes to establish by legislation upon this appropriation bill one side of an old controversy, if possible. It has no proper relation to this bill in any wise whatsoever. It in no manner concerns an appropriation, except as it is an appropriation of lands to the uses of certain people who are seeking them, which are of greater value than the entire appropriation bill besides.

This bill proposes to take out of the Treasury of the United States about $7,500,000. These six lines in the bill propose to take out of the public domain of the United States and to make subject to expropriation by certain claimants of it under mineral laws a piece of land that is worth probably $10,000,000.

Mr. BATE. Ten million dollars?

Mr. VILAS. Yes; not unlikely. Nobody can tell just what its value is.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is known to be of enormous value.

Mr. VILAS. But, as the Senator from Arkansas says, it is known to be of enormous value. There probably is not a mine in the United States to-day worth more money than the land to which this legislation is addressed.

Now let me explain the circumstances a little, so that the Senate will see how large the amount is. A good many years ago there was an agreement made between commissioners on the part of the United States and the tribe known as the Uncompahgre Utes for the surrender of their country, then in the State of Colorado, upon terms of payment and adjustment about which we need spend no time. But one of the provisions of the treaty was that the Uncompahgre Indians should thereafter reside upon a large body of land in the then Territory, now the State of Utah; and generally that country is spoken of as the Uncompahgre Ute Reservation.

Without now entering into a nice consideration of the statutes on the subject, I will say shortly that the arrangement was such that the Utes merely possess a right of residence there. They do not own that country by any Indian title as they owned the country in the State of Colorado which they sold. The United States owns this land which is commonly spoken of as the Uncompahgre Ute Reservation. It is a very large body of land. Most of it is mountainous, and with but little cultivable land within its borders. But it happens that on the eastern border of that territory, in some four or five townships of land, there exist the most valuable mines of gilsonite or asphaltum known in this country, perhaps in the world.

In the Fifty-first Congress a bill was passed (I do not know why it was passed; I do not undertake to say; but it seems that almost anything could go through the Fifty-first Congress) the effect of which was to enable certain persons who claimed to have been discoverers of this gilsonite or asphaltum to get that land, to put it shortly. President Harrison vetoed that bill, and the veto was not overridden by Congress. Whether or not it was directly sustained I am not sure in remembrance.

In the next Congress, the Fifty-second, I happened to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and another bill was introduced which was referred to that committee, the object of which appeared to be not very different from that of the bill which had been vetoed by President Harrison. It was very much inquired into, and finally, under the direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, a report was made to the Senate, I believe by myself, providing for a survey of those lands and the offering of them to sale upon sufficient notice, with the purpose of realizing to the United States some share at least of the great value which that land possesses. There was a corporation, the ownership of which, as it was said, was mainly in the hands of certain wealthy gentlemen in St. Louis, which seemed very much interested in the bill and was apparently desirous of having it passed in a different way from that in which the committee thought the interests of the Government of the United States required. The result was that the bill was not passed during the Fifty-second Congress, but lay upon the Calendar until the expiration of that Congress. But the effort was renewed in the Fifty-third Congress.

I felt it my duty, sir, as one of the committee and as a member of the Senate whose attention had been by his duty on the committee drawn particularly to that measure, to keep watch of it, and I did watch it with all the care I could give it, and the bill never was passed. But in some way when the Indian appropriation bill came before the Senate, without my knowledge a measure was put upon it to provide what seemed to be a very harmless thing in its general purpose, for the survey and allotment to the Uncompahgre Utes of their land. After directing a survey and allotment under the orders of the Secretary of the Interior, that measure contained a further direction that those lands not allotted to the Indians should be opened, to be taken up under the public-land laws of the United States, the mineral lands according to the mineral law. I will not undertake to express it exactly, because we can make a reference to it if necessary.

I desire, in order to be accurate in reference to it, to send to the desk and ask to have read the action of the Senate. Although it escaped my attention, it will be seen that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who was on the Indian Affairs Committee at the time and was acquainted with the subject, observed it and caused to be inserted in the bill an amendment which would have protected those lands from being lost to the Government. I will at this point pause to have the proceedings read as they occurred in the Senate at that time. I ask the Secretary to read from pages 7682 and 7683 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 26, second session, Fifty-third Congress, at the place I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows.

Mr. SHOUP. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section:

"SEC. 19. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three persons to allot in severalty to the Uncompahgre Indians within their reservation, in the Territory of Utah, agricultural and grazing lands according to the treaty of 1880, as follows:

"Allotments in severalty of said lands shall be made as follows: To each head of a family one-quarter of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-quarter of a section; to each single person over 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each other person under 18 years of age, born prior to such allotment, one-eighth of a section, with a like quantity of grazing land: Provided, That with the consent of said commission, any adult Indian may select a less quantity of land, if more desirable on account of location:' And provided, That the said Indians shall pay $1.25 per acre for said lands from the fund now in the United States Treasury realized from the sale of their lands in Colorado as provided by their contract with the Government. All necessary surveys, if any, to enable said commission to complete the allotments shall be made under the direction of the General Land Office. Said commissioners shall, as soon as practicable after their appointment, report to the Secretary of the Interior what portions of said reservation are unsuited or will not be required for allotments, and thereupon such portions so reported, shall, by proclamation, be restored to the public domain and made subject to entry as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 20. That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States: Provided, That after three years' actual and continuous residence upon agricultural lands from date of settlement the settler may, upon full payment of $1.50 per acre, receive patent for the tract entered. If not commuted at the end of three years the settler shall pay at the time of making final proof $1.50 per acre.

"SEC. 21. That said commission shall also negotiate and treat with the Indians properly residing upon the Uintah Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Utah, for the relinquishment to the United States of the interest of said Indians in all lands within said reservation not needed for allotment in severalty to said Indians, and, if possible, procure the consent of such Indians to such relinquishment, and for the acceptance by said Indians of allotments in severalty of lands within said reservation, and said commissioners shall report any agreement made by them with said Indians, which agreement shall become operative only when ratified by act of Congress.

"SEC. 22. That said commissioners shall receive $6 per day each, and their actual and necessary traveling and incidental expenses while on duty, and to be allowed a clerk, to be selected by them, whose compensation shall be fixed by said commissioners, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the cost of executing the provisions of this act shall not exceed the sum of $16,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make one inquiry about the amendment. It provides that certain lands forming part of an Indian reservation shall be sold. It reserves the mineral lands for sale under the general law. The asphaltum lands are reserved, I understand, to be disposed of under the general mineral laws of the United States. I should like to know if there is any provision as to the price which is to be paid for mineral lands. I ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Dolph], who is familiar with the mineral-land laws of the United States, how the mineral lands are disposed of? Is there a specific price which has to be paid for them?

Mr. DOLPH. Oh, yes; there is a mineral-land law. I would not be quite certain, however, whether the law refers to asphaltum.

Mr. PLATT. How much has to be paid for mineral lands—$5 an acre?

Mr. DOLPH. I think from $5 to $10 an acre; I do not recollect the exact amount. I think it is $5.

Mr. PLATT. I have an impression that Government mineral lands can be obtained by individuals for $5 an acre.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are different prices fixed, I think. For coal lands, lands containing precious metals, and other mineral lands, there are different prices.

Mr. DOLPH. Coal lands which are not within 10 miles or 20 miles of a railroad are sold at $10 an acre, and if within 10 miles of a railroad $20 an acre; but I think gold and silver placer lands are sold for $5 an acre.

Mr. PLATT. Whether asphaltum and gilsonite deposits would make these mineral lands I do not know.

Mr. ALLISON. I think they are excepted in the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me read section 19 of the proposed amendment:

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three persons to allot in severalty to the Uncompahgre Indians within their reservation, in the Territory of Utah, agricultural and grazing lands according to the treaty of 1880, as follows."

It then describes the land.

"Said commissioners shall, as soon as practicable after their appointment, report to the Secretary of the Interior what portions of said reservation are unsuited or will not be required for allotments, and thereupon such portions so reported shall, by proclamation, be restored to the public domain and made subject to entry as hereinafter provided."

Then section 20 of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho provides—

"That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States."

So these lands are absolutely excepted, the way I read the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. All that I ask about the matter is that if the amendment passes the committee will pay careful attention to it in conference, so that no one is going to get this valuable asphaltum and gilsonite land for a song.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would this language include it?

Mr. PLATT. I can not tell.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can add to it and make it certain by inserting "except those lands which are reserved from sale."

Mr. COCKRELL. I will put in that clause. The amendment reads:

"That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances."

I will insert the words "which are hereby reserved from sale."

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes clear the point the Senator from Connecticut makes. I was not sure but that the amendment did read that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the second section of the amendment so as to read:

"SEC. 20. That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, which are hereby reserved from sale, shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the amendment to the amendment is accepted by the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHOUP. The amendment to the amendment is accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is accepted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to have the date of the RECORD from which the Secretary read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. July 19, 1894.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin please suspend, to enable the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

MARIA SOMERLAT—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which the Secretary proceeded to read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the veto message be referred to the Committee on Pensions without reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the message, which is as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, Senate bill No. 1223, entitled "An act granting a pension to Maria Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat."

This beneficiary, under the name of Maria Somerlat, was pensioned in 1867 as the widow of Valentine Somerlat, a volunteer soldier, dating from his death in 1864. She continued to draw the pension allowed her as such widow until 1887, when she married one Hiram Smith. Subsequently, but at what time does not appear, she was divorced from Smith in a suit that seems to have been begun by him but in which she interposed a cross bill, and obtained judgment in his favor. Notwithstanding her remarriage, through which she ceased to be the widow of the dead soldier, it is proposed to pension her again on account of his death.

The rule governing the operation of general pension laws which forfeits a widow's pension on her remarriage seems so reasonable and just, and its relaxation must necessarily lead to such a departure from just principles and to such vexatious pension administration, that I am convinced it ought to be strictly maintained.

I hope I may be permitted to call the attention of the Senate to the increasing latitude clearly discernible in special pension legislation. It has seemed to me so useless to attempt to stem the tide of this legislation by Executive interference that I have contented myself with nonacquiescence in numerous cases where I could not approve.

There have been already presented to me for Executive action during the present session of the Congress 206 special pension bills, of which I have actually examined 115. The entire number of such bills that have become laws during the four sessions of the Congress since March 4, 1893, is 301. Some of those presented at the present session are not based upon the least pretext that the death or disability involved is related to army service, while in numerous other cases it is extremely difficult to satisfactorily discover such relationship.

There is one feature of this legislation which I am sure deserves attention. I refer to the great number of special bills passed for the purpose of increasing the pensions of those already on the rolls. Of the 115 special pension bills which I have examined since the beginning of the present session of the Congress, 58 granted or restored pensions and 57 increased those already existing, and the appropriation of money necessary to meet these increases exceeds considerably the amount required to pay the original pensions granted or restored by the remaining 58 bills.

I can not discover that these increases are regulated by any rule or principle, and when we remember that there are nearly a million pensioners on our rolls and consider the importunity for such increase that must follow the precedents already made, the relation of the subject to a justifiable increase of our national revenues can not escape attention.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 22, 1897.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I regret that in this veto message the President of the United States has felt it incumbent upon him to lecture the Congress of the United States again on the subject of pensions. This, as I understand it, is a veto of what is known as a remarriage case, and I will state that it has been somewhat the custom of the committees of both Houses of Congress in a case where a woman, the war widow of a soldier, having cared for his children very likely while he was at the front fighting the battles of the country, had received a pension who had subsequently remarried, and the Government had——

Mr. BATE. I submit that debate is not in order. I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] is entitled to the floor, and that a motion is pending to refer the bill and the message to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. That motion is not pending.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from New Hampshire asked for that disposition of the matter, and it is not in order to discuss it now.

Mr. GALLINGER. But even if I had made that motion, it would have been debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Chair has recognized the Senator from New Hampshire upon that question.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that I desire to be heard.

Mr. BATE. I understood that a motion was made to refer the bill and the message to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. That motion was not made. It was suspended; but if it had been made, it would have been a debatable motion under our rules. I am going to occupy the attention of the Senate for but a moment, and I regret that the Senator from Tennessee found it necessary to interrupt me.

I will repeat that it has been somewhat the custom of committees of Congress, where a woman was the wife of a soldier during his service in the war, upon his death receiving a pension from the Government, upon remarriage the pension ceasing, according to the statute, and the Government deriving the benefit therefrom, if she became destitute in later years, became old and feeble and perhaps an object of charity, to recommend that Congress should restore her to the rolls as a beneficiary of the Government.

The President is mistaken in his judgment that he has carefully guarded the Treasury of the United States in this class of cases, because the President has signed a very considerable number of bills of this character. Recently he has exercised his right of veto to disapprove of three or four of these bills. There are two of them now before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire inform us how many of this kind of bills the President has signed during the present Administration?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am unable to state that fact, but the fact that some of those bills have been signed is a matter of common notoriety.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought the message stated that there had been 300.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of this class?

Mr. MORGAN. Of some class.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. MORGAN. I mean pensions to individual persons.

Mr. GALLINGER. The President has stated in his veto message which has just been read that we have passed, I think, something like 400 special pension bills during the four sessions of Congress since March 4, 1893.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if he has ever made an estimate of the total amount of money that will be required annually to pay the pensioners who have been put upon the list by Congress during the present Administration?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator (and I am glad he has raised that question) the clerk of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate is now engaged in the work of making an estimate of the amount of money that has been taken from the Treasury during the present Congress through the medium of special pension legislation. I can not approximately state the amount at the present time.

Mr. MORGAN. Would it amount to as much as a million dollars a year?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think that if it amounted to $100,000 it would be the full limit, and I am inclined to believe that $100,000 would be far beyond the limit.

Mr. MORGAN. How much would it fall short, in the opinion of the Senator, of the commission, or whatever you please to call it, that we paid the syndicate for the negotiation of the $262,000,000 of bonds that have been put out?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it would be but an infinitesimal proportion of that amount.

Mr. MORGAN. As compared with that?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; as compared with that.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to make one statement?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The first person killed in the first forcible resistance to Great Britain in the Revolution was Isaac Davis, captain of the Acton company. He left home early on the morning of the 19th of April, 1775, and as he left his wife he said, "Take good care of the children." He went to the conflict and he met his death by the first British volley. His widow was married twice after his death. She became poor in her old age. Mr. Webster introduced and had passed through the Senate, supported by one of his most eloquent speeches, a special bill giving her a pension for the remainder of her life; and that act of Mr. Webster was one of the acts which endeared him to his countrymen, especially to the people of his own State, as much as almost any action of his illustrious life. It never was heard or dreamed of until the modern fashion of finding fault with our pension roll grew up that that was not a proper exercise of legislative discretion.

I should like, if the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, to add one other sentence, unless I am interfering improperly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. It is said in many quarters that our pension roll is extravagant, and that persons who are not worthy of Government bounty get their names on it. I have applied, sometimes personally, and have publicly often challenged the people who made these statements to bring in their specifications: "Where is your man who is on the pension roll fraudulently? Let the Government authorities know. They are trying to find it out. Every honest soldier dislikes to have a dishonest man on the roll as a member of his regiment or company." We never got any specifications.

The people of Massachusetts have expended a sum of money in what is called State aid larger than their whole existing public debt, as it was a year or two ago, after deducting the sinking fund, for giving additional support necessary to the widows and children of soldiers whose cases are not covered by the pension laws. That has been expended by the officials who knew the persons in the neighborhood, where there was an impossibility of any fraud being practiced on the officers of the town or of the State. There are several millions of dollars which we have had to expend for the widows and orphans of our Massachusetts soldiers in addition to what that class are entitled to by the bounty of the Government.

In addition to that, I saw a statement that one association of volunteer soldiers in Massachusetts had expended between $700,000 and $800,000 more. In other States they have not this system of State aid and they have not these organizations. In some of the States they are not practicable; where the population is scattered, it is not practicable to have them. But it shows that in the populous and wealthy State of Massachusetts, where employment has been since the war as ample as in any place probably on the face of the earth, where the people could get a living by honest work, it has been necessary to eke out and supplement the pension roll of the Government by a State or a local expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars. Now, how ridiculous, in the face of that fact, to keep up this constant cry of extravagance and fraud in our pension rolls!

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, is the Indian appropriation bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair laid before the Senate a message from the President, as required under the rule.

Mr. VILAS. The message of the President has been read. What motion is pending with reference to it? It is always a delight to me to hear my distinguished and learned friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, and my very able and zealous friend, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, under any circumstances; but I thought we had the Indian appropriation bill before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that the Chair laid before the Senate the message of the President. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HOAR. My most intelligent friend from Wisconsin was asleep, and did not know what was going on.

Mr. VILAS. No, the Senator has not produced that effect on me, yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I submit that nothing is in order except the speech of my colleague, the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin raises a question of order. The Chair thinks the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is in order under the rule.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to make a suggestion? I suggest the message of the President ought to be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions, of which he is chairman.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me to get my speech on terra firma (it is now between heaven and earth, somewhere), I will very gladly after that yield to his suggestion, and I will occupy but a few moments.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I intended to make only a few statements, historical in their nature, and not for the purpose of raising an ill-natured discussion on the matter of pensions, because the Senate will bear me out in the suggestion that during the time I have chanced to be chairman of the Committee on Pensions I have scrupulously avoided everything of that kind. I have tried to deal courteously and kindly with every Senator who had a pension bill before the committee, whether it was for a remarried widow, the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, or any of the other rather extraordinary classes of cases. I have not wanted to air any grievances or to indulge in any unkind criticisms of the President because of these trivial and, as I think, foolish veto messages that are coming to the Senate from time to time.

I only desire to say now, in addition to what I have said, that this is one of a class of cases, two of which are now before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. They have been passed over the veto of the President by the House of Representatives, but I apprehend that they may not be reached for consideration at the present session of Congress so far as the Senate is concerned. One of those cases is for the relief of an old lady in my State who is in utter destitution. Her husband was a very brave soldier, and, as I remember, lost his life on the battlefield. She was pensioned and afterwards remarried, and for twenty years, or thereabouts, the Government got the benefit of that pension, which would have gone to her had she not remarried. Now, in her old age and destitution, we simply have restored her to the rolls. We have believed that those were a proper class of beneficiaries for pension legislation.

The fact in regard to this case, as the President states it, and I presume it is absolutely correct, is that—

> This beneficiary, under the name of Maria Somerlat, was pensioned in 1867 as the widow of Valentine Somerlat, a volunteer soldier, dating from his death in 1864. She continued to draw the pension allowed her as such widow until 1887, when she married one Hiram Smith, etc.

The Treasury of the United States got the benefit of this pension from 1887 to the present time, which this woman would have drawn had she not remarried. She is now, I understand, old and in destitute circumstances, and the House of Representatives passed a bill putting her on the roll, sent it over here, and we concurred with the House in that regard.

The President complains as to the number of these bills. He says he hopes he may be permitted to call attention to them. Then he says:

> There have been already presented to me for Executive action during the present session of the Congress 206 special pension bills, of which I have actually examined 115.

As I remember it, the President has vetoed only a small number, perhaps eight or ten pension bills out of the 115 he has examined, which is, to my mind, conclusive proof that he did not find any real, valid, sound, constitutional objection to those bills, and it proves that the Congress has been very careful in the quality and character of the pension bills that we have passed.

Now, in answer to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], I said that, in my judgment, the special pension bills during the Congress would not take from the Treasury of the United States $100,000. I doubt whether it will take $50,000 from the Treasury of the United States, and they have been benefactions to brave soldiers and the destitute widows of brave soldiers in increasing their pension denied upon a technicality in the Pension Bureau. It is a somewhat significant fact, Mr. President, that every veto message which has come to the Congress during the last two sessions has been the veto of a private pension bill, bills for widows of private soldiers, and not for the widows of general officers. I simply name that as a somewhat significant fact.

Mr. President, I believe that the message which has come from the White House, this criticism of the Congress which has been thrust upon us, is not justified by the facts, and that when the Committee on Pensions have made a careful tabulation, as they are making it, of the amount of money taken from the Treasury by the Congress in private pension bills during the last two years it will be seen that it is so small as really not to be worthy of occupying the time of the Congress of the United States in its discussion.

This is all I care to say, Mr. President, and I say it in utter kindness and good nature; and now I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions, with the veto message, for further investigation.

The motion was agreed to.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HILL submitted the following report:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1822) entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:
> In line 2 of said amendment numbered 1, and after the word "to," where it occurs the second time, insert the words "the United States;" and the House agree to the same.
> That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:
>
> Strike out the word "not" in line 31 of the bill, and in place of the language stricken out by said amendment insert the words:
> "Except all debts, demands, and liabilities which were due or owing by the old company, which were contracted, accrued, or were incurred, or are due or owing for tickets and freight balances, or for wages, work, labor, materials, machinery, fixtures, and supplies of every kind and character, done, performed, or furnished in the repair, equipment, operation, or extension of said road, and its branches so purchased, and all liabilities incurred by said old company in the transportation of freight and passengers thereon, including damages for injuries to employees or other persons, and to property, and which debts, demands, and liabilities have accrued or upon which suit had been brought or was pending, or judgment rendered, within twelve months prior to the appointment of a receiver or receivers in the foreclosure proceeding, or since the appointment of any such receiver, but such liabilities shall not include any liabilities to other railroad companies except for tickets and freight balances."
> Strike out the words "legally chargeable against said old corporation" in the amendment of House numbered 2; and the House agree to the same.
> That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, and 5.
> That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:
>
> "Provided further, That in case any uncompleted contracts for the purchase of land shall be pending at the time of such foreclosure sale, such new company shall, upon payment to it of any unpaid balance of purchase money for such land at the time provided in such contracts for the sale thereof, convey and release to the holders of such contracts all its title, interest, and estate in and to the land embraced in such contracts."
> And after the word "company," in line 4 of said amendment numbered 6, insert the words "to any bona fide settler and occupant in a tract of 640 acres or less."
> Also strike out from line 7 of said amendment numbered 6 the words "said contracts for the sale of lands," and in lieu thereof insert the words "any such contract."
>
> Also after the word "of," in line 12 of said amendment, insert the word "any."
> Also strike out from line 12 of said amendment the word "contracts" and insert in lieu thereof the word "contract;" and the House agree to the same.
> That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7.

The report was concurred in.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. VILAS. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to wait just a moment until I have finished the particular point to which I was directing attention, and then I will give way to him?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will wait with pleasure.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, it will be noticed by the reading of the record of the manner in which that amendment was put upon the Indian appropriation bill at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, first, that the Committee on Indian Affairs maintained the same ground which it had before that time maintained. Let me add that I was not at that session of Congress a member of the committee, my service on that committee having terminated with the previous Congress. But the committee held the same ground, and their amendment contained an express declaration of an exception from the operation of their law in making the lands not allotted to the Indians open to settlement or appropriation under the public-land laws "except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances."

When that amendment was offered in the Senate, it was asked by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, if that was not exposing those lands to the very danger against which they had been so long guarded. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] in charge of the bill said he thought the words were sufficient to except those lands. But the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asked to have additional words put in to make it certain, the words "which are hereby reserved from sale," and they were put in, the Senator from Missouri accepting the amendment, so that it read:

> That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, which are hereby reserved from sale, shall, upon the approval of the allotments, etc.—

Become open.

Now, let us see what happened; for it illustrates the great peril of putting legislation on appropriation bills and of leaving those bills to the disposition of Congress when so great is the contention and the pressure that oftentimes things escape which should have been observed even by those who are in charge of the very preservation of the safeguards insisted upon. I have here the bill, House bill 6913, of the Fifty-third Congress, second session, as printed after that bill passed the Senate and went into conference, and this long amendment, which was put on in the Senate, four sections added to it, is numbered as one amendment, No. 120. I call attention to that for the purpose of drawing the attention of the Senate to the manner in which it was disposed of by the conference committee.

One among the many conference reports on that Indian appropriation bill which were submitted before it finally became a law contains this paragraph, and I read from page 8251, volume 26 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, referring to this amendment, numbered as one amendment, 120, comprising four sections, to be added to the appropriation bill:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 31 and 32 of said amendment, strike out the words "except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, which are hereby reserved from sale."

And then with another change in another part of the amendment it was returned to the Senate and the conference report agreed to. No statement appears to have been made in the Senate, and the only statement which was made in writing by the House conferees, as required by the rules of the House, was the following:

The House conferees have agreed to Senate amendment numbered 120 with an amendment, as set forth in the conference report, to which special attention is called.

And, sir, thus in conference every word was given away which had protected these lands, words which had been put in by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and then, that they might be surely sufficient, were further amended upon the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut in the Senate when that amendment was put. Thus it has happened that a law went upon our statute books which contains provisions effectuating, if it were carried into full effect, the purpose which had been struggled for so long by persons to obtain possession, or to get these lands opened in some way to locators of mineral claims. This amendment which is now proposed to this appropriation bill is an amendment which is to operate an effect similar to that of the joint resolution which was introduced by the Senator from Utah in the last session of Congress, and against which I contended at different times during that last session, with the result that no action has ever yet been taken upon it.

It is always difficult to get the attention of the entire body of the Senate long enough to anything that does not involve more than a few million dollars in value of the public lands to have the right thing done about it. Nothing was ever done in respect to that.

The amendment now contains language utterly foreign to the purposes of this Indian appropriation bill in every particular, and I am addressing this argument to the Chair in order to fix the fact that the rule of the Senate requires, as it seems to me, that the Chair shall say it has no place upon this bill. The amendment reads:

That all that part of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah except such lands as have been heretofore allotted or selected for allotment to said Uncompahgre Indians is hereby declared open to public entry under the land laws of the United States: Provided, That no one person shall be allowed to make more than four claims on lands containing gilsonite.

Few, perhaps, would realize what was the significance of that language. It means, if possible, to afford opportunity to contend that those men who claim to be discoverers of that mineral shall be entitled to have their place as prior entrymen of that land, but, in any case, that that land, which is probably worth sums beyond our reckoning—a thousand dollars an acre as easily as 10 cents or 1 cent an acre—shall be taken up under the mineral-land laws of the United States; at $5 whenever it is a lode claim, and at $2.50 for a placer.

The Committee on Indian Affairs has always insisted, so far as I know—it did when I was a member of that committee—that this was a peculiar case. These lands were never discovered; the mines were never discovered in the sense in which gold and silver are discovered. This asphaltum and gilsonite lies right open to view. A man can discover it, if any one ever did in any proper sense discover it, by simply walking across the land. No discovery was ever made as a result of prospecting and search at various points, conducted with expense and loss, as prospectors for gold and silver make their discoveries. It was known to exist for a good while by men who traversed that country hunting; and the evidence, of which I have a considerable amount here on my table, was in the General Land Office. President Harrison's message, when he vetoed the first attempt to get that land, was perfectly conclusive that there was no discovery there, no location, nothing. The case is one entirely unsuited to the application of the mineral-land laws of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon,	Clark,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,
Bate,	Cullom,	Lodge,	Platt,
Berry,	Davis,	McBride,	Pugh,
Brown,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Tillman,
Caffery,	Gray,	Mills,	Vest,
Call,	Hill,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,	Wetmore.
Chilton,	Kenney,	Perkins,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. That is not in order.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon. I was not aware that there was no quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no quorum of the Senate present, the Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HILL. I wish the Senator would withdraw that motion for a little while.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no use of staying here unless we can get a quorum.

Mr. HILL. We can get a quorum in a few moments.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BRICE, and Mr. TELLER entered the Chamber, and respectively responded to their names.

Mr. PASCO. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. PLATT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we ought to go on with this bill for an hour longer, and get something done.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 14, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Berry,	Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Vest,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Walthall.
Caffery,	Gibson,	Proctor,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pugh,

NAYS—30.

Bacon,	Clark,	Lodge,	Platt,
Bate,	Cullom,	McBride,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gray,	McMillan,	Teller,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Martin,	Turpie,
Call,	Hill,	Nelson,	Voorhees,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Wetmore.
Chandler,	Kenney,	Perkins,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,

NOT VOTING—46.

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Shoup,
Allen,	Frye,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Allison,	Gear,	Morgan,	Squire,
Baker,	George,	Morrill,	Thurston,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Blanchard,	Hale,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Warren,
Cameron,	Harris,	Pritchard,	White,
Carter,	Irby,	Quay,	Wilson,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Roach,	Wolcott.
Dubois,	Kyle,	Sewell,
Elkins,	Mantle,	Sherman,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Several SENATORS. There is no quorum present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum has voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Cockrell,	Lodge,	Pugh,
Bacon,	Cullom,	McBride,	Stewart,
Bate,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Teller,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Tillman,
Brice,	Gibson,	Mills,	Turpie,
Brown,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Burrows,	Gray,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Butler,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Caffery,	Hill,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,
Chilton,	Kenney,	Platt,
Clark,	Lindsay,	Proctor,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask permission to make a report, which ought to be made to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the report will be received.

Mr. CHANDLER. I report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments the bill (H. R. 4506) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter. It is the bill known as the Loud bill. I submit a written report, which is brief, and which I ask, therefore, may be printed in the RECORD. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] will submit to-morrow a supplemental report. I also submit the testimony which accompanies the report.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Senator whether he expects to pass the Loud bill, so called, at the present session?

Mr. CHANDLER. If Senators will bear with me, I should like to have the report itself read.

Mr. STEWART. I will object to any proceeding in that bill from beginning to end. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. Will it not satisfy the Senator from New Hampshire to have the report printed in the RECORD?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, then.

Mr. STEWART. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CULLOM. In view of the remarks of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], I withdraw the inquiry I made of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the order to print in the RECORD had been made. The report only covers two pages of letter paper, and I know the Senator from Nevada will withdraw his objection.

Mr. STEWART. I will not withdraw it. I think it is the worst bill ever reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask that the report may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. I object to the report being read.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to say, as I am a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that the report which has been made——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. The report has been made to the Senate with its consent. I understand that the report must be read unless there be unanimous consent to the contrary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point is well taken.

Mr. HOAR. Therefore, I demand the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have the report read.

Mr. STEWART. Does that carry the right to read the report in full?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON (to Mr. STEWART). Withdraw the objection and let the report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STEWART. I want to know under what rule of the Senate a report of a committee can be read before a bill is taken up.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The bill before the Senate is the Indian appropriation bill. It has not been laid aside. I submit that any consent simply that a report shall be made does not embrace the right to read the document, which perhaps may take an hour of time.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is only two foolscap pages.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That does not make any difference. If you have a right to read it, you have a right to read a report of a thousand pages.

Mr. STEWART. It can not be read unless the bill is taken up.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. VILAS. Is there an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire, before we adjourn, to say a word or two to the Senate as respects the condition of its business.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Iowa pardon me for making a remark on this matter not in the nature of discussion? I desire to correct a statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] which is before the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire, in making the report, stated that I would file a supplementary report. I wish to correct that statement (I am sure it was an oversight on the part of the Senator from New Hampshire) by saying that I will file a minority report, for I do not concur at all in the report of the committee and am opposed to reporting the bill. I am opposed to the report made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not say what kind of a report it would be.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to have it understood distinctly that it is a minority report and in opposition to the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield for a moment to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. The Chair ruled that the report should be read. I had the floor and was about to refer to the report in the remarks which I desired to make for a moment only, and returned the report for the purpose of the execution of the order of the Chair. Is the report to be read under the ruling of the Chair, or is it not to be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read unless an appeal is taken and the Chair is overruled.

Mr. VILAS. If the report is to be read, I will wait until it is read. It is very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. It could have been read in half the time we have taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will——

Mr. ALLISON. I have the floor and I desire to say a word or two. I can say what I desire to say just as well now as after the report is read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. The report can not be of such absolute importance that it must be read one minute rather than another. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. I merely wish to say a word in reference to the matter.

It was understood between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself that instead of making a minority report I should say one word in reference to it at the time the report was put in. As the report is to be read, it is proper that that should come first.

Mr. ALLISON. Understanding, then, the wishes and desires of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will occupy the attention of the Senate for just a moment, and then I shall yield for whatever is the purpose of the Senate.

I wish to state that if the business of the Senate is to be transacted during the few remaining days of the session, it will be necessary for Senators to remain here to a later hour than we have been accustomed to remaining and to meet here at an earlier hour than we have heretofore met. I do not wish to suggest any change in respect to the hour of meeting without giving suitable notice.

Mr. PLATT (to Mr. ALLISON). Give the notice for Wednesday next.

Mr. ALLISON. But I wish now to give notice that on to-morrow I will move that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning, and so on from day to day until otherwise ordered.

I wish also to say to Senators that if the appropriation bills are to be disposed of they must all practically pass the Senate before adjournment on Saturday, and that will be absolutely impossible unless we hold night sessions Thursday, Friday, and probably Saturday. I wish to give this notice, so that there may be opportunity for Senators to make arrangements in accordance with the necessities of the case as to the appropriation bills. I have no desire about the pending matter.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire what appropriation bills have yet to pass the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. The Indian appropriation bill, which is now under consideration; the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which is on the table; the sundry civil bill, which is now in committee; the Post-Office appropriation bill, which is in committee, but I think is ready to be reported, and probably will be reported to-morrow morning; the naval appropriation bill, and the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. The naval appropriation bill has not yet reached here.

Mr. ALLISON. It is perfectly manifest that if these bills are to be considered at the present session of Congress we must sit here from eight to ten or twelve hours each day until the close of the session.

Mr. STEWART. I appeal from the decision of the Chair ordering the report upon the bill to be read. I wish to make a remark.

I look upon this as the worst legislation that has been proposed. I desire to expose the character of this legislation, its injustice, its impolicy; and I am opposed to having a favorable report read when my mouth would be closed. It will not come up again. The report, I understand, states that the bill can not be passed at this session. The bill is not up at all, and I do not want a favorable report to go out and to have it understood that a majority of the Senate is in favor of its passage if there were time, without a brief opportunity to explain the character of the bill to the Senate. Consequently I am opposed to the reading of the report or any proceeding in reference to the bill until it is up for discussion. That is my only objection to the reading.

There is no minority report filed, and nobody has a right to state his objections; and here the bill comes, and it goes out to the country with a favorable recommendation. There is a great deal of feeling on this subject throughout the country, and to have a favorable report read and to have it understood that the only reason why the bill is not passed is because there is not time is unfair. I do not think the report ought to be read. I appeal from the decision of the Chair because it takes unanimous consent to take up the bill or to proceed with the report when another bill is pending.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Nevada to yield to me for one second.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. It is very evident that nothing can be done here this afternoon, and I ask the Senators to give way that I may make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator will not make that motion for a moment.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Maryland withdraws the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada appeals from the ruling of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GORMAN (to Mr. STEWART). Withdraw the appeal.

Mr. STEWART. I can not withdraw the appeal.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin desires to say one word.

Mr. STEWART. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin to make a statement.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to say just a word with reference to the report. There has been much difference with respect to some of the suggestions of amendment contained in the bill which is reported. The report very briefly states the conclusion of the committee that the bill ought to be reported to the Senate, so that it can be dealt with. I have assented to that report. Among the amendments proposed, however, are some to which I can not assent at this time. One of them, and it is to it alone that I wish to engage the attention of the Senate for the moment, is the amendment proposing a 1-cent rate of postage. I believe that if the reforms proposed by the bill were effected in the postal service and such others as that service and the interest of the people in it demand should be applied to it, then 1-cent postage could be maintained and the cost would not be greater than it is to-day.

The total amount of 2-cent stamps sold last year was a little more than $43,000,000. Probably $40,000,000 went on letter postage. The reduction to 1 cent would be very likely to reduce the revenues of the Department at first between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000. But if a fair rate of postage were charged on the literature which the Government carries under the name of news matter, a revenue sufficient would be derived, permitting at the same time all newspapers to be carried at a more moderate rate, so that with one other leading reform—the proper reduction of the rates paid to railroads—there would be, in my opinion, no deficiency in the postal service if 1-cent postage were adopted. But without those reforms I do not think we have reached the time when we ought to adopt 1-cent postage.

Mr. STEWART. I have only one word to say. I applied to the Post-Office Department for information as to where the abuses occurred. I inquired of them as to what class of second-class matter they occurred in. I asked them what was the weight of the Sunday editions of the dailies, which they are making so large now as compared with the ordinary daily paper. I asked them a great many questions, trying to reach this abuse. They had no information to give me except the aggregate weight of all the second-class matter and the aggregate weight of the local newspapers, circulating free in the county of publication. That was all they could give me.

Now, I am confident that these very large Sunday editions of the dailies are an important matter in loading down the mails. Some of the largest weigh about a pound apiece. An ordinary newspaper weighs from 2¼ to 4 ounces, while the ordinary weight of a large magazine is from 6 to 8 ounces. So the vast number of these great dailies which go through the mail, requiring on Sunday such an additional number of cars, it seems to me, are the principal cause of loading down the mails.

Besides, the literature that the bill would cut off is the most valuable educational system that the Government of the United States has. If you will go into any country library, you will find them building it up by means of the post-office. Their books will not be bound volumes, but they are circulating libraries, some of them being very large. I inquired why they had books without binding. They said they would be unable to furnish a circulating library in that community, except through this convenience. The library books that go through the mail and the literature which the people desire so much do not begin to weigh so much as many other things that might be dispensed with. At all events, if we had the information—none is here—you could judge of it. It seems to me that this is a blow at the most important branch of education in which the General Government can engage. It has been enjoyed for many years, and we should guard it as a great privilege. To pass a law now cutting it off, without any knowledge on the part of the Department whether or not that is the cause of the deficiency, is wrong.

Then, again, we have reports from all sides of abuses in the railroad department. It seems to me that before anything is done the Postmaster-General should look over the whole matter and report in detail. We have no such detailed report. I desire to protest against having an impression go out that any such bill as this will ever become a law or will have the sanction of the Senate. That is the reason why I object to the reading of the report at this time.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Maryland withdraw his motion temporarily?

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I would not detain the Senate now, at this late hour, were it not that this majority report has come up from the Post-Office Committee, of which I am a member. I am opposed to this bill. I do not concur in the report made by a majority of the committee. I am preparing a minority report. If that report were ready and could go into the RECORD on the same day with the majority report, I would be content to wait till this bill should be taken up for action. The minority report will not be ready before to-morrow. I can not allow the majority report to go into the RECORD to-day without stating briefly some of my objections to this mischievous measure.

The real purposes of this measure do not appear on its face. Its real purposes, or at least its effects if it should become a law, are far-reaching and dangerous. The gold ring, the monopolies, and trusts already control the avenues and agencies of rapid communication and intelligence. They filter and control the news that appears in the daily press each morning. They now seek through this bill to close up as far as possible the only other avenue left free and open. This bill is seeking to run the gantlet of Congress under false pretenses.

The friends of this bill, known as the Loud postal bill, come to Congress under the guise of reform and economy and ask you to pass a bill. A bill that will do what? A bill that will cut out of the mails a large part of the literature that the people to-day receive, desire to receive, through the mails at second-class rates. A bill to do what? A bill to deprive the people who live along the star routes of one-half of the privileges which they to-day receive from the postal system of this country; a bill intended—if not intended, that would be the result—to cut out from the mails all standard works now published in cheap form with paper covers; that is, the works of Dickens, Scott, Hawthorn, Washington Irving, and hundreds of others which are now being published in cheap form and are going through the mails at second-class rates. Even Webster's Unabridged Dictionary to-day goes to people out in the country in cheap form with paper cover.

Coin's Financial School and books of that kind have gone through the mails to possibly every post-office in America, and more are going. This bill cuts all these books out of the mails. Is that the purpose of those who favor this bill? The man who lives in a city can buy them at a news stand. The man who lives in the country and who relies on the postal system to bring him in touch with civilization is dependent upon the mails to give him the benefits that the man who lives in a city or who rides frequently upon a train is not so dependent upon. The professed reason for this bill is reform and economy, but those who come and ask you to pass it in the interest of economy are those who vote for more subsidies, those who vote to take more millions out of the Treasury of the Government than any other class of men in the Senate and in the House. And yet, in the name of reform and in the name of economy, they come here and ask you to pass a bill that robs the people of half the benefits they to-day get from the postal system.

Mr. President, the bill would be infamous in its results if it should pass. If the people of this country knew what is in the bill, there would be such indignation from ocean to ocean as has not been seen for twenty years. The American people will never tolerate such a measure when they know what is in it and what will be its results.

I will present a minority report to-morrow, and if those who profess to want reform mean reform in the interests of the general public, if those who profess to want to stop the deficit in the Post-Office Department mean that in good faith, I can point them to a way to accomplish that result. I can show how the Post-Office Department can save from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 a year, and the deficit now is but $8,000,000. You can save $12,000,000 a year by simply paying the railroads for the mail actually hauled and at the contract price, and no more. The Government pays the railroads for a great deal more weight than the roads really haul. It is the fault of the Government that this is done. Besides, the contract price is entirely too high. During the last twenty years freight rates have been reduced about 40 per cent, yet the Government is now paying about the same rates that it did twenty years ago. Why do not those who are so much concerned about the deficit in the Post-Office Department turn their attention to these big leakages and gross abuses? Let those who profess to favor economy and reform help to correct these abuses.

Mr. President, we to-day not only pay the railroads nearly $30,000,000 a year to haul the mails, but we also pay them rent for the cars in which the mail is carried. Why pay rent for cars when we pay freight charges? Besides, the rent we pay for the cars each year would pay for the cars in a year or two. Why not own our cars and pay the railroads a fair price to haul them? These are the reforms needed. They will stop the deficit and not rob the people of any of the blessings they now enjoy from the postal system. These changes would result in such economy that the Post-Office Department would have a surplus instead of a deficit.

But, Mr. President, if the people must be robbed of one of the greatest benefits of the postal system to stop a small deficit of $8,000,000, then I say, Let the deficit stand. There is no way that the money could be expended that means so much for the benefit of the general public.

Think of it—$32,000,000 paid to the railroads each year for what mail they carry, while the whole mail star-route system of the country costs only a little over $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, enough can be saved on what is paid the railroads in two years to buy every telegraph line in the country and establish a postal telegraph in connection with the post-office system.

If you want reform, if you want economy, if you want to make both ends meet and at the same time benefit the public, that is the way to do it. The facts are too plain and positive to be denied or even questioned. A postal telegraph would mean that all the avenues and agencies of information would be open and free to all alike.

Mr. President, that bill—and I address my remarks now to the Republican side of the Senate—will close down many enterprises, like the Republicans say a reform tariff bill will. The bill will close down prosperous book firms. It will close down legitimate enterprises that are to-day in operation. It will throw people out of employment. It will put the book business in the hands of a smaller number than those who are now in it. How can any man who says that he opposes the reduction of the tariff because it throws labor out of employment favor this bill unless he can show better reasons for its passage than are in it?

Mr. President, it goes further than that. This bill will bear hard upon the country weekly newspapers. The bill robs the editor of the country newspaper of his only chance to-day of advertising his paper and increasing his circulation. It robs the man who wants to start a paper, and who has little means, of the only chance to build up his paper and compete with papers that are already established and have plenty of money behind them. This bill robs them of the sample-copy privilege, which to-day is the main resource that the country editor has to advertise his paper and extend his circulation. I dare say that if the bill passes, your newspaper, the Silver Knight [turning to Senator STEWART], will be crippled. You have built up your circulation chiefly by sending out sample copies. The profits from your paper would not justify you in putting a man on the road, to pay railroad fare and hotel bills to get subscribers for your paper. You must depend upon sample copies largely.

Mr. President, the bill will create a newspaper trust, as well as rob the people of half the benefits to-day that they get from the postal system.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator says the bill is an infamous bill. The first proposition of the bill is for 1-cent letter postage. I will not undertake to talk against an uncorked Populist to-night. I ask the Senator from Nevada whether, if I will withdraw the call for the reading of the report, he will withdraw his appeal, and allow the report, which is very short, to go into the RECORD?

Mr. STEWART. I am willing now that it shall be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada withdraws the appeal which he had taken from the ruling of the Chair, and the Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not intend to object except to correct the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire. I did not say, as he quotes me, intentionally, I am sure, that this is an infamous bill; but I said its results would be infamous. To say that the bill is infamous on its face would be to question the motives of those who favor the bill, and that I do not wish to do.

Mr. CHANDLER. The report will show that the Senator said it was an infamous bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina object to the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BUTLER. The RECORD will show that I did not say what the Senator from New Hampshire says that I said.

Mr. CHANDLER. I renew my request.

Mr. BUTLER. I make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

This bill was received from the House on January 7, 1897. The committee found a widespread interest in the bill prevailing throughout the country; on the one hand on the part of those patrons of the mails sending second-class matter, who appeared to desire to preserve the present system substantially as it exists, and on the other hand on the part of those who wish alleged abuses to be corrected, hoping that the saving in expenditure thereby effected will enable the Post-Office Department, without too great an increase of its annual deficit in revenues, to give to the public a 1-cent rate of postage on single letters, or otherwise to give benefits to the community not now attainable. Hearings were asked for on both sides and given by the committee on the 16th, 23d, and 30th days of January.

As time has passed, it has seemed to the committee that with the wide difference of opinion existing between the various interests and also among members of the committee as to the extent of existing abuses and the proper method of providing remedies, it will not be possible to secure passage of the bill through the Senate at the present session.

The committee, however, report the bill to the Senate, with certain amendments prepared by the acting chairman, in order that it may be taken up for consideration, if time permits, each member reserving his final opinion upon the amendments and the bill until they come up for consideration.

The committee also recommend that a postal commission be created by legislation, as follows:

"That the questions concerning the correction of alleged abuses in the postal service in connection with second-class mail matter, the extension of free-delivery to rural regions, the reduction of the cost of the railroad transportation of the mails, the adoption of 1-cent postage for single letters, and other like questions, shall be examined by a postal reform commission of five, to consist of the two chairmen in the Senate and House of the present Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Postmaster-General, and two citizens to be appointed by the President, who shall make their report and recommendations for legislation to the next Congress; and for the services of said civilian commissioners and the expenses of said commission the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available and to be expended according to the direction of the Postmaster-General; said commission to expire on the 31st day of December, 1897."

The committee submit to the Senate a report of the hearings which have taken place, and recommend that it be printed with this report, together with a copy of the bill as reported with amendments, and with the House report (No. 260, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session) in favor of the House bill.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer a resolution which I should be glad to have considered now, unless there is some objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That on and after February 24 the hour of daily meeting of the Senate shall be 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. HILL. What time is fixed?

Mr. GRAY. Wednesday.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There is some executive business that I should like to have the Senate transact. I made that motion some time ago, but I withdrew it for the purpose of having the discussion which has taken place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HILL. I make none unless everybody else is to transact his business so that I can not get mine transacted; that is all. I trust there will be no objection to an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield for the purpose of having the resolution considered?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GORMAN. Pending that, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator from Maryland will withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 23, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 22, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this, I believe, is the day assigned under the rules for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of the bill I send to the desk.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in view of the fact that there are but two appropriation bills not yet considered by the House, that he ask unanimous consent—I suggest that he ask unanimous consent—that after the deficiency bill is disposed of, which can be disposed of in two hours, and the naval bill, then he can take a day, immediately after they are completed, for the consideration of District business.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are some very important matters here, bills with Senate amendments, that should be considered. But I am willing to concede anything to forward the business of the House; and with that understanding I would ask unanimous consent that the day immediately following the passage of the naval appropriation bill be substituted for to-day as District day.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman to say that there are important matters to come up. I would ask if he intends to bring up for consideration the bill S. 2840——

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. To charter——

Mr. BABCOCK. There are numerous measures on the Calendar before that. It is doubtful if it can be reached at all.

Mr. WHEELER. I dislike very much to object to any request made by the gentleman. I trust the gentleman will agree that this bill will not be brought up. I will not interpose any objection, if he will not bring up the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the day immediately following the passage of the naval appropriation bill be substituted as District day instead of this day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would hardly be in order.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist on his objection?

Mr. WHEELER. I will withdraw the objection.

So (there being no further objection) the request of Mr. BABCOCK was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that immediately after the deficiency bill the naval appropriation bill is to come up.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the deficiency bill.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, and also a question relating to the privileges of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman will allow the consideration of the bill I send to the desk.

Mr. CANNON. I can not give way. The gentleman can get it in afterwards.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises to a question of privilege, and will state it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of personal privilege, and also to a question that concerns the privileges of the House. I will first state my question of personal privilege.

The members of this House are aware that this is the first time in a service of eight years that I have risen to a question of personal privilege, and I have had my full share of being misunderstood by the newspaper correspondents.

Mr. Speaker, I object to being used by the newspaper correspondents who are provided by this House with accommodations to report accurately and justly the proceedings in this House. Their prejudices against any members of the House, above all against the Speaker of the House, should not be written into the words of members. I hold in my hand the New York Journal of Saturday, February 20, which, after a considerable display of the Speaker in pictorial form, says:

CZAR REED'S tyranny leads to an open revolt—WALKER of Massachusetts fires a public shot against the czar's tactics.

I open the paper from my home and find an article headed:

Speaker REED attacked—Congressman WALKER assails the czar of the House.

I want to show by the record, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a word I uttered, either on this occasion or any other, where I had occasion to criticise any one personally, but the rules and the proceedings of the House and some of its committees. My words were in no sense a reflection on the Speaker of this House, any more than that the Speaker of this House was caught in the toils of the arbitrary proceedings that have been growing up here for many years. In the exercise of the power which the rules and proceedings of the House devolve on the Speaker he is compelled, whether he will or not, to exercise a power which is not only arbitrary, but tyrannical, and necessarily so.

No Speaker, as I have stated publicly and privately, has occupied that chair and has exercised his great power with any more fairness and candor and discretion and patriotism than the gentleman who now occupies it. But it makes it none the less tyranny to the members of this House in their attempts to represent their districts. The rules of this House to-day, under the advice and rulings of the Speaker, are less tyrannical than they were before, when we were subjected to the tyranny of any member of this House, day in and day out, sometimes covering more than a week.

So much for my criticism of the Speaker; and I may be allowed to say I shall not be deterred in the future, any more than in the past, from exercising my rights on this floor, because the dearest friends I have are involved in the injustice done. I ask the unanimous consent of the House of publishing in the RECORD the declarations of the present Speaker with reference to our rules. They are deliberate, fair, and candid declarations of the facts in the case. He has done more than any other man in the country to bring to the attention of the country and of this House the needed reformation of its rules. I now ask unanimous consent, in order that I may not take the time of the House in reading them, that these words of the Speaker may be published in the RECORD.

Mr. BARRETT. Before agreeing to that permission, I should like to ask in what connection the statements alleged to have been made by the present Speaker of the House were made.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I will say that they are made in the Forum, in a series of articles that very carefully discuss the rules of the House, and they fully justify me in what I have said in the House concerning its rules. I ask the privilege of publishing these extracts in the RECORD, rather than to read them. Otherwise I shall send them to the desk and have them read, as I have a right to do. I ask this simply to save the time of the House.

Mr. BARRETT. I wanted to make sure that the remarks alleged to have been made were properly certified, and to know if they were made over the signature of the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Why, certainly.

The SPEAKER. Are the dates given?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yes; the dates and quotations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD the extracts which he will send to the Clerk's desk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

EXTRACTS FROM THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

[February, 1891. Page 148.]

In the United States of America every two years there occurs an event which has sometimes been thought to be a lesson to the effete and unprogressive monarchies of the Old World, and to be not without a certain spectacular beauty even to the favored participants. At that time, throughout 4,000,000 square miles of territory, lying between the two greatest oceans of the world and between its greatest lakes and its broadest gulf, 60,000,000 of civilized beings, some of whom are also enlightened, have reached the decision of a great contest of opinion and have selected the materials for the machinery by the aid of which those same 60,000,000 of people are to so govern themselves as to make that progress in liberty and civilization which will enable them to realize the somewhat unrestrained expectations of their ancestors and to live up to the high calling which is to be found in Fourth-of-July orations and other discourses hopeful of the progress of the race.

[February, 1891. Page 149.]

So far as I can understand it, this struggle, battle, and decision have for their purpose, as regards the House of Representatives, the election of a representative body, which, so far as its powers go, is to formulate into laws the wishes of the people who are to be governed by those laws, and who have expressed their wishes at the polls.

[February, 1891. Page 151.]

For what purpose is a House of Representatives elected? Is it to pass the appropriation bills and then go home and say to the people, "You certainly ordered us by your votes to do certain things; you undoubtedly went through the agony of a fiercely contested election and decided upon certain questions, and intrusted us with the making of the laws to carry out your decisions, but we have not done anything of the sort?"

[February, 1891. Page 151.]

Why should orators convince the judgments and able editors satisfy the minds of voters if nothing is to come of it? Why have an election if it chooses nothing? Why a decision at the polls if it decides nothing?

[February, 1891. Page 152.]

The obstruction which to-day delays public business is modern, and it is not only true of the two Houses of Congress, but of parliaments all over the world. Everywhere that decent respect for the rights of the majority which caused those who were outnumbered to submit after the intellectual struggle was over seems to be giving way to that brutal exercise of mere physical obstruction which certainly can not be tolerated if representative government by the majority is to survive.

[February, 1891. Page 152.]

It so happens that party measures are precisely those measures which enter into the contests of election, into the discussions which precede and the decision which ends them. We have, therefore, the strange anomaly of the greatest resistance made on those very points which have been already passed upon by the people. What has been decided is precisely what is hardest fought afterwards.

[February, 1891. Page 153.]

There has been such a growth of obstruction that remedies had to be found, and still others must be found in the future. Such remedies, while they will, after the unreasoning passions have subsided, lead to real debates and sound deliberation such as we all desire, will also utterly cut off mere talk, that moth of time and of business which seeks to kill by indirection what nobody could kill in the open House by an open vote.

[February, 1891. Page 154.]

The waste of time in the House is simply inconceivable. The pernicious habit of destroying time by utterly needless calls of the roll for yeas and nays is so bad that even at the risk of repetition it is worth while to call attention to the figures which the last session disclosed. A roll call costs, one time with another, twenty-five minutes. Inasmuch as 458 roll calls were had last session, of which not 100 were legitimate, not less than one hundred and eighty hours were wasted. Five hours is a whole legislative day. Thirty days at least were therefore wasted last session in mere roll calls. This waste could be in a great measure prevented by requiring all motions now made for dilatory purposes to be seconded by a majority before they could be entertained.

[February, 1891. Page 156.]

The business of 60,000,000 people must be carried on. If obstruction increases, repression must increase. If talk, utterly irrelevant, consumes time and destroys public business, talk must be limited, and then men will have less temptation to irrelevancy and true debate will flourish.

[May, 1890. Page 537.]

What has been done ought to be preserved intact, because very much more needs to be done before the House becomes a deliberative body capable of satisfactorily doing the business of a great nation, which becomes every day visibly greater.

[October, 1889. Page 424.]

What is a legislative body for? It is not merely to make laws. It is to decide on all questions of public grievance, to determine between the different views entertained by men of diverse interests, and to reconcile them both with justice. It must in some form hear the people. A negative decision by a legislative body is of as much value to the community as a law. Time is not lost when cases are investigated and action refused. Half the grievances of mankind turn out to be unfounded as soon as somebody is found to listen to them.

[October, 1889. Page 424.]

A legislature is the court of very last resort. Therefore it would seem as if it should have such rules of action as would make the majority efficient. Our Government is founded upon the idea of majority rule. There can be no other government by the people.

[March, 1890. Page 382.]

The House of Representatives is a body of men 330 in number, representing a vast extent of country, with interests and wants so varied that no catalogue could enumerate them.

[October, 1889. Page 425.]

If time were eternity, or men were angels, there should be no limit to debate. But in the House of Representatives men are not angels, and even time is limited to five hours in the day and six months in the year, and therefore debate is much abridged. * * * When debate becomes the rule and speechmaking the exception, we shall have a better state of things in that regard, for speechmaking contributes more than anything else to the ruin of debate.

[October, 1889. Page 426.]

If dilatory motions were reduced to their lowest limit, or, even as such, entirely abolished, there would be greater facilities for action and consideration; and therefore there would be a greater chance for debate, and the danger of unwise laws would be much lessened. The present system is capable of indefinite abuse, and the actual abuse is increasing every year.

[October, 1889. Page 423.]

The people of the country ought with one voice to help and support any honest effort to do business and to shorten Congressional sessions.

[October, 1889. Page 425.]

When a legislative body makes rules, it does not make them, as the people make constitutions, to limit power and to provide for rights; they are made to facilitate the orderly and safe transaction of business. * * * As a body, they represent the whole people of the United States, and have, therefore, no right to limit their own power. Rules should not be barriers; they should be guides.

[October, 1889. Page 426.]

With the greatest liberty new rules could possibly give to it, the House could never pass upon one-fifth of the business presented.

[May, 1890. Page 540.]

The vote by yeas and nays, intended by the framers of the Constitution simply to show constituencies how their representatives voted, has been prostituted to the use of the filibusters. With 330 members in a place so large that it is itself an imperative invitation to confusion, it takes, one time with another, a full half hour to ascertain the vote. Eight roll calls will utterly ruin a day. Hence any plan which makes roll calls inevitable is a sure plan for obstruction.

[October, 1889. Page 422.]

A provision of the Constitution has been wrested from its original design and made the corner stone of the rampart of obstruction. The Constitution provides that, whenever one-fifth of the members desire it, the yeas and nays shall be entered on the Journal.

[October, 1889. Page 423.]

So completely has this provision of the Constitution been turned from its original purpose that I should not be surprised to find that double the number of pages of the House Journal had been wasted in the record of yeas and nays on frivolous motions than had been used to record all the votes on serious questions.

[May, 1890. Page 540.]

The Constitution itself gives to one-fifth of the members a right that to-day is the greatest cause of delay and waste of time which still remains in the House of Representatives. * * * Whether some mechanical contrivance can diminish this waste of time and commend itself alike to the Constitution and the House will soon have to be considered.

[May, 1890. Page 544.]

All private bills go to the Private Calendar, and the claims of individuals have now no chance except what they receive during the Fridays which the press of public business permits to be used for their consideration. There is in the House no calendar which seems so hopeless and so unattackable. During thirteen years I have seen many bright and sanguine men propose remedies and offer panaceas, but they have all failed to meet the disease.

[May, 1890. Page 545.]

Energies which could have made new fortunes have too often been spent in vain pursuit of decisions of Congress which can never be obtained.

[May, 1890. Page 544.]

Many men who were among the prognosticators of evil when the new rules were passed were entirely sincere in the belief that, if the House obtained the right to do what it pleased, extravagance and unreason would run riot. Accustomed to get behind the rules as the sole protection, they forgot that the best protection of a country is liberty and government of the majority. They can now see that facility of action has but increased the sense of responsibility, and that, instead of the rules, the real protectors of the Treasury are the good sense and honesty of the members of the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, on Friday I had occasion to criticise the action of the Committee on Appropriations on a bill now before this House. I wish to say that my criticism of the Committee on Appropriations goes to their violating my rights as a member of this House. I have a right to assume that, when the Committee on Appropriations makes a report to this House in the form of a bill, that the bill is made in accordance with the law, and that there is not an item in an appropriation bill which they bring in here which is knowingly in opposition to the laws which they swore to support when they took their oath of office as members of this House; and, furthermore, that my rights are violated in incorporating unlawful provisions, because I am not supposed to examine every item in the appropriation bill that is brought in by the Committee on Appropriations, and to pass upon its legality. I have a right to assume that every item in an appropriation bill is not subject to a point of order, as in violation of law, unless it is put into that bill inadvertently, unless a mistake is made. I have a right to assume that they do not deliberately, and for the purpose of securing legislation for appropriations not warranted by existing law, put in items in an appropriation bill knowing they are not warranted by law. I said on that occasion——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit that there is no question of privilege pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard any stated yet.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. My statement is that the Committee on Appropriations knowingly put into the appropriation bill ten items each one of which was subject to a point of order as not supported by existing law, and which they were not justified in putting into the appropriation bill because there is no law on the statute books to justify them. That is my point of order. That is the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. What action does the gentleman propose?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I propose to ask the House to take such action as it deems proper after I present my case. I propose to submit the question to this House for its action. Now, on Friday, February 19, I used this language in this House:

> The action of the Committee on Appropriations in its treatment of honest claims of citizens of this country against the Government of the United States is indefensible, and, furthermore, their treatment of this House in the favoritism which they manifest. The favor which they show in all matters in which they are interested, and the absolute impossibility of getting a hearing on matters that they are not interested in, is emphasized beyond measure, and becomes a question of human liberty. Why, Mr. Chairman, what a mockery it is for the chairman of this Committee on Appropriations to stand on this floor and say that he "would be very glad to consider this legislation when it is before the House!" In God's name, how are we to get such legislation before this House? Will anybody tell me how you are going to get the payment of just claims and the awards of the Court of Claims before the House? How are you going to get this or any legislation before the House, however much members of this body or the people of the country may need it or desire it?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to make a discourse on the subject and then leave it to the House is not raising a question of privilege.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think that this committee——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will see at once upon reflection that if such was the admitted practice of the House any gentleman might make a speech of an hour under that head and then nothing be done about it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer this resolution——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. To that I raise a point of order.

Mr. HULL. We shall have to hear the resolution first.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have a pretty good idea of what it is.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I have not written the resolution. My resolution is to this effect:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations were not justified in bringing in ten items in their appropriation bill, under the laws or under the rules of the House, that were knowingly subject to the objection, under the point of order, that they were not justified by existing law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that could be a question of privilege.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my point is that the committee——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman had made the point at the time when the matter was pending before the House——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. My point is that a member of the House does not know whether the items in an appropriation bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations, which is exceptional from the other committees—which may initiate legislation—are in order. Other committees are empowered to initiate new legislation, but the Committee on Appropriations, as appointed by this House, is circumscribed so that it can not initiate new legislation on its appropriation bills.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts (continuing). And in doing so it violates the rules of the House. That is my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not a question of privilege when presented in this way.

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is limited to two hours, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the remaining half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. CANNON. One moment. On pages 54 and 55 of the deficiency bill as printed there were eight paragraphs touching the personnel of the House reported in the bill which went out on points of order on Saturday last. I ask now unanimous consent to reinsert those items.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I ask if that includes the amendment offered to the bill by myself?

Mr. CANNON. No; it does not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will say to the gentleman that if he renews his proposition I do not think there will be objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the gentleman to withhold that request until I can look into it a little further. I do not think there will be objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his request for the present.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer, in lieu of the amendments which I have offered to come in on line 24, page 61, and in lines 9 and 10, page 5, the following substitute in place of those amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desires to offer the following in lieu of the amendments pending, offered by him on Saturday.

Mr. SAYERS. This is not to be read in my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that these are offered as substitutes.

Mr. SAYERS. But not to be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands these are offered as substitutes.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. And the other amendments will be considered as pending. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman desires to withdraw the amendments offered on Saturday and substitute the following?

Mr. SAYERS. I will withdraw the amendments to which these are intended as substitutes, and allow them to be read as the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Insert, in line 24, page 61, after the word "claims," the following:
> "Except claims for services over nonbond-aided lines of the bond-aided Pacific railroads."
> Strike out of lines 9 and 10, page 5, after the word "session," the following: "$16,277.91," and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "For services over bond-aided lines, and to be credited to the sinking fund and interest accounts of said railroads, $14,712.45."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that these amendments shall be considered as pending, in lieu of the amendments offered by him on Saturday to those paragraphs. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. As separate amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. A separate vote is demanded on them.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Let me inquire of the gentleman if you do not get your pages wrong?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask for the reading of that amendment. I did not hear it, and reserve my right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendments.

The amendments were again reported.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I was unable to hear the reading on account of the confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes that gentlemen will be seated and will be in order. It is impossible for members to hear the Clerk read the amendments. All gentlemen will please be seated and cease conversation.

The amendments were again read.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read the third amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the other amendment, which was offered on Saturday and is pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 60, strike out all of lines from 18 to 24, inclusive.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Chair to notify me when I shall have occupied fifteen minutes. I desire to call attention especially to the amendment which affects lines 18 to 24, inclusive, on page 60, which is to strike out an appropriation of $1,310,427.08 for the Southern Pacific Company. My information respecting this particular appropriation is that, if made, it will go to pay the Southern Pacific Company for transportation upon nonaided lines of the Central Pacific Railroad. The object of those of us who desire to defeat this appropriation is to withhold the money and to apply it in offset to a very large amount which is due from the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Government, and those who are cooperating with me in this effort hold to the opinion that inasmuch as the owners of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the owners of the Southern Pacific Company, and the owners of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company are practically the same persons, in good conscience and in equity Congress ought to withhold payment of this judgment until a full and fair settlement shall have been had between the Government and the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. DALZELL. May I ask the gentlemen whether any part of this money was earned by the aided railroads?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. None of it.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not claim, Mr. Chairman, that any portion of this money was earned by the aided roads, but what I do claim is that the earnings of the nonaided branch lines of the Central Pacific Railroad ought to be withheld, upon the ground that those lines were built out of the revenues arising from the operation of the Central Pacific Railroad, which revenues, under the law, ought to have been, in part at least, applied to the payment of the Central Pacific Company's indebtedness to the Government, and also for another reason. I am now going to state a fact, not upon my own responsibility, but upon information derived from others. That fact is that, out of the earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad Company from 1872 to 1878 and from 1878 to 1886, about $7,000,000 were paid to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company as a subsidy, and that of that sum so paid there was due to the Government under the law, from 1872 to 1878, 5 per cent, and from 1878 to 1886 25 per cent, which money, as the Government's share of the earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad Company for application to the sinking fund, was illegally and improperly diverted to the payment of subsidies to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which was practically under the control and ownership of the same persons who owned and controlled the Central Pacific Railroad and who now own and control the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. During either of the periods you have mentioned, was the Southern Pacific Railroad in existence?

Mr. SAYERS. I said the Southern Pacific Company.

Mr. HEPBURN Well, the company?

Mr. SAYERS. The Southern Pacific Company may not have been; but the very same gentlemen who constitute the Southern Pacific Company to-day constituted at that time the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The Southern Pacific Company took charge of all these lines on April 1, 1885, and all of these claims have arisen since that time.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be contended that this appropriation ought to be made because a portion of this judgment was paid by an appropriation at the last session of this Congress, amounting to nearly $500,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. How much does that judgment carry, all told? A million and a half?

Mr. SAYERS. More than that; $1,800,000. That contention is correct as to the fact, Mr. Chairman. This judgment covered several items, and of the appropriation of $1,500,000 so made, about $500,000 was used in payment of part of this judgment and covering transportation, not over the Central Pacific Railroad or any of its unaided lines, but over other lines controlled and owned by the Southern Pacific Company. This present item is embraced in section 19, page 27, of the bill reported by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] for funding the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Government.

Mr. BINGHAM. The House defeated that bill, I believe.

Mr. SAYERS. In that section of the funding bill it is expressly provided that—

> Two million four hundred and fourteen thousand three hundred and twenty-six dollars and twenty-one cents standing on the books of the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Central Pacific Railroad Company as compensation for services upon its nonaided lines, a portion of which is now in judgment in favor of the Southern Pacific Company, together with all interest thereon, shall be applied to the payment of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Government.

Here is an admission by the Southern Pacific Company that the sum of $2,400,000, of which this appropriation is a part, may be applied to the payment of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific to the Government. And yet gentlemen to-day insist upon it that, because they have a naked judgment and because the offset which we seek to make in good conscience would not be admitted as an offset in a court of law, therefore Congress ought to make this appropriation for the benefit of the men who owe the Government sixty or seventy millions of dollars and who say that they are not able to pay it. For ten long years we have been resisting payment of a similar appropriation. Under the leadership of Mr. Burnes in the Fiftieth Congress this fight was begun, and in the Fifty-first Congress, with more members upon the floor than I have ever seen before or since then at a night session, the House by an unprecedented majority of over 40 to 1, decided that such an appropriation should not be paid.

Mr. CANNON. Would it interrupt my friend if I should ask him a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly not.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not true that for almost ten years these identical nonbond-aided roads have been paid almost in full from the current appropriations for Government transportation, and that they are now being paid for current service?

Mr. SAYERS. They have not been paid, since I have been a member of the Appropriations Committee, from any appropriations made upon bills emanating from that committee——

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman forgets the appropriations in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Except in the general deficiency bill of the first session of this Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are paid under the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly, but that bill——

Mr. BINGHAM. The appropriation for inland mail transportation includes their compensation.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman is referring to the Post-Office appropriation bill and to appropriations coming from the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee; the gentleman from Pennsylvania has had charge of that bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me a moment? He just now said that ten years ago, by a vote of 51 to 1——

Mr. SAYERS. In the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. These judgments had been refused payment.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, let me remind the gentleman that it is only during a comparatively few months that these judgments have had any existence.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HEPBURN. The excuse made heretofore for nonpayment was that the claims had not been adjudicated.

Mr. SAYERS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is the old fight that has been going on ever since the Fiftieth Congress, session after session.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. When was the judgment for which it is proposed to make appropriation obtained?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not recall the exact date; but I may be able to furnish it to the gentleman in the course of the debate.

Now, the question before this committee is whether it will reverse the policy and action of the House for the last ten years and give to the Southern Pacific Company $1,800,000, that company having control of the Central Pacific Railroad and all its branch lines and having agreed in the funding bill, which was brought before the House, that this very money should be held by the Government as an offset pro tanto, to be applied to the payment of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad to the Government.

Gentlemen say that this judgment ought to be paid. I admit that it is a valid judgment, binding upon the Government; but at the same time, I insist that Congress, engaged in a death grapple with these railroads in order to force them to pay an indebtedness justly due the Government, ought to see to it that no money shall be appropriated for their benefit until a full and fair settlement is had between the Government and these companies.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why is it that the Government pays quarterly the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, in the same way it pays every other nonaided railroad company in the country, for the transportation of mails and munitions of war?

Mr. SAYERS. My friend, the House is not responsible for the conscience of any other branch of the Government.

Mr. BINGHAM. But we do pay that money now under the law.

Mr. SAYERS. The House is responsible for its own conscience.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do we not now make those payments under the law?

Mr. SAYERS. The Treasury Department does so; but because the Treasury Department may act unwisely——

Mr. BINGHAM. Those payments can not be made illegally, because Congress takes cognizance of them.

Mr. SAYERS. Is it incumbent upon this House to follow every policy inaugurated by the Departments?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Department pays under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has occupied fifteen minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I will occupy only two or three minutes more. I will restate the question. It is a question which has been before this House for ten years past, which has been fought over and over, and again and again, and the battle has always gone in favor of the Government.

We admit the validity of this judgment. We do not deny that the Government owes this amount to the company. But we claim that inasmuch as the stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company and of the Central Pacific Railroad Company are practically one and the same, and inasmuch as one of these concerns is largely indebted to the Government and is in a state of confessed bankruptcy, and through its attorney has told us that it is unable to pay its indebtedness, this House will be derelict in its duty if it should pay over $1,300,000 of the money of the Government to the Southern Pacific Company with the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad being unpaid. These gentlemen—the owners of the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific railroads—are masquerading under the protection and blind of the Southern Pacific Company, incorporated by the legislature of Kentucky to operate railroads, to build railroads, to lease railroads, to carry on merchandise or banking business, and, in a word, to do everything that they may choose, provided they keep out of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY].

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Before my colleague takes the floor, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] a question. I understood the gentleman to say, before he sat down, in answer to a question of mine——

Mr. NORTHWAY. I hope this will not come out of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I can not yield.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. There seems to be some misunderstanding as to the inquiry I made of the gentleman from Texas, but I will take another occasion to refer to it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I should not feel called upon to give an expression of my views on the question now under consideration were it not for the fact that a fierce struggle took place on the floor of the House several weeks ago, over what is known as the "funding bill," in which I took a short part. I voted against the provisions of the funding bill then presented. I shall now vote against the amendment presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to strike out this provision, and shall vote in favor of the judgment, and because of my vote on the funding bill to which I have referred, and on this question, I desire to be heard briefly at the present time. My vote on the funding bill had no reference whatever to the question of honor or not paying the debt or kindred questions involved in the controversy. The only objection to the funding bill, as then presented, was, in my judgment, that we could get better offers than were presented for a settlement of the claim of the Government of the United States. I believed that I was right then, and I know now that I was right.

Now, in reference to the matter directly under consideration, ten minutes will not suffice to present an argument, and I can only call attention briefly to the matter in question. The bill proposes to pay a judgment of one million three hundred and some odd thousand dollars obtained by the Southern Company—the Southern Pacific Company—against the United States.

The gentleman from Texas said that we have fought over this matter for about ten years. Now, let me invite his attention to the fact that the judgment was rendered by the Court of Claims on the 13th day of January, 1893, covering this amount; so that we have not fought over it for ten years.

Mr. SAYERS. What I said was that this matter has been fought over for ten years.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The idea was that this particular proposition has been in controversy for ten years.

Mr. SAYERS. And the money appropriated from time to time has been withheld.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The judgment was rendered on the 30th day of January, 1893.

Mr. SAYERS. That is correct.

Mr. NORTHWAY (continuing). And on an appeal taken by the Government to the Supreme Court of the United States; but they failed to perfect the appeal, because a decision rendered in April, 1886, had covered precisely the same question in a suit between the Central Pacific Company for services rendered on the nonbond-aided portions of the line and the United States.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform us what became of the judgment rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States? Has it been paid?

Mr. NORTHWAY. It never has been paid.

Mr. SAYERS. No; it was not paid.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, what I wish to call your attention to especially is this: The claim is made that because the Central Pacific Company, over the bond-aided portion, is indebted to the Government on the bonds paid by the Government of the United States we should now withhold payment to the Southern Pacific Company, which has leased the Central Pacific, for services rendered upon the nonbond-aided portions of the line of road. And be it remembered, further, that not a cent of the judgment rendered is for services by the bond-aided line of road, or any other road except these nonbond-aided portions.

Mr. SAYERS. Of the Central Pacific?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Of the Central Pacific or any other road; because it does not apply to the bond-aided portions, but only to the nonbond-aided portions.

But the gentleman from Texas wants to withhold the payment of the judgment because we have the physical power to do so. He thinks because we have the power we should refuse to pay our debts.

But, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to one thing, and that, it seems to me, is conclusive in this regard. The contract for carrying the mails, for transporting troops and supplies and munitions of war, for which the judgment was rendered, was entered into between the Government of the United States and the Southern Pacific Company. We need not have entered into it. We bound the company to the performance of its duty; we required them to execute a bond for the performance of the work, and if it failed we could have entered judgment and collected the bond. I submit now that, having entered into that kind of contract, we are bound in law and in honor to perform our part of the contract as fully as we could have obliged the other side to perform their part of the contract.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. May I interrupt the gentleman for just one minute?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Well, now, not for a minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Has the company owning this judgment come under the control of these other companies since the judgment was rendered?

Mr. NORTHWAY. It had the control of the nonbond-aided lines of the road before the judgment was rendered. The Southern Pacific Company came into the control of the Central Pacific, both the bond-aided portion and the nonbond-aided portion, in 1885, and this suit was commenced in 1889 in the Court of Claims. Judgment was rendered on the 30th of January, 1893, but for services performed strictly on the nonbond-aided lines. Now mark——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Who has the right to the judgment now?

Mr. NORTHWAY. The Southern Pacific Company.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The company in whose favor it was rendered?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes. It has not been assigned, but stands now in the name of the Southern Pacific Company; and now it is said, because the Central Pacific Company is indebted to us, we shall not pay the judgment which we agreed to pay to the Southern Pacific Company.

Now mark! This judgment could not have been rendered except in conformity with the law which we ourselves passed. We provided that that company might sue us, or else they could not have sued the Government of the United States. We promised by law, as faithfully as we could, that if any judgment was obtained against us we would pay it. Judgment was obtained against us, not a judgment on a finding of facts, but a judgment which could be enforced against an individual; and we stand here to-day in this attitude, that if we withhold this money we are doing precisely what we should do if the bonds of this Government had fallen due and we should decline to appropriate the money to pay them. There would be no power to collect it; that is all. By physical power we can decline to pay any of our indebtedness; by physical power we can decline to pay this indebtedness; but I submit that the lawmaking power, which passes laws to obligate all citizens to bow in submission to the law, should itself bow in submission to its own law, and should not stand and repudiate that which it forces upon all the millions of our people. We ourselves should be bound by the law by which we bind others.

Here was a contract which bound the Southern Pacific Company to do certain things. That company might have been wrong in leasing its lines; but we knew it, if it was. We entered into a contract with it, and the rule of law is everywhere positive, to which there is no exception, that when a person enters into a contract with another he shall not be heard to say that that other does not exist. The Government entered into a contract with the Southern Pacific Company. It should not to-day stand here and be heard to say that this Southern Pacific Company has no right to existence. We ourselves recognized its existence. We entered into a contract with it, and provided for the rendition of a judgment. The judgment has been rendered. It is a judgment which in law as against an individual could be enforced by execution.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that the obligations of a contract are just as sacred on the part of this railroad company as on the part of the Government?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Precisely; but that Southern Pacific Company never cheated us. We entered into a contract with it. The United States has been heard in this matter in the Court of Claims. It has been heard in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the very questions were raised which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will raise, and which were raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. The Supreme Court has said that there was no equity in the claim of the Government. Law and equity are both against the Government, and the debt should be paid. The Supreme Court of the United States, the highest court in this land, has pronounced upon this matter, and we ought not to decline to be bound by the court which binds all the millions of our countrymen. We as individuals are bound by the decisions of that court, and it is one of the glories of this country that the decisions of that court must be submitted to. We compel all the people to submit to its decisions. Why should we not be bound by that court? These very questions that are to be asked to-day have been fought out, argued by the ablest atterneys, the court has passed fully upon the questions, and they have held that the objections raised against the payment of this claim are not defenses, either in law or in equity.

Mr. HARRISON. Was that matter litigated before the court?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes. Not this judgment, but the very question was litigated in a suit brought by the Central Pacific Railroad Company for services rendered over the nonbond-aided lines, and it was litigated in the Supreme Court, where the very same questions were presented.

Mr. HARRISON. Was not the Government represented before the Court of Claims in this case?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir; and they took an appeal, and failed to perfect the appeal. Now, that very question was passed upon in 1886 by a full opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, involving the exact question, where every point was litigated and every point passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the lawyers of this House for the brief time that I occupy the floor. To my mind this is one of the simplest questions we have ever had before us. The Southern Pacific Company was organized in 1885, and leased other roads. The services it rendered were the carrying of the mails and troops of the Government between 1885 and 1889. Nobody disputes that these services were rendered. They have rendered the same services ever since, and have been paid ever since without question; but, forsooth, because a court has rendered a judgment for these services, it has been picked out and objected to and fought over here term after term. Why, there has been no question raised as to the company's services in carrying the mails. Not at all. For similar services this year there has been no objection to the payment; but because this was embodied in a judgment it seems that they have found fault with it and declined to pay it.

Now, there is no defense to this claim—none under the shining sun. There is no equity or law or reason why it should not be paid. Gentlemen say that these companies are one and the same. Why? Because there was a funding bill in this House, and because members have won some glory in fighting railroads, they attack this item, and have assailed it furiously. Now, where is the equity of it? Where is the ground on which the assault stands? I claim there is none. But they say that the Central Pacific Railroad owes the United States Government, and for that reason the Government ought not to pay this claim. The city of Pittsburg owes the men who hold its bonds, and for that reason a man who holds its bonds ought not to pay a debt he owes me. The doctrine that you can offset a debt due an individual in dealing with a corporation of which he is a member was never enforced by any civilized court in the civilized world, and never will be; never can be. Where is the ground? Oh, they say the Central Pacific Railroad Company is indebted to the Government, and the Southern Pacific Company operates the Central Pacific, and they are all one and the same. They are not all one and the same. The stockholders of the Southern Pacific are in part stockholders of the Central Pacific. They are also stockholders, in part, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and in part of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and you may trace these stockholders into several companies. But because one of these companies of which they are stockholders is indebted to the Government, are you going to withhold what the Government owes to other companies in which they are interested? You are simply playing with the law and with equity and with justice. It becomes a travesty. You can do it by main, physical, muscular force; but you have no right to do it, no legal right, no equitable right, and no moral right to do it. Here is this railroad company performing this service for years, and you are paying for it year after year. But here this one time you say you will not pay it. Suppose I owe John Jones, and John Jones is a stockholder in a corporation that owes me, and he wants his money, and I say I will not pay him. Why? Because he belongs to a company that owes me, and it will not pay me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS (to Mr. CANNON). Will you yield him a minute?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania two minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. Did not the gentleman vote for the Pacific funding bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I refer the gentleman to the RECORD.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to say if the gentleman did so vote, he voted to apply this very money just as we are seeking to apply it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This is not a parallel claim and has no application here.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, it has.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The policy of funding a debt which this and other roads owe the Government is one question, and the policy of the Government refusing to pay its admitted honest debts is another.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman say that he voted for that bill or not?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman tell this House why he opposes this proposition?

Mr. SAYERS. If you voted for that bill, you certainly can not oppose the amendment to strike out this appropriation and be consistent.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That has got nothing to do with the case. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. SAYERS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This is not a kindergarten. It is the House of Representatives of the United States. There are gentlemen here who are learned in the law, who have been judges of the highest courts in their States, and yet we are asked in this House to favor and enforce a proposition that will be laughed at by every justice of the peace in the country; laughed at because there is no law, no equity, no common sense, and no morals in it.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that this very funding bill also recognized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as a separate company and proposed to take it as security for the Central?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, I can not go into the details of the funding bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to occupy so much time as the gentleman from Texas has kindly yielded. I ask the especial attention of Republican Representatives, because I intend to discuss this important issue in a businesslike manner. It is wholly removed from the arena of politics, and I may therefore claim the fair and impartial attention of gentlemen upon that side, and especially of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], whom I see so graciously beaming with smiles.

Mr. Chairman, this is an old contention which comes down to us from the Fiftieth Congress. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has consistently during all these years urged this appropriation of public money. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and myself, supported by an overwhelming majority of this body, regardless of the political party controlling, have hitherto opposed and succeeded in securing the rejection of the items contained in this judgment, which amount to $1,310,427.08.

The Fiftieth Congress rejected the items which constitute this judgment. The Fifty-first Congress also rejected the claims which entered into this judgment; and so, Mr. Chairman, during a period of eight years the House has considered the question and determined that although this is a valid claim, payment of it shall be withheld until the time arrives when the Government can adjudicate and settle its accounts with the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The parties to this controversy are the Southern Pacific Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the United States Government. The Central Pacific Railroad was constructed, as gentlemen know, by the bounty of the Government.

The Government gave to that company a national charter. It gave it an ample right of way. It granted land on each side of the road amounting, I believe, to 12,800 acres per mile. It loaned its credit in the form of bonds to the extent of $16,000 per mile on 17 miles of the road; on 150 miles of the road it loaned its credit to the extent of $48,800 per mile, and on 580 miles of the road it loaned its credit to the extent of $32,000 per mile. These were all 6 per cent thirty-year bonds, so that it is obvious the Government gave to this railroad company a valuable grant of land and an enormous gift of bonds. To further encourage the enterprise, it also authorized the company to issue first-mortgage bonds at the rate of $16,000 per mile, which should be a first lien upon the road, the Government lien being subject to this first-mortgage indebtedness. The Central Pacific Railroad Company was therefore constructed at the expense of the people of the United States, and out of the bounty of the Government this corporation has largely built up its so-called nonaided lines.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman tell us the process by which he proposes to apply the amount of this judgment rendered in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to extinguish the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad?

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will hear me through, I think I can make it so plain that my friend from Iowa will not err. Under the provisions of the Thurman Act, passed in 1878, the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company were required to pay into the Federal Treasury, in addition to their earnings for carrying the mails, troops, and munitions of war, a certain percentage of other earnings. That requirement was, in the main, I believe, substantially complied with by both of the companies. But now comes the sinister feature of this transaction.

In 1885 the Southern Pacific Company was organized under a charter granted by the State of Kentucky. That Southern Pacific Company, which then for the first time appeared upon the scene, was composed practically of the same stockholders as the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Furthermore, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company also consisted substantially of the same stockholders as the Central Pacific Railroad Company. So that we have the Central Pacific Railroad Company, controlled by Mr. C. P. Huntington and others; the Southern Pacific Company, controlled by Mr. C. P. Huntington and others; and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, controlled by Mr. C. P. Huntington and others.

Now, what was the result of the advent of the Southern Pacific Company? It may be briefly stated. The Southern Pacific Company leased the Central Pacific Railroad and its nonaided lines for a term of ninety-nine years; it also leased the Southern Pacific Railroad line, which was a competing line, and by the leases thus effected by the Southern Pacific Company the earning capacity of the Central Pacific Railroad was largely diminished. That is to say, Mr. C. P. Huntington, assuming under the law the alias of a corporation, diverted from the Central Pacific Railroad the traffic which legitimately belonged to that line and transferred it to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and in that way deprived the Government of a large part of the earnings to which it was justly entitled under the Thurman Act. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, these leases also necessarily depreciated the value of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, so that Mr. Huntington has wistfully looked forward to the good time coming when a settlement with the Government would be made and he could purchase the Central Pacific Railroad for a nominal sum. This is the situation.

Mr. BOATNER. Were these defenses urged in the suit against the Government in which this judgment was rendered?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know. I suppose they could not be urged in law.

Mr. BOATNER. Why not?

Mr. DOCKERY. I come to-day, Mr. Chairman, let me say in reply to the gentleman from Louisiana, to appeal to this House not upon mere quibbles or hair-splitting technicalities. I come appealing to members of this House, as the representatives of 70,000,000 of people, to stand upon broader, higher ground than trifling legal technicalities, and to deal out even-handed justice as between the Government and this railroad corporation.

I claim, Mr. Chairman—and I desire to impress this fact upon the consciousness of every Representative here—that the Southern Pacific Company is but a mask; a disguise behind which the Central Pacific Railroad Company masquerades at the expense of the people of the United States. Why do I say so? Because the stockholders of these two companies are substantially the same. Their identity can be established.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman does not know that.

Mr. BOWERS. Everybody in the United States knows it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I invite my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] when he takes the floor in his own right—because he has or can have sources of information which I have not—I invite him in the presence of the representatives of the American people to read the list of stockholders——

Mr. BINGHAM. I have not the list. They change every day.

Mr. DOCKERY. I challenge the gentleman and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to read the names of the stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railroad.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what do these companies owe the Government? How do their accounts stand? On the 17th of the present month this defaulting corporation—otherwise known as Mr. C. P. Huntington and his brother stockholders—owed the Treasury of the United States, of money that had been taken from our constituents to pay the debts that the companies refused to pay, $9,605,210.06 on account of maturing bonds and interest. And that is not all, Mr. Chairman. On the 1st of January, 1899, when this debt will fully mature, Mr. Huntington, who comes here masquerading under three corporate names, will owe the Government in exact figures $60,249,130.53.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with that exhibit before the House, I can and do appeal to the other side of the House, with its 180 Republican majority, not to invade the Treasury of the people and take therefrom at a time of world-wide business depression $1,310,427.08, that Mr. Huntington himself admitted, on page 27 of the Pacific railroad funding bill, should be included as an offset against the debt of the United States.

Why, sir, I appeal to my good friend from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY], whom I know to be an honest and just man, to say what he would do if an insolvent debtor owed him $60,249,130.53 and that debtor perchance had obtained judgment against him to the amount of $2,414,326.21 in advance of the maturity of the $60,249,130.53 debt?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman permit me to say——

Mr. DOCKERY. I venture to say—and the gentleman from Ohio can answer in his own time—that in an individual transaction of that nature my good friend would not be swift of foot to pay over to the insolvent debtor the more than $60,000,000, but with all the agencies at his command would invoke the aid of the law to resist the payment of the $2,414,326.21 until such time as the insolvent debtor could be brought into a court of equity and compelled to offset one judgment with the other.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, will the gentleman permit me right there——

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman for just a moment.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If I had litigated the very question at issue—if I had carried into the Supreme Court of the United States and fought out in that court the very question involved, and had been defeated, I would pay the judgment against me.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Ohio talks about the sacredness of a judgment. Why, sir, only ten days ago he stood on this floor, and side by side with myself and others, assisted in incorporating into the District of Columbia appropriation bill a provision prohibiting the payment of judgments rendered under the act of February 13, 1895. I refer to the judgments for the claims of the old "Boss Shepherd" régime.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I voted to repeal the law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the gentleman tell me, if he will, in his own time, wherein and how the judgments of Mr. C. P. Huntington, of California, and his associates, in the name of the Southern Pacific Company, are more sacred than the judgments rendered under the act of February 13, 1895, which the gentleman by his vote the other day declared, and properly declared, should not be paid.

Mr. Chairman, I speak earnestly on this question, because the payment of this judgment would involve a new departure, a departure from the policy of this House in all Congresses during the last eight years. The Fiftieth Congress spewed out this claim as unworthy. The Fifty-first Congress rejected it overwhelmingly. Shall it be said that now, at a time when our revenues are confessedly inadequate by nearly fifty millions of dollars to meet the current expenses of the Government, we are swift to seek out Mr. Huntington and advance him money, amounting to $1,310,427.08, which he himself offered to this House in the Pacific Railroad funding bill in part satisfaction of the claim of the Government against the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

If the Southern Pacific Company is not in fact the Central Pacific, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has always consistently favored this appropriation, tell the House and the country by what authority Mr. Huntington proposed in the funding bill to admit the $1,310,427.08 as a set-off against the claim of the Government?

No, no, Mr. Chairman, this defaulting corporation, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, alias the Southern Pacific, alias the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, owes the people of the United States more than $60,000,000, $9,605,210.06 of which has been already paid by the National Treasury. The Government owes these corporations in justice an amount, including the sum now sought to be paid, of $2,414,326.21. And all we ask in behalf of the taxpayers of this country is that Congress shall withhold the payment of the $2,414,326.21 until the Government can effect a settlement with the defaulting corporation. Is it not fair; is it not just; is it not equitable? Is anything else fair and equitable and just to the people of this country?

I submit the question to the impartial judgment of gentlemen on the other side, who constitute an overwhelming majority of the House, trusting that when the vote is announced they will render such a decision as will indicate to Mr. Huntington that when he is ready to pay the more than sixty million dollars he owes the Government, the United States will be prompt to reciprocate by paying the $2,414,826.21 which it owes him. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied eighteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives is now brought face to face with a simple question of law, and he who can not discuss it without overflowing with passion can not afford any light to the gentlemen present who are to vote upon it. It is neither a question of passion nor prejudice. I propose to discuss it, for the very brief time at my disposal, without appealing to the House because either of the love or hate borne to any man. It is a very novel proposition to find in the discussion of this question the House put into a condition of spasmodic ecstacy, utterly regardless of every principle of law or decency governing transactions between man and man, by an appeal to the prejudice that some man has against some other man.

I do not care anything about C. P. Huntington. I scarcely know him by sight. I know his history, and I do not propose that any bogy proposition shall be thrust in my face by any man on a question of so vital importance to the honor and integrity of my country as this. I know Collis P. Huntington by general repute as a man who to-day employs some 40,000 laborers in the United States of America, and pays them great wages for their services. I know him as a man who has built more miles of railroad than any other man in the United States of America or in the world. I know him as a man that in the very heat of the distress that swept the country three years ago, projected a mighty enterprise at Newport News, and stands to-day upholding it by his genius, generosity, and wisdom in the employment there of a vast horde of laboring men. I know him as a man against whom no strike of labor was ever had in the United States. Point me to a time when a man employed by C. P. Huntington ever struck because of the difficulty between himself and his employer.

Oh, I know it will be said that the Southern Pacific had a deadly strike here a year or two ago. That is true, it had. But it had no relation whatever to differences between their employees and themselves, but related solely to an expression of sympathy with their oppressed brethren in Pullman, Ill. I know Huntington in that regard. I know him as a man of enormous genius and magnificent enterprises. I know further than that that the man who to-day comes in here with apothecaries' scales and undertakes to weigh the relations between these roads and the Government, or who undertakes to criticise the construction of the roads, lays himself liable to the imputation that he does not know what he is talking about—that he does not understand their history. They were never built by the United States Government for the purpose of making exactions of the absolute cost thereof. They were begun and projected as matters of war necessity on the part of the United States, and were carried through to the execution upon terms and conditions that made it impossible for the ordinary expenses of building railroads to be compared with them or to be applied to them.

Now, then, the appeal is made here that we should take the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to the effect that Huntington and somebody else are the joint owners of these lines of road, and refuse to do the people fair and American justice in the case. If the gentleman's statements of facts are not more accurate than his statements of law, I would not give a continental for his knowledge of any question. [Laughter.]

I have no knowledge that Mr. Huntington is the debtor in any of these claims. Where stands the United States Government, which we represent, in regard to these questions? Here are three railroad corporations—the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, and the Southern Pacific—each of them lawfully organized under the laws of the United States or of some of the States, lawfully doing business, lawfully issuing their stock, lawfully incurring their indebtedness, and now we are confronted with this condition: Here is a railroad corporation that never has defaulted, never was given one dollar of money or subsidy in any form by the General Government to aid in its construction; a railroad corporation that projected its own lines of road and built them with its own money, and which entered into a lawful contract with the United States Government to carry its mails for a certain amount of money per annum or per mile, as the contract may provide.

There came a time when the Government refused to pay this obligation and went into litigation in its own courts, selected its own forum, selected its own attorneys, made all its own conditions, and carried the litigation through to overwhelming and complete defeat. An undivided court said that the whole speech of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] was just so much nonsense. That is just what they said. That is the legal effect of it. In reply to the pertinent question of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], when he asked if these claims had been set up against it, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] said that he did not know anything about that. Well, that is one of the very first questions, in all the examination of any intelligent lawyer, or any intelligent man. A presents a claim against B, and brings a suit against him. B is entitled to bring into that defense, if it is an action for money upon a contract, any defense that in law or conscience may be set up against such a claim as this. It was because there was no such defense that this defense was not urged and carried to ultimate success. What sort of a lawyer would it be who undertook to set up, in an action by one corporation for the money earned under a contract, that a stockholder or all the stockholders of that corporation were stockholders of another corporation, and try to set off its debt or its obligation? It only needs to be mentioned, gentlemen, to show you the utter absurdity of the whole proposition.

But that is not all of it. I take a very different view than that taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] upon the question whether there was any equitable claim or any claim in conscience that could have been set off, even though the distinctions in corporations had not existed. The Government of the United States dealt with the Union Pacific Railroad and dealt with the Central Pacific Railroad, and here upon this floor we have rejected a compromise that involved every dollar of this indebtedness, and we have said to the stockholders of the Union Pacific and of the Central Pacific, "We can do better than your offer." The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] can make what he pleases out of it. I voted in favor of that proposition, because I wanted a settlement of it. The gentleman stated—and seems to enjoy his discovery—that the Southern Pacific had offered, in that settlement, to merge its claims, as he understood it.

Mr. SHANNON. To offset them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To offset them. What does the gentleman get from that? The Southern Pacific Railroad Company was anxious, in its corporate capacity, to have an end to this litigation. The United States Government having practically seized the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, the companies came forward and said: "Here is a series of indebtedness. These two separate and distinct corporations owe the Government. Now, if the Government will settle with us and give the Southern Pacific Railroad Company an opportunity to extend its operations by a complete settlement that will give us in the future an opportunity to operate these lines of railroads, we will give you, as part payment on the indebtedness, the debt which you owe." What was there in all that?

Mr. SHANNON. That was a mere proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me, just at that point?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In a moment. However, the Government refused to accept the proposition, and thereby said, "That is a matter entirely outside of this, and we have nothing to do with it."

Mr. CANNON. This bill that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OWENS], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] speak of, the funding bill, provides that before the Central Pacific Railroad can take advantage of it, that it shall pay off or secure the Southern Pacific Company's judgment, to be applied on the Central Pacific's debt. Now, that in no way committed the Southern Pacific Company, which was not a party to this matter.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, it did a great deal more than that. It did all that and a great deal more. It was a declaration by the Government that it understood that debt to be a distinct obligation that could not be set off except by the consent of or negotiation with the Southern Pacific Company. Now, what has the Government done? It has, as I have said, practically seized the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific. It has always been in such an attitude to these two roads that I think I will mention one great fact that has not often been referred to on this floor. The Government has always stood in such a position—by always I mean for a great many years—that it has paralyzed and destroyed these properties. In the few remarks I made, in five minutes, in the debate on the funding bill, I stated that one of the best railroad men in the United States, wholly indifferent in this controversy, told me that $10,000,000 of net receipts per annum for seven years had run down to four millions of net receipts, and he said: "At the door of the unfriendly legislation of Congress lies every dollar of the reduction of those receipts."

They have stood in the way of the development of those lines. Other roads have seen the throttling of these enterprises by the Government. Other railroads, seeing that the United States had taken by the throat the Union Pacific, projected their great lines across the continent side by side with these two lines that the Government ought to have favored; and while they were doing that, these two great lines of railroad found it impossible to make their extensions, to have their feeders builded in such a way as to build up the traffic. And now, when all this is done, and the Government has stood by and seen this judgment rendered by its own court, and refused to appeal from it because of former decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, we are asked to take hold of the monstrous proposition that one corporation is liable to pay the debts of another corporation because there is an intermingling of these stockholders.

Mr. Chairman, I have no interest in this matter, except that it involves the honor of my Government. Let us pay this debt; let us put ourselves in an attitude where we can proclaim our own honesty in the coming Congress, and in all coming Congresses. Until this Pacific railroad question shall be settled, we shall be confronted with the question of what shall we do with these two railroad lines. Now let us do justice to ourselves; let us treat this corporation from the standpoint of intelligence and legal right; and then we shall stand much stronger in enforcing the rights of the Government against the defaulting corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE].

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, one item of the appropriation bill now being considered and which is sought to be stricken out by this amendment is for the payment of a balance on a judgment in favor of the Southern Pacific Company. That company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky. It is a separate identity from that of the Central Pacific or any of these Pacific railroads which received aid from the Government. It is a separate individuality and distinct legal entity. This judgment, Mr. Chairman, has all the sanctity the highest court of the land can give it. It is for services to the Government over nonaided lines. The matter has been adjudicated in favor of this Pacific Company, and this appropriation is intended to discharge an honest obligation of this Government.

The opponents of this provision in the appropriation bill step forward and say that this is involved in the proffered settlement termed the funding bill; that it is a part and parcel of the same transaction, at least in spirit and purpose the same. I voted against that proffered settlement and would do so again if it came here in the same form and under like conditions. But this is an entirely different matter. I do not consider it as any part of that transaction.

The settlement offered the Government by the Pacific Railroad companies, it is true, contained a proposition to settle and discharge this judgment, but such proposition was made upon the condition that the Government would accept the proposed settlement. It bound no one unless the proffered settlement was accepted by the Government. That was rejected by an overwhelming vote of this House. With that rejection the proposition to adjust this judgment failed.

The attention of the House is challenged to the fact that the Southern Pacific Company was not in any sense a party to that transaction and could not have been bound by it had the settlement offered been accepted.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] each argue this proposition as though the stockholders of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company were the same, that the corporations are the same, that there is a perfect identity of the two companies; but I call the attention of this House to the fact that both the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Texas, in the very limit of their expressions, only went to the extent of saying that the stockholders were substantially the same persons. That is not sufficient to complete the identity. I have been informed, and believe it is correct, that a large majority of the stock of the Central Pacific is owned abroad, and that Mr. Huntington, who is brought in here, as it seems to me, for the purpose of raising prejudice and feeling in this House, owns only a slight interest in the corporation as a stockholder.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BLUE. Out of your own time. I only have five minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] on the Appropriations Committee well said, these gentlemen insist upon what? That this Government shall refuse to pay an honest obligation. Not that they know a certain state of facts to exist, but because they suppose them to exist, that this Government, by reason of its all-powerful sovereignty, shall play the highwayman and hold up a judgment against it because it has the power so to do. For what reason? Because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and those who follow their leadership infer, suspicion, a state of facts to exist; and then, upon that mere suspicion and inference, they attempt to justify the action of this Government and say upon that the Government should refuse to pay a debt on a supposed condition of facts to be adjudicated at some remote time in the history of this country. I submit there is no equity, there is no justice, there is no honesty in any such claim. It rests solely upon an assumption without any foundation for it. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by Senator GEAR in the Senate in explanation of this claim against the Government, which I will now read and make a part of my remarks, contains the essence of this whole question.

The $1,310,437.06 due on the Southern Pacific Company's judgment, for which an appropriation is asked, is for services performed in the transportation of the Army, of the mails, and for the passengers and freight of other branches of the public service. All such transportation was performed over roads that never received any subsidy from the Government.

At various times the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States have considered the question of cash payments for services over the Pacific Railroad lines not aided by bonds of the United States, and have invariably decided in favor of the railroad companies.

The only reason why these claims were not paid at the time service was rendered was because the Treasury Department desired to submit for judicial decision all questions where there might be any possible doubt as to the rights of the companies. All the departments of the Government now recognize the right of the Southern Pacific Company to cash payment under the decisions of the courts, and payment of all current service is now being made.

In 118 United States Reports, page 235, the court said that the withholding of the compensation in question "was not only a breach of faith on the part of the United States, but an invasion of the constitutional rights of the company." This has been the position invariably taken in all the judicial decisions on the question of payment for services over nonbond-aided Pacific Railroad lines. In law, therefore, the question is fully decided by the highest tribunal of the United States, whose decisions should be especially respected by those charged with official duties.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, three judgments at law were rendered upon the controverted claims of the Pacific railroads, a part of which are represented and covered by the judgment in question. Two of these judgments were rendered in favor of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and this one in favor of the Southern Pacific Company. The Central Pacific Railroad Company's judgments are still unpaid; but there is no man in the House who would now propose or vote to pay either of the Central Pacific Railroad judgments.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are not in this appropriation.

Mr. MAGUIRE. No; they are not. The claims concerning which the United States Supreme Court made the statement referred to by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE], namely, that the refusal to pay certain claims "was not only a breach of faith on the part of the United States, but an invasion of the constitutional rights of the company," was the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and not of the Southern. If that language of the United States Supreme Court imposes any moral obligation upon us, it would seem to be to require us to pay the judgment in the case in which it was uttered. But nobody claims that that judgment should be paid otherwise than as an offset against the Government's claim. It is absurd to contend that the refusal to pay a judgment at law on the ground that it should be treated as an offset against a larger claim of the Government is, in any sense, an attack upon the sacredness of the judgment or the authority of the courts. The Central Pacific Company's judgments are as sacred as this one; yet nobody proposes to pay them. Is that an attack upon the sacredness of judgments? Not at all. It is the exercise of a well-established, equitable right. Since their rendition an equitable right has arisen in favor of the United States superior to those judgments, and they should be treated as offsets, and as such canceled, as they would be by a court of equity if the conflicting claims existed between private individuals.

There is, then, no attack upon the sacredness of judgments in the opposition to the payment of this claim. The question is merely this: Is the Southern Pacific Company in such relation to the Central Pacific Company, and are these earnings so related to the Central Pacific Company, or to the Government's rights, as to justify the treatment of this judgment at law in the same way in which all admit the judgments of the Central Pacific Company ought to be treated and are being properly treated? I have no time to go into a discussion of those relations, but if anybody should know what they are, the attorneys of all these companies ought to know; the men who are here representing the Southern Pacific Company on this very claim ought to know.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. No, sir; my time is too limited. Now, Mr. Chairman, Judge Payson, one of the attorneys of the Southern Pacific Company for the collection of this very claim, was called upon while he was before the Committee on Appropriations of the Fifty-third Congress to explain a confusion in the accounts between these companies, showing that they paid no attention to obligations as between themselves. His answer, from which I now read, will be found on page 112 of the report of that committee of hearings on April 10, 1894, submitted to the Fifty-third Congress. On that occasion Judge Payson—and he ought to know as much as any of us upon this question—said:

The Southern Pacific Company has leased the Central Pacific for ninety-nine years upon the payment of a certain amount of money guaranteed, and whether there is any provision of the lease between the Central Pacific Company and the Southern Pacific Company as to these outside expenses I do not know; but I should say, practically, it does not make any difference what the contract is, because, substantially, the shareholders of one are the shareholders of the other, and it is like paying out of one pocket into another pocket of the same man's clothes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Southern Pacific Company was notoriously organized, and has existed, from the moment of its organization to the present time, as a mere conspiracy against the Government of the United States, to defeat the purposes of the Thurman Act requiring the creation of a sinking fund to pay the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Government. Thus far it has been largely successful, and the vote of this House to-day, if it shall decline to have these questions submitted to a court of equity, where the superior obligation of the Government of the United States can be pleaded and established, will have gone very far to make the triumph of this Southern Pacific conspiracy against the rights of the Government complete.

Gentlemen ask if the Government's claim and all these equities were pleaded in the suit in which this judgment was rendered. No. The claim of the Government was not due at that time. It could not be pleaded, and of course none of these questions collateral to the claim could be pleaded. They could not be pleaded against the claims of the Central Pacific Company at that time, and so the claims of that company went to judgment because there was no offset legally due which could be pleaded against them.

The obligations to the Government, which can be pleaded against all of these claims—aye, and against all of these sacred judgments as they now stand—are maturing in favor of the United States. Will you hasten the payment of this money in order that the United States Government shall have no right to have these questions adjudicated in equity? I hope not. I trust that not this House, which has no knowledge sufficient to justify action upon any of these questions, but a court, upon full consideration of all the facts, rights, and equities, will finally determine whether this judgment, which was offered to the Government as an offset to the Central Pacific debt under the funding scheme, no matter what may be said to the contrary, shall or shall not be otherwise paid. The men who were here urging the passage of the funding bill are the same men who are here now urging the payment of this claim, and it was not without some assurance that it might be made an offset that the committee decided to provide in the bill that it should be made an offset in the event of the funding bill passing.

There is another ground for withholding this payment, which was well stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], and which has much force. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, without the consent of this Government, leased its lines to the Southern Pacific Company, in order to avoid its obligations to the Government. The Southern Pacific Company, controlling the situation, entered into an unlawful traffic arrangement, which has been testified to by Mr. Huntington and others, under which, out of the earnings of the Central Pacific Company, which should have constituted net earnings and have gone to swell the sinking fund for the payment of the Government's claims, the Southern Pacific Company turned over several millions of dollars to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company as a subsidy to prevent competition and to prevent the reduction of transportation rates. These diverted net earnings were, by the Southern Pacific Company, charged up as operating expenses of the Central Pacific Railroad, and the Government should not pay this claim until the Southern Pacific Company restores these assets to the sinking fund.

Mr. CANNON. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has been very emphatic in his declarations that this is a question entirely outside the pale of partisan politics. I want to remind the gentleman that his party, from the very first discussion of the Pacific railroads project, has been the bitter and uncompromising foe of those roads. For twenty-seven years the opposition of that party prevented legislation looking to their construction. During the last ten or fifteen years hostility to these roads has been the very lifeblood of his party in the State of California, and for the purpose of unifying the sand-lotters of that State and bringing them to the aid of his party organization the gentleman from Missouri himself loaned his assistance in the last Democratic convention in Chicago to lug this question into partisan politics and to secure a plank in the platform of his party declaring its policy with regard to the Pacific railroads.

Gentlemen on that side have attempted to use this very subject to endear themselves to the hearts of the good people while they were assuming to be their superserviceable agents and the only pure men in all the land who were striving to secure the justice that the people ought to have measured out to them. And gentlemen come here now declaiming in favor of doing justice to the people—equity to the people! That is the theme of the gentleman from Missouri as he discusses these matters. Let me contrast with those declarations of that learned lawyer a declaration of the Supreme Court discussing questions involving every legal proposition that can be urged here. What did the Supreme Court say with regard to this claim? The court said that the withholding of the compensation now in question—was not only a breach of faith on the part of the United States, but an invasion of the constitutional rights of the company.

That is what the Supreme Court says with regard to the legal propositions involved here. That is the court's idea of the duty of the American Congress. That is the court's idea of this highwayman's plea of which the gentleman from Texas is now the advocate, that "might makes right," and because we have the power to withhold the payment of this just indebtedness, therefore it is right to do it. I do not want to take my ideas of equity or justice from the teachings of these gentlemen. I do not want them to define my duties toward my constituents; nor do I want them to interpret in language such as they have used here to-day the wishes of the honorable constituency that I represent, or their ideas of justice.

The gentlemen ought to have told this House how they proposed to make their action here in refusing payment available to the United States. How are you going to carry into effect this offset and determine the questions of right? I remember hearing a gentleman, in the presence of men now here, say that in New England alone there were 8,000 holders of the stock of one of these roads now involved; that there were 8,000 holders of this stock in the United States. The whole argument of gentlemen must rest upon the fact of the absolute identity of the individual atoms composing the corporations. If there is one man who is a stockholder in one of the roads, and not in the other, then the act proposed here is a robbery of that man. No man will deny that these corporations are distinct as legal entities. There is no question about that. How are you gentlemen going to determine this question?

I do not choose to take the statements of the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] upon this question or any other involving the Pacific railroads. I remember that two years ago, or a little more, when the gentleman was making his biennial speech upon this question, he declared that we had a remedy against the individual stockholders under the laws of California. I remember that he was potential in defeating a proposition of settlement at that time because he said there were at least $12,000,000 available to the United States, under the constitution of the State of California making the stockholders individually liable for the debts of the Central Pacific road, against the estate of Senator Stanford. That matter was adjudicated. The Supreme Court has determined it. That tribunal has said that the gentleman's law or the gentleman's fact, or both his law and his fact, were at fault; that no such liability existed and no such recovery could be had.

How are you going, I again ask, to follow this money? Are you going to institute your suits against the individual stockholders and make their proportion of this debt, apportioned as it would be to their holdings of stock, available? That is the only way you can do it, unless you take that other course of simply justifying yourself because you have the power to refuse to pay a debt which the highest tribunal in the land says you owe.

Gentlemen say that there is an admission in the bill recently proposed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroads of an absolute identity between these companies. An admission! Where do you get that? How does a corporation speak in a proposed act of Congress? Who has made the admission?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, until within the last five minutes I had not thought of addressing the House on this question, and I shall only occupy a moment or two. The question is understood by the people of the United States, and no amount of hairsplitting or legal argumentation is going to deceive them in this matter. What is the question, plainly stated, divested of legal terms? This company justly owes to the United States to-day nine or ten million dollars which the United States has paid on its account, and within a year it will owe the United States fifty or sixty million dollars. On the other hand, the United States Government is justly indebted to it on a contract to the amount of a million and some hundred thousand dollars. That is the question squarely and plainly stated. The company has refused and still refuses to pay anything. The Government does not deny the validity of this debt of one million and a quarter of dollars, and the company can not deny the validity of its indebtedness of five times as many million dollars to the Government. Why should not the one debt be offset against the other?

You can not plead the other side of the question upon the basis of right, upon the basis of justice to the United States and to the people who furnished this money. You can only plead it, as every one of you have, on the basis of your little musty, legal technicalities and hairsplittings. You have not one single foot of honest ground to stand upon in arguing against the withholding of this money; and you know it. The people of the United States will hold you responsible for paying money to these great corporations while this debt to the United States remains unsettled.

Why is it that their debt is so sacred and that the debt of the Government can be set aside? Mr. Chairman, I want to give you an idea of the way these companies do business. And I want to say that there is not a man within the sound of my voice who does not believe, as I know every man in California who has studied this question and knows anything about it believes, that these two companies, the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, are one and the same, composed of the same individuals. The money which was used—all of it that was used—in building the Southern Pacific road was taken from the earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad. Every one of you know that the ninety-nine year lease of the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific was a fraud committed upon the United States Government and upon the people.

I have here something I want to read to the House, a Southern Pacific Railroad circular dated New Orleans, February 4, 1897:

[Circular No. 46.]

Southern Pacific, Atlantic System; Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railway; Texas and New Orleans Railroad; New York, Texas and Mexican Railway; Gulf, Western Texas and Pacific Railway.

[Joint circular.]

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1897.

To Agents:

An amendment to the interstate-commerce act, entitled House bill No. 10090, to prevent fraudulent sale and manipulation of tickets by other than regular authorized ticket agents, has been prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission and is now before the Congress for action, and a special day will probably be set apart this month for its consideration.

You will obtain as many signatures on the inclosed blank as possible at the very earliest moment, forwarding the original to the member of Congress from your district and a copy to this office. We want names of merchants, manufacturers, planters, professional men; in fact, business men generally.

Please give this matter immediate attention. No time is to be lost, as the scalpers and their friends are making an active fight against the measure.

Please acknowledge receipt.

Yours truly,

S. F. B. MORSE,
General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Southern Pacific, Atlantic System.
L. J. PARKS,
Ass't Gen. Pass. and Ticket Agent, G., H. and S. A. and T. and N. O. R. R.
W. J. CRAIG,
General Passenger Agent, N. Y., T. and M. and G., W. T. and P. Ry.

So we have an Interstate Commerce Commission to prepare bills to prevent the fraudulent sale and manipulation of tickets by "other" than regularly authorized ticket agents—that being the business of the regular agents, I suppose. And the companies do not want any outsider to interfere or in any manner prevent the "fraudulent sale and manipulation of tickets as now universally practiced by the 'regular agents.'"

They come right out and tell the truth in this circular. I wanted to call the attention of the House to this matter, and have therefore taken advantage of the opportunity.

Mr. CANNON. And therefore we should not pass that bill.

Mr. BOWERS. Well, that bill is not up now, and this, perhaps, is the only time I may get an opportunity to express an opinion upon that bill, and therefore I have availed myself of it.

You say the United States should pay its honest debts. It will pay them. But, Mr. Chairman, there are rights that the people have, also, in connection with this matter. It is only right that the people should have the debts due them paid, also. That is a question for us to consider, and the people understand it; we all understand it here. These corporations seek to avoid the payment of their own debts; and are we going to pay them the amount which we owe them, and still leave them in default to us? I do not think there is any use talking of the matter long, for the people of the United States understand it. The companies have admitted that it was a proper offset against their debt. How many just judgments against the Government in favor of individuals for small amounts justly due await an appropriation by this House? What makes these judgments in favor of corporations so much more sacred than those in favor of citizens?

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], as well as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], concedes this obligation or debt on the part of the Government. They recognize the validity of the judgment of the court. But they hold that in view of the obligations of the Central Pacific Company, under the aids given by the Government, therefore this judgment of the court, and therefore this obligation fairly due, should be withheld as an offset in the final settlement of the Government with the Central Pacific Company.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] made inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] as to his vote on the funding bill, and called attention to the fact that under that funding bill there was a concession of upward of $2,000,000, of which this obligation of the judgment is a part, that should be made in settlement and in connection with the operation of the funding bill, should it become law. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I do not know how the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] voted. I voted against the funding bill because I felt that the concessions therein contained were too great; that the Government was not being fully protected. But why did these requirements and concessions become a part of the funding bill? It was part of the requirement of the proposed legislation, calling on the Central Pacific road to make such concessions, and I submit the paragraph in the bill:

SEC. 19. That the said Central Pacific Railroad Company shall arrange for having the lease now existing between it and the Southern Pacific Company modified so that the Southern Pacific Company shall guarantee the payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company during the continuation of such lease of the interest on and the installments on account of principal of the bonds issued under the tenth section of this act, as prescribed in the tenth and eleventh sections hereof, and so that in case the Southern Pacific Company should consent to the termination of such lease before the maturity of all such installments payable on account of principal of said bonds, it shall, in that event, guarantee the payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of such interest and installments on account of principal while any bonds issued under the tenth section of this act shall remain outstanding, and so that said Southern Pacific Company shall consent that the sums amounting in the aggregate to $2,414,236.21, standing credited on the books of the Treasury of the United States to the Central Pacific Railroad Company as compensation for services upon nonaided lines (a portion of which is now in judgment in favor of the Southern Pacific Company), etc.

This whole issue and question, as I have read from the funding bill, are not now, to-day, under consideration by this committee, for the reason that this Congress determined against the funding bill, and the Government is now proceeding under the law in foreclosure; and in view of that action I am gratified in having voted against the so-called Powers or funding bill.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] challenged me in the debate to certify who were or were not stockholders in the Central Pacific Company identical with the Southern Pacific road. That is impossible, of course. I reached over, when the gentleman made the statement, and picked up from that desk adjoining my seat a Philadelphia paper that happened to be lying there. I look at the stock transactions in the New York Stock Exchange alone and find that the stock of all the Pacific roads has been constantly changing hands, and transactions in these stocks have occurred every day for many years, and on Saturday last 1,774 shares of Southern Pacific, 3,849 shares of Union Pacific, and 820 shares of Central Pacific were sold on the said New York Stock Exchange.

Since 1885, the organization of the Southern Pacific Company, these transactions have been going on day in and day out; and I venture to submit that since 1885 every share in every one of these roads has been sold and transferred to various parties then holders and not now holders. I could not give the gentleman, then, the list of stockholders, because of these daily changes; nor can anyone.

Mr. OWENS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have but five minutes, and decline to yield.

This appropriation becomes a paragraph in this bill because the Court of Claims has settled the principle at issue and adjudicated the amounts due for services rendered.

The court in effect submits that—

Subsequent to the execution of the leases to the Southern Pacific Company in 1885, and prior to November, 1889, transportation services were rendered by the Southern Pacific Company to the United States upon lines other than the aided line of the Central Pacific, to the amount of $1,324,336.44.

As these amounts remained unpaid, the Southern Pacific Company, on November 23, 1889, filed its petition in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of judgment therefor. The suit was contested by the United States upon the claim that these leases, or some of them, were invalid, but the Court of Claims, after full argument, decided in favor of the Southern Pacific Company, and gave judgment in favor of the Southern Pacific Company and against the United States January 30, 1896, for $1,824,336.44, the full amount claimed.

The Court of Claims held that, as the Southern Pacific Company had rendered the services and performed the transportation for the United States and at its request, it was entitled to be compensated by the United States for the services which it had so rendered to it without regard to the question whether the leases were valid or invalid.

The court says:

Conceding that in a proper proceeding between the parties thereto such leases might be held ultra vires and against public policy, such would not affect the right of the plaintiff to recover from the defendants, a third party, for services actually performed. * * *

This course seems to us not only in line with the authorities, but as founded on the rules of good faith between the parties, for otherwise the defendants, not shown to have been injuriously affected by such lease contracts, even if ultra vires, would be getting the services of the plaintiff without compensation, and that is against the policy of the law, if not in violation of the Constitution itself.

Since 1889, the date of the judgment of the Court of Claims to which I have referred, all of these nonaided roads have received, through the Post-Office appropriation bill and Army and other appropriation bills, their full compensation from appropriations for services rendered. It has never been questioned by the Department. The court settled the issue raised. It has never been questioned by this House. The identical services that this appropriation pays for have been paid for since 1889 under the general law, and will be so continued.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, before I begin my remarks, I should like to ask unanimous consent that those gentlemen who have spoken may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. We have spoken here very hastily, and the time has been very limited.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that those gentlemen who have spoken on this question have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. Will there be a limit?

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, yes; for five days.

Mr. DOCKERY. Make it ten days.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let it be until the close of the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that gentlemen who have spoken be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD within the next ten days.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the committee for the time which I have, I think I will be able to answer some of the statements made by gentlemen in opposition to the amendment to strike out this appropriation. But first of all I will reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] as to a question of fact. These gentlemen have been pleased to inform the committee that the stockholders of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company are scattered all over the United States and Europe. I understand such to be their statement. What does the attorney of the Southern Pacific Company say on this point? Judge Payson, a former member of this House, and now an attorney of the Southern Pacific Company, was before the Committee on Appropriations, and the following questions were put to him, to which he made the following answers:

The CHAIRMAN. The Southern Pacific Company was chartered by the legislature of Kentucky?

Judge PAYSON. In 1885.

The CHAIRMAN. What relations did the owners of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company bear to the Central Pacific Company; were they not the same parties?

Judge PAYSON. They were the same parties. The Central Pacific Railroad was principally constructed—this is a matter of public history of the country—by four men, Huntington, Crocker, Hopkins, and Stanford, and the stockholders of the Central Pacific system were the principal stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company; in other words, to anticipate what I think the chairman wants, the object and purpose of the organization of the Southern Pacific Company was to have under one hand and under one head and control the management of all the corporations which are now embraced within that system.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I understood you to say that these four men, who own and control the Central Pacific Railroad by a charter from the State of Kentucky, organized the Central Pacific Company?

Judge PAYSON. Yes, sir; substantially.

The CHAIRMAN. And that the Southern Pacific Company stock was owned by those same men?

Judge PAYSON. Yes, substantially; there were some minor stockholders, but they are substantially the owners.

Mr. BINGHAM. When was that?

Mr. DOCKERY. What was the date of those hearings?

Mr. SAYERS. Two years ago. Now, how do we find this question resting? I believe I can state it very briefly and very plainly. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, owned and controlled by Mr. Huntington, and by the estates of Mr. Crocker, Mr. Hopkins, and Mr. Stanford, owe the people of this country more than $60,000,000, and say that it can not pay that indebtedness. They shield themselves behind the technical defense of a corporation. And what do these same gentlemen say through the Southern Pacific Company? These very same parties, having been driven from legislature to legislature in the vain effort to organize their company, go to the State of Kentucky and procure an incorporation to do almost everything they may please, provided that it be not done within the limits of that State. These very same gentlemen lease the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific railroads in the name of the Southern Pacific Company, dealing with themselves in all these transactions. And now, through the Southern Pacific Company, they say: "We have leased the Southern Pacific, of which we are the owners, the Central Pacific Railroad, of which we are also the owners, and their nonaided lines, and you owe us, the Southern Pacific Company, for transportation over the nonaided lines of the Central Pacific Railroad, and pay it you must, though we, the owners of the Central Pacific Railroad and its nonaided lines, owe you $60,000,000 and can not pay it." The advocates of this appropriation talk of honesty and integrity. Let me say that if those men were honest, they would make haste to say to the Government, "Pass this money to the credit of the Central Pacific Railroad." Patriotic men they are, very patriotic men! They aided the Government in time of great peril. What did the Government do for them?

Vast tracts of lands, exceeding in extent almost that of any State in the American Union, were given them. Bonds of the United States by the millions were given them, secured by a first mortgage. They came to Congress, and in an evil hour for the Government and for the people, the first mortgage was released and a second mortgage taken, leaving the Government in its present deplorable condition, and besides that also extending the time of the payment of interest until the principal of the bonds should fall due.

But that is not all. Did anyone ever hear of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company? It too has played a conspicuous part in this great drama of outrage upon the people. Year after year, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the creature of this Government, built by this Government and owned by these four men, paid this steamship company, owned also by these four men, subsidies from the revenues of the Central Pacific Railroad, which should have gone under the law into the Treasury of the United States, to constitute a sinking fund with which to discharge their indebtedness when it should become due.

Mr. Chairman, I claim to have some knowledge of law, and I agree with gentlemen that, from a technical standpoint, the Supreme Court of the United States was right when it held that one corporation could not under the circumstances, as these corporations stand, be held responsible in law for the payment of the debts of another. But we are in a different forum to-day, and are not controlled by the strict rules and practice of law. As the representatives of the people, with power and authority to represent them and to act for them, we should require these corporations to do what is right, equitable, and just. It is but a small sum that we ask them to apply to their vast indebtedness—but $1,300,000, in round numbers.

Mr. Chairman, I would like for members of this House to know and to realize, if they could, the effect and result of the discussion of this question in the closing hours of the Fifty-first Congress. It was in a night session, and almost every Representative in the city was present in his seat. Hour after hour was the question debated, the affirmative represented by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois who now has charge of this bill, and myself and others upon the Democratic side of the House opposing it. When the final vote was taken, without distinction of party, every member present, with the exception of seven only, voted to strike out an appropriation similar to the one under consideration. You have the power, gentlemen; your majority is great. You will expend in this Congress more than $1,050,000,000. Shall this item be included in this vast sum of appropriations?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, for ten minutes I crave the attention of the committee. "An abundance of words darkeneth counsel;" and no time more than when the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] addressed the committee. Measuring my words, I wish to state the facts about this item. The Central Pacific Railroad was built by the aid of Government bonds—it is called bond aided—from Ogden to a point in California. Under the law all transportation for the Government is applied upon the debt and interest of the Central Pacific Railroad to fall due. Every dollar of it. Now, then, there were several thousand other miles of railroad built, not by the aid of bonds. Under the law these railroads that were not bond aided are entitled to compensation as much as the Pennsylvania or the Baltimore and Ohio railroad is entitled to compensation for transportation for the United States.

This judgment was for service upon roads that were not aided by bonds, owned and controlled by the Southern Pacific Company. It is true the Southern Pacific Company has a lease upon the Central Pacific. The earnings upon that leased line are not in the judgment and are not involved. Now, there is the whole case; there is the whole question. Ought we to pay? The United States Supreme Court, in 118 United States Reports, says, "Yes;" and says it is a denial of every principle of justice and of constitutional right to refuse to pay; and every position taken by the gentlemen upon the other side of this case was taken far stronger by the counsel for the Government in that case. Now, what has happened since 1885? From that time to this these nonbonded roads have been paid nine-tenths and over for their services to the Government; are being paid to-day, and from year to year appropriations have been made by Congress, and they are paid by the sundry civil appropriation bill, the gentleman from Texas himself time and again in charge of it.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman show any item for that?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; the Geological Survey.

Mr. SAYERS. A moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CANNON. I have not time to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SAYERS. I desired to ask a question.

Mr. CANNON. Ask it quick.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman show an item that was within the knowledge of the Committee on Appropriations in the preparation of that bill which would indicate that a dollar in that bill would go to these roads?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; for the Geological Survey, for Government supplies, for every appropriation connected with the service of the Government——

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). That the sundry civil carries that requires transportation. Yes; and the gentleman himself has known it.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON. The Army bill, the Post-Office bill; all the appropriations for ten long years, without protest in any Democratic Congress or Republican Congress, have been devoted to payment over these exact lines, that were not bond aided, and are so to-day. Now, then, in the light of that fact, how do the gentlemen stand? These nonbond-aided lines get nine-tenths of their compensation now——

Mr. BINGHAM. They get it all.

Mr. CANNON. They would get it all if there were no deficiency, and the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] and the other gentlemen from California are absolutely silent when appropriations are made for this purpose; but when the other tenth that is not appropriated for is put in a judgment and appropriation is proposed to pay it, the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] performs, talking, I suppose, to the sand lotters. He is silent while nine-tenths of this compensation is paid, and votes for the appropriations; but when the other tenth is proposed to be paid in this bill, how virtuous and how indignant he grows! Before he can help to pay the railroads that other tenth of the money that is due them, he must perform here. God Almighty give him more candor or more wisdom! I can not. [Laughter.] Here are the opinions of the courts, here is the judgment, here is the practice of the Government, all speaking trumpet tongued, saying that this judgment ought to be paid. "Oh, but," says somebody, "this is for a railroad. 'Throw it into fits,' and then give it thunder; it is a railroad." [Laughter.] Gentlemen, I do not envy any man the reputation that is made by such declamation. I do not stand here and never have stood here the friend or defender of corporate or individual exaction that is illegal or oppressive; but I thank God that in my short official life I have never sought to posture and declaim, advocating unjust legislation, in order that I might win the praise of unthinking people and thereby remain in power. [Applause.] I am ready for a vote.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that we take a vote upon the last amendment first.

Mr. CANNON. I agree to that.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 60, strike out all of lines 18 to 24, inclusive.

The question being taken, the Chairman stated that he was in doubt.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 72, noes 97.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I give notice that I will move in the House to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back without this provision, and that I will ask a yea-and-nay vote upon that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 9 and 10, on page 5, after the word "session," $16,277.91 and insert in lieu thereof "for services over bond-aided lines, and to be credited to the sinking fund and interest account of said railroad, $14,712.45."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I give notice that in the motion to recommit which I propose to make in the House I will include that item also.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, in line 24, page 61, after the word "claims," "except claims for services over nonbond-aided lines of the bond-aided Pacific railroads."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I send to the desk—an item that has come in late.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the first amendment adopted, on page 53, the words "To Alexis Benoit, $2,000," and correct the total so as to read "$14,196."

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask the gentleman if this allowance is for the last contest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes, sir. The allowance for Mr. BOATNER was inserted in the bill before. This came in late.

Mr. BAILEY. But is this for the first or for the second contest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. For the second contest, the one reported upon at this session.

Mr. BAILEY. I suppose the chairman of the committee has examined the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have examined it carefully and have found it to be correct.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the bill the eight paragraphs that were stricken out Saturday on points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. MADDOX. I object.

Mr. TALBERT. I object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the amendment which I send to the desk at the close of the appropriations for the House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment subject to objection.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say that if I can have twenty minutes I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CANNON. I will not purchase a withdrawal at any price. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Objection was made by several members. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the several employees of the House of Representatives, to wit, those borne upon the rolls of the Clerk, Doorkeeper, Sergeant-at-Arms, and Postmaster, be, and they shall be, retained in their respective positions and continued in their respective duties from the adjournment of this Congress from the 4th of March, 1897, until the 15th day of March, 1897, and be paid the same salaries and compensations now belonging to their respective positions; and a sum of money necessary to such payments is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will not do that. If he will listen to an explanation, I am sure he will not object. He need not assume that because this proposition comes from me it must necessarily be objected to. [Laughter.] I have shown it to distinguished members of the Committee on Appropriations on both sides of the House, and unless some such provision as this is made the men who are now handling the mails, the men who are handling the documents, all the men who are employed simply for the session will go out of place on the 4th day of March next, and the work will cease. Now, this amendment simply provides that until the first day of the next session—for about nine days—these officers shall be kept in their present positions and paid.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is right as to the session employees.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The amendment covers only the session employees.

Mr. COX. How long a time does this amendment cover?

Several MEMBERS. Ten days.

A MEMBER. From the 4th till the 15th of March.

Mr. COX. Then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to perfect my amendment by inserting before the word "employees" the word "session."

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that this is a very desirable arrangement, though I have some question as to the power of the Fifty-fourth Congress to appoint any officers of the Fifty-fifth Congress. A provision of this kind, however, is usual, I understand, and I shall make no objection to it, provided it covers all the employees of the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand from the gentleman from Ohio, this amendment will provide for all the employees who have been authorized by special resolutions or otherwise during this Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir; all session employees. The other officers being paid by the year, it is unnecessary to make any provision for them.

Mr. OWENS. Does this amendment carry these employees over until the extra session?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Up to the first day of the extra session—no further.

Mr. OWENS. Then the gentleman is authorized to state there will be an extra session beginning on the 15th of March?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am authorized to assume that there will be. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I wish to say that I shall not object if I can be allowed twenty minutes to debate this question. I wish to be heard.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not destroy the machinery of the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I have no wish to destroy the machinery of the House. This proposition is not so pressing that debate upon it can not be allowed for twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this amendment?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Not if I can have twenty minutes for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the proposed amendment?

Mr. TALBERT. I object.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before that question is taken, I wish to renew the application for unanimous consent to reinstate those items which went out of the bill on Saturday upon points of order, including the item to reimburse members of the Fifty-third Congress for portions of their salary retained at that time.

Mr. TALBERT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] a question. Does his amendment continue only the special employees?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It covers only the session employees.

Mr. TALBERT. Can not the work during the recess be done by the regular employees without the aid of these special assistants?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The annual employees will hold over without any action of this kind.

Mr. TALBERT. Can they not do the work during the recess without the aid of these other employees?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. GROSVENOR. This amendment has been very carefully drawn——

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I object, unless there can be one hour's debate upon it, half an hour on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments and the recommendation that it pass as amended.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before that is done I would like to renew my request for unanimous consent.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. CANNON, it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments and with the recommendation that the bill be passed as amended.

Mr. CANNON. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole. Is there a separate vote desired on any amendment?

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] striking out the paragraph beginning on line 25, page 54.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked for on any other amendment? In the absence of any such demand, the Chair will put the question upon agreeing to the remaining amendments in gross.

The amendments, other than that on which a separate vote was reserved, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendment on which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has asked for a separate vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following paragraph, beginning at line 25 of page 54:

"To enable the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to pay to members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress the amounts withheld in their salaries on account of absence, $12,202.43."

Mr. SAYERS. Upon this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 48, noes 86; more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is a doubt in the minds of some members whether a vote in the affirmative is a vote to strike out the provision or to leave it in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment to the House.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 96, answered "Present" 25, not voting 112; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. STOKES, on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I was paired to-day with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, but not being eligible to vote on this question, as I conceive it, being personally interested in it, I have withdrawn that pair.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from the Seventh district of Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] voted on this roll call in favor of striking out this provision of the bill. He is interested in the question, being one of the beneficiaries under it, if it is not stricken out. I make the point of order that his vote can not be counted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not regard that as a point of order.

Mr. MADDOX. I supposed I had a right to vote, inasmuch as I was voting against my own interests; but if the Chair rules to the contrary, I will withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must determine the question as he sees fit.

Mr. OWENS. I supposed that a gentleman who would receive a part of the appropriation was interested in it, and therefore would come under the rule.

Mr. MADDOX. Inasmuch as the point is made against my vote, I will withdraw it, and answer "Present."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is some question about the right of members to vote who are interested in this question, I desire to withdraw my vote, and to answer "Present."

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. RUSK.

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. CUMMINGS.

Mr. TAFT with Mr. TATE.

Mr. PICKLER with Mr. MINER of New York.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. KULP with Mr. SHAW.

Mr. PITNEY with Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HUTCHESON.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts with Mr. JONES.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. COWEN.

For this day:

Mr. HURLEY with Mr. MCLAURIN.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. BUCK.

Mr. DOLLIVER with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. BELL of Texas.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska with Mr. PENDLETON.

Mr. WILBER with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. REYBURN with Mr. STOKES.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. YOAKUM.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. MONEY.

Mr. WELLINGTON with Mr. WOODARD.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill H. R. 10329 be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the same back forthwith amended as follows:

By striking out, in lines 9 and 10, on page 5, the following:

"Sixteen thousand two hundred and seventy-seven dollars and ninety-one cents," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"For services over bond-aided lines, and to be credited to the sinking fund and interest accounts of said railroads, $14,712.45."

On page 60, by striking out all of lines 18 to 24, inclusive.

And on page 61, by inserting, at the end of line 24, the following:

"Except claims for services over nonbond-aided lines of the bond-aided Pacific railroads."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 137, not voting 116; as follows:

So the motion to recommit with instructions was not agreed to.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. BARTLETT, on account of sickness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY. I do not know how he would vote if present. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. STROWD of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. LINNEY, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. MCMILLIN, until further notice.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, for the rest of this day.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska with Mr. WASHINGTON, for the rest of this day.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. ELLETT, for this day.

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded on the question. I was in my seat and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. FOOTE. I was in my seat here waiting to vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening?

Mr. FOOTE. I can not say that I was listening. I was waiting to vote.

The SPEAKER. The theory on which a vote is allowed is that by some accident the name might not have been called.

Mr. FOOTE. There might have been such an accident, Mr. Speaker. I did not hear my name called. I was listening to my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN].

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT BY UNITED STATES OFFICERS.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6834) "To prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the first section of the bill, and from its disagreement to the amendment striking out the third section of the bill, and concurs therein; and also recedes from its disagreement to the amendment to the second section of the bill, and concurs therein, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand" instead thereof, so that said section will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any person who shall violate this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding $1,000."

FREDK. H. GILLETT,
C. G. BURTON,
JOHN K. HENDRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. F. HOAR,
WILLIAM LINDSAY,
WM. F. VILAS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement by the House conferees was read, as follows:

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY THE REPORT OF THE CONFEREES ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE ON HOUSE BILL NO. 6634.

The amendments to the first section are merely verbal, condensing but not changing the meaning of the section, except that the substitution of the words "officer of court" for the word "person" slightly limits the application of the act. The amendments to section 2 substitute a fine not exceeding $1,000 for a fine not less than $50 nor more than $5,000 and removal from office. Section 3, repealing conflicting laws, is omitted.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE—MRS. MARY A. VIEL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House bill No. 6902, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Viel."

This beneficiary was married in 1862 to Maj. W. D. Sanger, then in the volunteer military service. He died in 1872, never having made any application for pension. His widow made no application for pension, but within three years after her husband's death, and in 1875, became the wife of Paul Viel. Eight years thereafter he died, leaving her his widow, and it is now proposed to pension her as the widow of the soldier, Major Sanger, though she long ago, by her own deliberate act, surrendered that title and all its incidents.

There is a further objection to granting this pension. I do not find that any claim is made that the death of the soldier who was the beneficiary's first husband was at all attributable to his army service. Neither he nor his widow, while she remained such, presented any such claim, nor is it found in reports of the committees in the Senate or House to whom the bill under consideration was referred. On the contrary, the Senate Committee on Pensions in their report distinctly state that "there is no proof that soldier contracted disease while in the service or that he died of pensionable disabilities."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 22, 1897.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE—MRS. MARY A. FREEMAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House bill No. 2189, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Freeman."

A former husband of the beneficiary, named Andrew V. Pritchard, did service in the Mexican war, and on July 22, 1847, died of disease contracted in such service. Thereupon the beneficiary named in this bill was pensioned as his widow. She continued to receive this pension until 1853, when she married John Freeman, through which she, of course, lost her pensionable status. Two minor children of the soldier were, however, placed on the pension roll in her stead, and their pension was paid to them until the youngest became 16 years of age, in 1863.

John Freeman died in December, 1871, the beneficiary having been his wife for almost twenty years. It is now proposed to restore her to the pension roll as the widow of her former husband, the Mexican soldier, who died nearly fifty years ago, and notwithstanding the fact that less than five years after his death she relinquished her right to a pension and surrendered her widowhood to become the wife of another husband, with whom she lived for many years.

I am not willing, even by inaction, to be charged with acquiescence in what appears to be such an entire departure from the principle, as well as sentiment, connected with reasonable pension legislation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 22, 1897.

Mr. BLUE. I move to refer the bill and message to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10336.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to arrive at some understanding about general debate. I do not know that there is any disposition on either side of the House to engage in anything like extended debate on this bill, and if the suggestion commends itself to the judgment of the Committee of the Whole, I would like to proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs. We have reached a late stage of the session, when time is valuable—the time of the country, the time of the House, and the time of members individually—and I ask unanimous consent that after a very brief statement of the amounts carried by the bill we may proceed to consider it by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the pending bill be closed in ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall be obliged to ask the Committee of the Whole to listen to me with whatever patience it can muster for ten or fifteen minutes upon a matter which I propose to submit as an amendment to this bill, but if the gentleman from Maine will agree that when that paragraph is reached I shall not be strictly held to the five-minute rule, I will make no objection to his request.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BARRETT. I think about twelve or fifteen minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I will cheerfully agree that when the provision to which the gentleman desires to address himself is reached he shall have fifteen minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that if the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to discuss politics we may want some time on this side to reply.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think I can assure the gentleman from Tennessee that there is nothing political in the proposition which the gentleman from Massachusetts has in mind. I think it is something more substantial.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to agree to the request of the gentleman from Maine, provided that when we reach a certain portion of the bill I may be allowed some extra time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HALL. About ten or fifteen minutes, I think.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will include in my request fifteen or twenty minutes for the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine, that general debate on this bill be closed in ten minutes with the modifications stated by him?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, this is the last appropriation bill, and perhaps this is the last opportunity I shall have to address the House briefly on a subject to which attention was called yesterday by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and in which I take a personal interest. I would therefore like to have a little time upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. DALZELL. No, sir; but I want to see if I can not come to an understanding by which I can get some time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can accede to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because I have just been notified by the gentleman from Tennessee that if any question of a political nature should be introduced gentlemen on that side would probably want time to reply. I understand that the question to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to address himself would probably involve some political considerations, and inasmuch as I have been notified and should have expected in any case that the gentleman from Tennessee would desire to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I do not feel that I ought to accede to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, especially as there will be conference reports coming in here from time to time upon which he will have ample opportunity to submit the remarks which he desires to make.

Mr. DALZELL. If I felt sure of that, I would not insist at this time; but I can assure the gentleman from Maine that what I have to say to the House ought not to lead to any political debate. I do not propose to make a political speech. I propose to confine myself strictly to the question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In my judgment it would inevitably lead to a political debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine that general debate on this bill be closed in ten minutes?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I object, because I wish to make some observations on one part of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think that if the gentleman understands the proposition he will not object to it. My request is that all general debate shall be closed in ten minutes. I ask for that time simply that I may occupy perhaps five minutes in submitting to the committee the figures indicating the general scope of this bill, and I ask that at the expiration of the ten minutes we shall go on to consider the bill by paragraphs, reserving for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], when we reach the point where he desires to make some remarks, fifteen minutes, and for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] twenty minutes on another part of the bill, he being the only other gentleman who has indicated a desire to be heard beyond the time allowed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HARRISON. If I can be included in that arrangement, I shall not object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman indicate what time he desires?

Mr. HARRISON. Not over twenty minutes, and perhaps I shall not occupy any time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the gentleman should have time if he desires it, and I will include in my request an agreement that the gentleman from Alabama be allowed twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The request, then, is that general debate be closed in ten minutes; that when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] desires to speak he shall be heard for fifteen minutes; that when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] desires to address the committee he shall have twenty minutes, and that when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRISON] desires to be heard he shall have twenty minutes. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to inquire whether under this arrangement time is given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; I have declined to accede to that request, because I was informed that the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would probably lead to a more or less extended debate of a political character.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily the subject of a general naval appropriation bill would, from its importance and interest, seem to require more extended remarks than I propose to offer at this time. The committee feel that the late hour of the session and the circumstances surrounding the case require that we should pass this bill with all the expedition which may be consonant with an intelligent understanding of its provisions.

This appropriation bill is based upon estimates of the Department amounting to $34,215,986.24. The appropriations reported by the committee in this bill have reduced the estimates of the Department to the extent of $2,050,702.05, while they increase the bill over the corresponding appropriations of last year to the extent of $1,602,573.24. The total amount appropriated by the bill for the regular maintenance of the naval establishment proper, including public works, the Naval Academy, and the Marine Corps, is $18,856,451.19, showing a net decrease for the fiscal year of $227,155.76. The increase in the amount of this bill, as will be seen by the accompanying report, is to be found entirely in the appropriations, under the head of "Increase of the Navy," for carrying on the work of building the ships now under construction.

I think the committee have a right to felicitate the House upon the fact that, notwithstanding a large increase in the number of men required by the increased number of ships, and notwithstanding the large increase in the number of vessels and the cost of maintaining or caring for them, we have been able to bring the entire appropriations for all purposes, except carrying on the work upon new vessels now under construction, below the appropriations of last year by $1,600,000.

The appropriations for carrying on the Navy are increased in a few cases—$174,512 for pay of the Navy on account of the additional force provided for last year; $141,870 for additional requirements for equipment of new vessels; $14,624 for additional requirements of maintenance of yards and docks; $2,900 in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, because of the transfer to it of certain employees, which gives a fictitious appearance of increase; $2,573 in the Marine Corps, for the repair of several marine barracks. On the other hand, the amount appropriated for the Bureau of Navigation is reduced by $2,500; that for the Bureau of Ordnance by $260,500; for public works by $73,535.21; for construction and repair, $133,000; for steam engineering, $6,150, and for the Naval Academy, $32,600. The result is, as already stated, a net increase of $1,602,573 in the aggregate appropriations this year as compared with those of last year.

Mr. MCMILLIN. There have been a number of investigations going on tending to show that we have been making very large expenditures for armor plate. Is there anything in the bill looking to a curtailment of that expense?

Mr. BOUTELLE. We have made a very specific and very important recommendation on that point. While this subject may be adverted to more particularly when we reach that part of the bill, I will simply say now in the briefest possible manner that, in view of the controversy which arose in regard to the prices paid for armor, Congress at the last session included in the naval appropriation bill a clause providing that no contract should be made for the purchase of armor for battle ships authorized last year until the Secretary of the Navy should cause an inquiry to be made as to what would be a fair price for armor plate and should make a report to the next—that is the present—session of Congress. The Secretary has made that report. It is quite voluminous, embracing the results of very elaborate and extensive investigations. It was sent to the House of Representatives and the Senate by the Secretary at the beginning of the present session. In brief, the conclusion of the Secretary, from all the facts and data that he could obtain, treating the subject in the manner that seemed to him to be adapted to a solution of the problem, was that $400 a ton would be fair and equitable as an average price to pay for this armor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How does that differ from the average price paid heretofore?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The prices heretofore paid have varied considerably. The circumstances connected with the establishment of the armor-plate manufacture in this country form a very interesting and important chapter in the development of our domestic industries, with which only a few, perhaps, of the members of this Committee of the Whole have been personally familiar.

Mr. HARRISON. Does this bill provide for the construction of any new battle ship?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It does not.

Mr. HARRISON. What, then, is the meaning of this language in line 20, on page 47, "and of the vessel authorized by this act?"

Mr. BOUTELLE. That language appears in the bill by reason of a mere inadvertence of the printer in failing to strike out a portion of the language of the last bill. That error is to be corrected by amendment. If the gentleman will do me the kindness to glance over the very brief report accompanying the bill, he will see that we have not included in the measure any provision for a new battle ship. Now, in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] I will say that, in pursuance of my promise to occupy but a few minutes, I can not at this time, of course, go into details. But I will say simply that in 1887 Secretary Whitney entered into a contract with the Bethlehem Iron Works of Pennsylvania for the furnishing, I think, of some 7,000 tons of armor plate, on condition that they should erect in the United States, and have ready for occupation within a certain time, an equipment that would enable them to turn out this armor material as fast as the Government should require it. The contract was made, to the surprise of a great many people——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think perhaps this suggestion would meet the gentleman's views more fully and satisfactorily—that we go on with the bill until we reach this question of armor, to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] and others propose to direct themselves, and that we then bring out, consecutively and clearly, the facts in the case.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And I will simply say, in conclusion, that the prices of this armor plate have ranged, in its different qualities, taking the most expensive forms, the price having varied, of course, very much in accordance with the difficulty of the forms in which these large forgings have been made, from something over $600 per ton in the first contract, under Secretary Whitney, to about $560 under the last contract.

Mr. HALL. I will correct the gentleman. The highest contract price ever paid was $790.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very well; whatever it was, it was a very high price. That was the first contract, was it?

Mr. HALL. I do not recall that. I do not know that the statement from the Navy Department shows that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It has ranged down to $560, the price paid under the last contracts. The Secretary has recommended that $400 would be a fair price, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, while not deeming it wise public policy to fix a specific price per ton, or per yard, or per pound, upon any commodity, have substantially adopted the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, by providing that the total cost of the armor for these three ships shall not exceed $3,210,000, a sum which represents the amount of armor, under the plans and estimates of the Navy Department, computed at the rate of $400 average cost per ton.

Provision is made in this part of the bill that no part of this armor shall be purchased until provision is made for the purchase of the entire amount of it, and other safeguards have been included, so as to insure that the whole of this armor shall be secured at a total cost not to exceed the total cost of the carrying out of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

I desire to say, as a matter of justice, at this point, that the manufacturers of this armor plate have not acquiesced in the estimates or in the justice of the Secretary's conclusion. They do not concede the propriety of his methods of computation. But the Secretary has claimed that he has sought information from the best sources available, that he has given his best judgment, and the committee, without attempting dogmatically to fix a price upon a commodity the manufacture of which involves a vast amount of detail, have thought that they would most wisely perform their duty by accepting the report of the Secretary of the Navy, under special instructions of Congress at the last session, as coming to us in the nature of a departmental estimate of the amount which, in the belief of the Department, should be properly expended to secure a certain result.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask my friend another question, if it will not too much defer the consideration of the bill. He says that the manufacturers did not acquiesce in this estimate of the Secretary. While dissenting from this estimate, did they furnish, either to the committee or to the Secretary of the Navy, a statement of the actual cost of armor plate as a proof that their contention was right and his was wrong?

Mr. BOUTELLE. As is stated in this brief report, the manufacturers declined to submit their books to the inspection of the Department, basing their refusal on the ground that they ought not to be expected to expose their business accounts to their rivals in trade. The Secretary deals with that in his report, and justifies himself upon many points in reaching his conclusions upon the ground that he has obtained the best information possible, and that the failure of the companies to furnish him the actual figures has rendered it necessary for him to obtain his information elsewhere.

Mr. HALL. I wish to state to the gentleman from Maine, chairman of the committee, that I was mistaken about the maximum. It is $725.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We will bring all that out later. Perhaps I had better say in this introductory that this bill is peculiar in this respect—that it contains no recommendation of authorization of additional ships at this session. I can not with too much emphasis state to this committee that that omission represents in no possible sense the slightest purpose on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs to relax pushing forward in the development of our naval force to that point where we shall feel we have such a navy as the nation requires. We have refrained from recommending an additional ship at this session solely out of consideration for the present condition of the national finances, primarily, and out of consideration of what we have felt was likely to be the temper of the House at this time. And in view of the fact that we already have the situation complicated by inability thus far to obtain armor for three battle ships now on the stocks, the committee considered that in view of the fact that at the last session we made the largest authorization but one in the history of the new Navy; that we have now on the stocks five first-class battle ships under construction and a number of other vessels, including torpedo boats, perhaps it would best comport with the exigencies of the present situation not to authorize another battle ship until this armor question has been solved to the satisfaction of the Government. And as another session of Congress is coming along soon, it was deemed wise at the last, after very careful consideration, not to recommend the authorization of another ship in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I desire to say anything more at this time, and I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The reading of the bill was proceeded with.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Newport, R. I.: For maintenance of office of commandant; fuel, stationery, books, furniture, freight, and other contingent expenses, $1,000.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have listened, Mr. Chairman, to the debates that have been made upon the appropriation bills thus far before the House. An effort seemed to be made to arraign one side or the other in regard to unnecessary extravagance. I have therefore prepared a little classification of appropriations, which will take about two pages in the RECORD. I do not desire to detain the committee to read them, and ask permission to print them in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to print a statement in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is it?

Mr. WHEELER. It is about the appropriations, a classification of them; and it will take about two pages.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does it relate in any way to this bill?

Mr. WHEELER. It does relate to the appropriations in this bill. It is a comparison of appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Puget Sound, Washington: One clerk, at $1,200; 1 rodman inspector, at $3.50 per diem; 1 messenger and janitor, at $1.75 per diem, including Sundays; in all, $2,037.90.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order upon this paragraph and the one following. I ask that they be passed over informally and that the point of order be reserved. They are lines 23, 24, and 25 on page 15, and lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BARRETT. I do not desire to press the point of order at this time. I simply ask that the paragraphs be passed over informally.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has the Chair overruled the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to reserve the point of order. Does he withdraw the point of order?

Mr. BARRETT. I ask that the point of order be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that these paragraphs be passed over informally, and that the point of order be pending.

Mr. BARRETT. This paragraph and the following.

Mr. BINGHAM. What paragraph?

Mr. BARRETT. The paragraph read by the Clerk.

Mr. BINGHAM. What was that?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The paragraphs relating to naval stations at Puget Sound and at Port Royal.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over these two paragraphs informally, with the point of order pending? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALL. The hour of 5 o'clock has arrived, and I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman will allow the Clerk to proceed a little longer, because time is so much more precious in the middle of the day than now. However, I do not want to press that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his motion?

Mr. HALL. I do. I have not withdrawn it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I shall not antagonize the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On February 9, 1897:

An act (H. R. 3500) to authorize the adjustment and settlement of accounts of John T. Williams;

An act (H. R. 2859) granting a pension to Harriet F. Herrick;

An act (H. R. 6215) to increase the pension of Ambrose D. Manion;

An act (H. R. 6549) granting a pension to Gideon L. McGinnis;

An act (H. R. 4994) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Martin;

An act (H. R. 1018) to increase the pension of Bennett S. Shaug;

An act (H. R. 4744) to increase the pension of Adam Dennis;

An act (H. R. 5670) to increase the pension of Richard S. Phillips;

An act (H. R. 3380) granting an increase of pension to John R. Row, of Toronto, Kans.;

An act (H. R. 4267) granting an increase of pension to Gabriel Widmer;

An act (H. R. 4481) granting an increase of pension to Patsey E. Broaddus, of Marion, Kans.;

An act (H. R. 6552) granting an increase of pension to Alexander C. Morrison;

An act (H. R. 94) increasing the pension of Melancthon McCoy, of Company K, One hundred and forty-eighth Illinois Infantry;

An act (H. R. 4490) to restore the name of Ethan A. Sellman to the pension roll;

An act (H. R. 9592) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Jesse McMillan," received by the President May 27, 1896;

An act (H. R. 1886) granting an honorable discharge to Wilson Kale; and

An act (H. R. 3772) to correct the muster roll of Company I of the Seventh Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The following bills were presented to the President on January 27, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, they have become laws without his approval:

An act (H. R. 1500) granting a pension to George W. Bagley;

An act (H. R. 1505) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah A. Aspold;

An act (H. R. 3338) granting a pension to Thomas S. Daugherty;

An act (H. R. 3945) granting a pension to Thomas J. Thorp;

An act (H. R. 4264) granting a pension to Mary Pelham;

An act (H. R. 4494) granting a pension to Barton S. Dawson;

An act (H. R. 4620) granting a pension to Samuel McKinsey;

An act (H. R. 4875) granting a pension to John W. Pogue; and An act (H. R. 5580) granting a pension to Archibald Hunley.

The following-named bills were approved by the President February 10, 1897:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1501) for the relief of Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the Department of the Interior, 3,000 additional copies of the report of the Assistant Secretary for 1896, relative to the administration of the pension laws.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1021) granting relief to the heirs of Albert Augustine for property taken for the Cayuse war;
A bill (H. R. 1475) for the relief of Basil Moreland; and
A bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC ENCAMPMENT AT BUFFALO.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I will say to the gentleman that, with an understanding that a motion to adjourn will not be made immediately after the consideration of this bill, or until we can have a recognition on this side, I will not object to his request.

Mr. MILNES. Let us hear what the joint resolution is about.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution, and then the gentleman from Texas can object or not, as he deems proper.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to deliver to the order of Augustus F. Schen, president of the citizens' committee of the Thirty-first National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., one condemned cannon, with carriage, used in the late civil war, to be used by the said citizens' committee for the purpose of furnishing memorial badges commemorative of the holding of such encampment at Buffalo, N. Y.: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States through the delivery of said condemned cannon and carriage.

Mr. BLUE (to Mr. POOLE). Can not you get that under the general law?

Mr. POOLE. We can not.

Mr. BLUE. I think you can.

Mr. POOLE. We can not. I will explain to the gentleman in a moment why we can not get it under the general law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, as follows:

Before the word "condemned," in line 7, insert the word "dismounted."

After the word "cannon," in line 7, strike out "with carriage."

In lines 12 and 13, at the end of the bill, strike out the words "and carriage."

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POOLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

JOSEPH M. DONOHUE.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the desk (H. R. 6038), to increase the pension of Joseph M. Donohue.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Joseph M. Donohue, of Shelby County, Ky., late a private in Company A, Fifteenth Kentucky Regiment, on the pension roll as a pensioner at the rate of $12 per month, instead of $6 per month, which he now receives.

Mr. MILNES. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Yes, sir; there is a report. I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6038) to increase the pension of Joseph M. Donohue, having considered the same, respectfully report:

Joseph M. Donohue enlisted September 23, 1861, as a private in Company A, Fifteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged January 14, 1865.

Claimant applied for and was pensioned at $6 per month from April 11, 1887, for rheumatism contracted in service. The board which examined him February 15, 1888, rated him six-eighteenths for rheumatism and describe some disease of heart. The board say the right elbow is somewhat rigid, right shoulder painful on forced elevation of hand to head, and slight atrophy of right arm and forearm. The board at Frankfort, Ky., November 18, 1891, rated him six-eighteenths for rheumatism and four-eighteenths for shell wound of left leg.

He applied for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, on November 14, 1890, alleging shell wound of left leg, resulting in rheumatism; but his claim was rejected November 26, 1892, on the ground of no benefit.

Medical testimony filed with the committee shows that claimant has been totally incapacitated for manual labor two-thirds of his time for the last twenty-two years, and the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I will ask the gentleman presenting this bill whether it has been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The bill has been considered by the committee, who have reported it unanimously. I would say to my friend from Illinois that this gentleman is old, and, as the report states, has been suffering for twenty-two years as a result of disabilities incurred in the service. The report of the committee shows that for two-thirds of that time, or at least for a great many years, he has been unable to do manual labor. The case is a meritorious one, and I trust that no objection will be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CREVASSE AT PASS A LOUTRE.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill S. 3614, an act to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre in the Mississippi River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "Attorney-General," in the twenty-first line of section 2, insert the following: "after a full hearing to both parties;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the House, amending the title, and agree to the same; and the House agree to the same.

W. B. HOOKER,
WALTER REEVES,
Managers on the part of the House.
D. CAFFERY,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was adopted.

THOMAS W. SCOTT.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal eastern district of Virginia, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500, amount due him by reason of the custody of G. M. Bain, jr., of Norfolk, Va.

Mr. BLUE. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. OTEY. There is.

The report (by Mr. COX) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred House bill 9184, report the same with an amendment, striking out, in line 6 of the bill, the words "five hundred" and inserting the words "three hundred and fifty," and recommend that the bill so amended do pass.

The facts appear to be that Judge R. W. Hughes made an order for the payment of $500 for services of guards and board of prisoner, G. M. Bain, jr., the late marshal, Thomas W. Scott, having been directed by the Supreme Court to hold custody of the prisoner during habeas corpus proceedings; that he made application for the payment, and delay was occasioned in getting together the vouchers and accounts, and finally succeeding in getting the books from the court and the accounts, he was engaged in complying with the directions when a fire occurred, destroying his warehouse, tobacco, and all books and records in his office, where these books and accounts were.

Your committee believe he ought to be paid, and think the $280 for guards and the board of the prisoner should be paid, which they place at $350.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COX. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia who reported that bill?

Mr. OTEY. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] himself did.

Mr. COX. I thought so. That is why I made the inquiry. I remember the case.

Mr. BLUE. Has the bill been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. OTEY. No, sir; it has not been considered by the Committee of the Whole, but it has been favorably reported, and it is on the Calendar.

Mr. BLUE. Have the vouchers which the report mentions been approved by the Federal judge?

Mr. OTEY. Yes, sir. The Federal judge made an order for $500, but the amount has been reduced by the committee to $350. The judge's order is in the papers in the case.

Mr. COX. In that case, Mr. Speaker, the judge of the court had certified to a larger amount than is carried by this bill.

An amendment recommended by the committee striking out "five hundred" before the word "dollars" and inserting "three hundred and fifty" was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OTEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

W. E. JUDKINS.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4114) for the relief of W. E. Judkins, executor of Lewis McKenzie.

The bill was read.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to the consideration of that bill. I move that the House adjourn.

LANDS OF RED LAKE RESERVATION, MINN.

Mr. TOWNE. I have a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not privileged against a motion to adjourn.

Mr. TOWNE. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will withdraw that motion for a few moments.

Mr. PAYNE. I do so in order that the resolution may be read.

The following resolution (No. 531), favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, requested to transmit to this House, at his earliest convenience, the report, with all accompanying papers and testimony, recently made to him by Indian Inspector J. George Wright, of the investigation of the corps of examiners of the pine and agricultural lands of the Red Lake Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. TOWNE. This resolution has been favorably reported. The report for which this resolution calls contains matter of very great interest to the people of my State and to the Executive Department having cognizance of the subject. I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution; which was adopted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CROWTHER. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House certain papers heretofore filed by me in support of the application of David Housel for removal of the charge of desertion.

The SPEAKER. There has been no adverse report?

Mr. CROWTHER. No report whatever.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the request will be considered as granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I now renew my motion that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Pending the announcement of the result on the motion to adjourn,

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Fifty-first Congress, without leaving copies, papers in the case of John A. Nugusteypy, no adverse report having been made.

He also, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Fifty-first Congress, without leaving copies, papers in the case of John H. Davidson, no adverse report having been made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DRAPER, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LINNEY, for this day, on account of sickness.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. CHARLES W. STONE, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3547) entitled "An act to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called," reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3011); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 23, 1897.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. QUAY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1895, the report and accompanying letter of Mr. Philip C. Garrett, of Philadelphia, Pa., a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, on the result of the negotiations with the Ogden Land Company for the purchase of the interest of that company in the Cattaraugus and Allegany Indian reservations in the State of New York, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State of the 19th instant, as referred by the Commissioner of Navigation, relating to the claim of the master of the Swedish bark Adele against the United States, and recommending that an appropriation of $295.64 be inserted in the general deficiency appropriation bill for payment of that claim; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I believe, according to the rule of the Senate adopted upon the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] yesterday, petitions and memorials may be filed with the clerks at the desk without a formal presentation upon the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the order.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3690) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. VILAS. I should be glad to have that bill laid aside for the present. I have received, by telegraph, information that the legislature of Wisconsin has passed a memorial to Congress remonstrating against the passage of the bill. I have not yet received the document itself. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not seek to have the bill pressed until I receive it. I am sorry that I should be obliged to object to the consideration of the bill, but I am under the instruction of the legislature.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Wisconsin is, I think, perfectly satisfied that the bill ought to pass. He must also know that if it does not pass immediately the extreme probability is that it will not pass at all at the present session. The condition of affairs concerning the bridge, communicated to me to-day by the president of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, is this:

[Telegram.]

The Duluth bridge is being built by us for local company, and all material is at bridge. Site and bridge is about one-third erected. Act of Congress authorizing construction of bridge requires completion by April 28, which is impossible owing to severity of weather this winter at Duluth; an extension of time, say to July 1, would answer every purpose.

I certainly think that the Senate ought not to sustain the Senator from Wisconsin in asking for a further postponement of the bill. I think the Senator from Wisconsin fully appreciates and properly estimates the equity of the claim of the men who are constructing the bridge, who are not interested in the controversy between the State of Wisconsin and the State of Minnesota.

Mr. VILAS. I have been here, I suppose, every moment ready to object to the taking up of the bill until I could receive the memorial of the legislature that I mentioned to the Senator from Pennsylvania when I got the telegram. There is considerable controversy. I do not know, when the papers shall have been received here, what effect they will produce upon me or what duty will be laid upon me by them with reference to it, but I certainly can not consent to the bill being considered until I have received the memorial of the legislature on the subject.

Mr. QUAY. As I understand the Senator, he has already received a telegram stating the substance of the memorial?

Mr. VILAS. Yes; a telegram. The telegram informs me that both houses of the legislature, after having heard the parties interested on both sides, passed the memorial.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the memorial of the legislature of Wisconsin refers to this bill, which is a naked extension of time for the benefit of those employed in the construction of the bridge, or to the original bill, which involves a dispute as to certain conditions imposed upon the bridge company when it accepted its charter?

Mr. VILAS. The memorial relates to this bill, and the telegram was in answer to a letter which I sent advising the parties interested of the fact that this bill had been introduced. I conceive that it can make no difference in reality to the company in which the Senator is interested, which is constructing the bridge, whether the bill passes or not.

Mr. QUAY. If it makes no difference, then the Senator from Wisconsin ought not to object to its passage.

Mr. VILAS. Perhaps there may be some force in that suggestion, but I certainly am obliged to object to it under the instruction of the legislature of the State. I am quite sure the Senate would not insist upon passing it when the legislature of the State has memorialized Congress against it, at least not without hearing what the objection is. I know in general what the basis of that objection is. I have the documents and papers in my desk which well support the objection, at least to the first bill that was introduced.

Mr. QUAY. There is no trouble about the first bill. I have no desire to do anything in this bill except to extend the time.

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator will permit the bill to lie over for the present, for I shall be obliged to contest it.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to the bill going over until to-morrow, but the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senate must understand that, being a Senate bill, it must pass very promptly to be of any use to the constructors of the bridge. If that course is satisfactory, we will allow the bill to go over until to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. VILAS. I shall be glad to have it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Pennsylvania will be complied with, if no objection is interposed.

Mr. VILAS. Let us have no misunderstanding. Of course the Senator from Pennsylvania can not expect me to consent to take it up until I have received the papers, but I do not ask any more of him now than that the bill shall go over until to-morrow, reserving any rights that I may have in regard to it.

Mr. QUAY. If there is an intention out in Wisconsin to deal fairly with this bill, and I have no doubt there is, the memorial should be here by to-morrow.

Mr. VILAS. I think so. I hope it will be here.

Mr. QUAY. I will move to take the bill up to-morrow, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will be passed over until to-morrow.

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate on Thursday morning to submit some remarks upon the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations in relation to the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1515) for the relief of Hugh McLaughlin; and

A bill (H. R. 4424) to correct the military record of George I. Spangler.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre, in the Mississippi River.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in the claims against the Federal Government by United States officers.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6038) to increase the pension of Joseph M. Donohue;

A bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal;

A bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 229) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held at Buffalo.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the legislature of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the salaries of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1897.

Concerning an act of Congress relating to letter carriers.

Whereas on the 11th day of June, 1896, the Senate of the United States passed a bill known as S. 3068, to regulate the salaries of letter carriers, and which provides that in cities of 75,000 or more inhabitants they shall receive for the first year of service $900, and for the second year $900, for the third year $1,000, and for the fourth year and thereafter $1,200, and that in cities of less than 75,000 inhabitants they shall receive $800 for the first year, $800 for the second year, and $1,000 for the third year of service and thereafter; and

Whereas a similar bill (H. R. 230) has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and in addition has received the approval of many State legislatures, city governments, boards of trade, and, without exception, the public press: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the senate and house of representatives of the State of Connecticut, recognizing the arduous and responsible duties of this branch of the public service, and the fact that for the past nineteen years it has been more than self-supporting, and that the increase in the gross receipts during the last fiscal year will more than cover the additional cost of this measure, do hereby request the members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress from the State of Connecticut to use every proper means to secure the enactment of this measure into law.

Resolved, That the clerk of the senate and the clerk of the house be instructed to forward copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from Connecticut in Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 17, 1897.

Passed.

FRED A. SCOTT, Clerk.
SENATE, February 19, 1897.

Passed.

SAML. A. EDDY, Clerk.

Mr. PEFFER presented the petition of Rev. James J. Purcell, of Parsons, Kans., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANTLE. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Wool Growers' Association of Montana, convened in special session at the city of Helena, on the 15th day of February, 1897, favoring the adoption of the schedule of duties as proposed by the National Wool Growers' Association.

In submitting the resolutions, I desire to state that Montana now stands at the head of the woolgrowing States of the Union, possessing a greater number of sheep than any other State in the Union; and because of this fact I think the resolutions ought to carry considerable weight. I should like to ask, if it is not against the rule, that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolutions of the Montana Wool Growers' Association.

At a meeting of the Wool Growers' Association of Montana, convened in special session at the city of Helena on the 15th day of February, 1897, it was unanimously

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the schedule of duties proposed by the National Wool Growers' Association, of which the Hon. William Lawrence is president, at their conference with the manufacturers on the 9th, 10th, and 11th of February last, with one exception, viz: We urgently request that all skirted and assorted wools shall be subject to the same duties as wash wools. Our experience with free wool has demonstrated the fallacy of every argument urged by the advocates of that un-American policy which has reduced our woolgrowers to the verge of bankruptcy and despair, relieved only by the hope that the incoming Administration and new Congress will revert to the policy of giving adequate protection to so important an industry—to every interest of our nation no less than to our own particular interests. The injustice of a discrimination of 2 cents per pound against the growers of the Western States, as suggested at a meeting of the manufacturers and growers held January 9 last, upon the ground of free range, is at once apparent when we consider that the Western growers are subject to a freight charge of not less than 2 cents per pound more in getting their wool from the point where they shear it from the sheep to the market than are the growers of the Middle and Eastern States, and that the schedule of wages is 100 per cent higher than the same class of labor in the East. The cost of living is 50 per cent higher; interest and taxes are 33⅓ per cent higher. And in view of all these facts, we would suggest that should any discrimination be indulged in on the lines proposed, its order be reversed, and that these wools which enter into direct competition with the range-grown fleeces be subjected to a higher rate of duty. Without antagonizing wools and manufacturers, but, on the contrary, fully recognizing their need of protection, we have presented in the schedule of the national association only what is a fair and living rate for the support of our industry, and will cheerfully cooperate to secure them a proportionate advance in duties on foreign-manufactured products.

Resolved, That the association requests, and confidently expects, that the Montana Senators and Representative in Congress will do all in their power to secure for us this measure of protection at the earliest possible moment, and will insist that the act take effect immediately upon its passage and approval; and, further, that they seek the cooperation of Senators and Representatives of other States similarly situated and interested to resist the passage of any tariff act that discriminates against our interests unjustly.

He also presented a petition of the city council of Denver, Colo., praying Congress to recognize the independence of Cuba; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Montevista, Colo., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Georgetown, Colo., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry woolgrowers of Lincoln and Elbert counties, in the State of Colorado, praying for the passage of the so-called Dingley tariff bill as a temporary measure of relief for the wool industry, and also that a specific duty be placed upon wool; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Highland, Ill., praying that a reciprocity provision in the interest of silver be inserted in the next revised tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I present certain papers on behalf of the individuals formerly comprising and belonging to the Catawba tribe of Indians, relative to lands owned and occupied by them in the States of North and South Carolina, etc. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that they be printed as a document for the use of that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Searcy and Kensett, in the State of Arkansas, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of members of the Union Congregational Church and the Society of Christian Endeavor of Avon Park, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of members of the Methodist Episcopal and Congregational churches of Cando, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7422) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3183) granting a pension to Harriet Clarissa Mercur, widow of James Mercur, late professor of civil and military engineering in the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10271) authorizing the funding of indebtedness in the Territories of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 170) for the relief of Robert Williams, sergeant of ordnance, United States Army, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. SHOUP on the 20th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 19th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

ESTATES OF JAMES M. AND TIMOTHY MEAHER.

Mr. BACON. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report a resolution and ask for the present consideration of the same. It simply authorizes the taking of certain testimony relative to the bill (S. 3090) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Thomas W. McDonald, administrator of the estates of James M. and Timothy Meaher, and to remove the bar of the statute of limitations therefrom, which is pending before the committee.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to order the taking of the testimony of the witnesses above named, and to make such other orders as may to them seem proper under the provisions of the act of February 5, 1879.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Committee on Commerce has reversed its action in regard to the amendment reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in behalf of the committee on the 19th instant, and by direction of the committee I report a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the proposed amendment to the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, which amendment was reported by Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to be inserted after the word "dollars," in line 12, page 80, be recalled from the Committee on Appropriations, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3723) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie A. Kerr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3724) for the relief of Mrs. Jennie A. Kerr, of Concord, N. C.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3726) granting a pension to Daniel L. Tew, of Red Springs, N. C.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WHITE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLANCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. GIBSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Nevada subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CARTER this day, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MANTLE subsequently, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CARTER this day, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

SEABOARD AIR LINE MAILS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a copy of the reports of the agents of the Post-Office Department in relation to weighing the mail upon the Seaboard Air Line in 1896; also a copy of all correspondence between the Department and the officers of said railroad company, and a copy of the correspondence between the Post-Office Department and the Attorney-General in relation thereto.

DEATH OF DR. RICORDO RUIZ.

Mr. MILLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to send to the Senate, if, in his opinion, it is not incompatible with the public interests, a statement of such facts as may be in the possession of the State Department, concerning the arrest, imprisonment, and death of Dr. Ricordo Ruiz in the jail at Guanabacoa on the Island of Cuba, and the correspondence between our Government and Spain, and the correspondence between the State Department and Consul-General Lee on the same subject.

PAYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Committee on the Library, February 13, 1897, in relation to the bill (S. 3087) to incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

PERRINE LAND-GRANT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, in carrying on the investigation into the issue of patents for the lands embraced in the Perrine grant in Florida, be authorized to employ a stenographer, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

FORM OF CREDENTIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be printed and go over.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the following is a convenient and sufficient form of certificate of election of a Senator, to be signed by the executive of any State, in pursuance of section 17 of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the —— day of ——, 189–, A. B. was duly elected by the legislature of the State of —— a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 189–.

Witness his excellency our governor, —— ——, and our seal hereto affixed at ——, this —— day of ——, A. D. ——.

C. D., Governor.

By the governor:

[SEAL.] E. F., Secretary of State.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate shall send a copy of these resolutions to the executive and secretary of state of each State wherein an election of Senator is about to take place, in season that they may use this form in certifying the result thereof, if they see fit.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he did not once report to the Senate a form which his learning and experience approved, to the great satisfaction of the Senate? What has become of it?

Mr. HOAR. That form was not adopted by the Senate. It was reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if I am right, and it has been adopted recently by a good many States. But still there is a great deal of difference now. I propose now simply to have the Senate resolve that this is a convenient form and direct the Secretary of the Senate, in anticipation of every election of a Senator, to send a copy to the States for their use, if they see fit.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator that if he intends to ask for the consideration of the resolution at this session, it should first go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee on Privileges and Elections once reported it, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should not be willing myself to adopt at the present session and send out a form for certificates to be recommended to all the States, without it first having been considered by a committee of this body.

Mr. HOAR. There is no hurry about it. Let the resolution stand over.

Mr. CHANDLER. I simply desire to state that I prefer that the resolution should not be passed unless it is agreed upon by a committee of this body.

Mr. HOAR. I should not expect to pass the resolution if it turned out on investigation that any Senator felt a doubt about it. It is one of those things that would not pass unless it was clearly and unanimously satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). The resolution has been ordered to be printed, and it will go over.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6038) to increase the pension of Joseph M. Donohue was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 229) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held at Buffalo, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HILL. The general act in reference to condemned cannon does not include a case of this kind. There is no possible objection to the joint resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2877) granting a pension to Hiram Santas; and

A bill (S. 3718) to authorize the Montgomery, Hayneville and Camden Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River between Lower Peachtree and Prairie Bluff, Alabama.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

CREVASSE IN PASS A LOUTRE.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre in the Mississippi River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

After the word "Attorney-General," in line 21 of section 2, insert the following: "After a full hearing to both parties;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the House amending the title, and agree to the same.

And the House agree to the same.

D. CAFFERY,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. B. HOOKER,
WALTER REEVES,
T. C. CATCHINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 20th instant approved and signed the joint resolution S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The message also announced that the following bills having been presented to the President of the United States February 10, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, have become laws without his approval:

An act (S. 178) granting a pension to Betsey J. Webber;

An act (S. 1495) granting an increase of pension to Hans Johnson;

An act (S. 1806) granting an increase of pension to George B. Custer;

An act (S. 2126) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Laura A. Nelson;

An act (S. 2347) for the relief of Laura C. Dodge; and

An act (S. 2913) granting an increase of pension to Nettie A. Cheeks.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same amended so that the bill shall read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that the Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and required within six months from the date of the approval of this act to extend the lines of its underground electric railroad from the intersection of Connecticut and Florida avenues northward along Columbia road to a point on the west line of Eighteenth street extended: Provided, That the said company is hereby authorized to issue and sell such an amount of its capital stock as will, at the market value thereof, cover the cost of construction and equipment of the extension herein provided for.

JAMES MCMILLAN,
J. H. GALLINGER,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

CAPTURE OF THE COMPETITOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to the resolution of the Senate of February 6, 1897, a report from the Secretary of State in regard to the persons claiming American citizenship captured on board of the Competitor.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 23, 1897.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is upon the point of order raised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] against the amendment of the committee on page 66, upon which the Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VILAS. It is suggested, and I acquiesce in the suggestion, that we should save time if the Chair would decide the point of order that was raised; but I should like to add a word or two, because it was to the point of order to which I was generally directing the remarks that I made yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will kindly restate the point of order, as probably many Senators were not present at the time it was made.

Mr. VILAS. The point of order is that the proposed amendment on page 66 is general legislation, and is in the very teeth of the rule of the Senate, which is, without qualification or exception, that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill."

Mr. President, I had made some observations yesterday in regard to the circumstances of the attempt to bring these very valuable lands within the reach of claimants. Last evening I was mentioning the fact that the theory that there were discoverers is entirely unsupported, that there is no claim whatever which Congress ought to recognize for a moment that an equity exists in favor of persons seeking to be placed in the light of original discoverers of minerals. That point was really embraced within the veto of President Harrison, who said, in reference to the bill then before him, after it had passed Congress:

The object, then, of this legislation is to be sought not in any public demand for these lands for the use of settlers—for if they are susceptible of that use, the Indians have a clear equity to take allotments upon them—but in that part of the bill which confirms the mineral entries, or entries for mineral uses, which have been unlawfully made "or attempted to be made on said lands." It is evidently a private and not a public end that is to be promoted. It does not follow of course that this private end may not be wholly meritorious, and the relief sought on behalf of these persons altogether just and proper. The facts, as I am advised, are that upon these lands there are veins or beds of asphaltum or gilsonite, supposed to be of very great value.

Entries have been made in that vicinity, but upon public lands, which lands have been resold for very large amounts. It is not important, perhaps, that the United States should in parting with these lands realize their value, but it is essential, I think, that favoritism should have no part in connection with the sales, etc.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I have not read that veto message for some time, but I think I remember very distinctly what was the ground upon which it was based and sent to the Senate. The ground upon which President Harrison vetoed the bill to which the Senator alludes was that the entries were unlawfully made because they were on an Indian reservation, and not on the ground that they were not mineral discoveries. That bill was urged by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and the point in the case was that certain citizens of Colorado claimed to have made these entries upon public lands, and President Harrison came to the conclusion that they were not public lands, but that the entries were made unlawfully upon an Indian reservation.

Mr. VILAS. There is no doubt at all that the entries were illegal for that reason. I have here a report by the Commissioner of the Land Office, Hon. Thomas H. Carter, now an honored member of the Senate, in which he sets forth the facts in relation to it under date of the 12th of April, 1892, which perhaps I had better send up and have read, together with the report of the Acting Secretary of the Interior upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from the Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS, United States Senate, which you referred to this office for report.

The Senator's letter relates to the White River, Kansas City, Joseph A. Thatcher, Scorpion, Lucky Boy, Leavenworth, Cow Boy, Dixie, Bandanna, Archie, Davy Crockett, Plumed Knight, Raffle, Black Jack, Wasatch, New York, Lorna Doone, Eureka, Colorow, Frying Pan, Utah, Mary Mc., and Ouray lode claims, located in August, 1888, and said to bear "albertite or gilsonite."

From the description furnished, the exact geographical position of said claims can not be determined, nor can they be definitely located upon any map, plat, or diagram in this office; they are, however, in Uinta County, Utah, and within the Uncompahgre Ute Indian Reservation.

This reservation was established by Executive order dated January 5, 1882, under act of Congress approved June 15, 1880 (21 U. S. Stats., 199).

Although the land within this reservation is in a certain sense public land, yet, in view of said act and order, I am of the opinion that the attempt to locate the claims above mentioned under the mining land laws was unwarranted and illegal.

Said attempted locations being, in my judgment, without any warrant in the law, I fail to see that these locators could acquire any rights, legal or equitable, as locators or discoverers by reason of such locations, or by reason of having notices thereof recorded in the office of the recorder of Uinta County, Utah.

I have been unable to find in any standard work on mineralogy any authority for designating any mineral substance as "gilsonite," but from information received I am led to think that that term has come into use as descriptive of a fine quality of asphaltum, dealt in by the Gilson Asphaltum Company of St. Louis, Mo., with agencies in London and Hamburg.

In the Century Dictionary I find "albertite" to be defined as being a hydrocarbon, pitchlike in appearance, and related to asphaltum, but not so fusible nor so soluble in benzine or ether. It is used in the manufacture of illuminating gas and of illuminating and lubricating oils.

It might be held that public land valuable on account of its deposits of "albertite" would be subject to entry under the mineral-land laws, but I am unable to refer you to any decision specifically in point.

The Senator's letter and inclosure are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

THOS. H. CARTER, Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 18, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of 30th ultimo, and accompanying printed copy of certain alleged notices of location of mining claims on the Cowboy, etc., lodes of "gilsonite" within the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, and asking to be informed whether the notices of location if made would give the claimants or locators any right or claim under the laws of the United States, or any standing equity, priority, or advantage as discoverers of or locators on the lands therein mentioned in the General Land Office or before the Interior Department, or otherwise.

In response thereto I transmit herewith copy of a communication of 12th instant, from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom the matter was referred, wherein the opinion is expressed that the attempt to locate the claims above mentioned under the mining-land laws was unwarranted and illegal, and he fails to see that these locators could acquire any rights, legal or equitable, as locators or discoverers by reason of such locations or by reason of having notices thereof recorded in the office of the recorder of Uinta County, Utah.

In this connection I invite your attention to the action taken by Congress in regard to the Uintah Reservation, where "gilsonite" was discovered in 1885, and I inclose for your information copy of House Report No. 791, Fiftieth Congress, first session, in relation to the matter.

By the act of May 24, 1888 (25 Stats., 157), certain lands of the Uintah Reservation, said to contain "gilsonite," were restored to the public domain and preference was given by this act to the locator, and the moneys derived from the sales of the lands belonged to the Indians. The act also required that it be ratified by the Indians.

The status of the Uncompahgre lands being different from that of the Uintahs, being held in a reservation until allotted to and purchased by the Uncompahgres, the moneys from these lands if segregated would belong to the United States, and the consent of the Indians would not be necessary.

The inclosures of your letter are herewith returned.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

GEO. CHANDLER, Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
United States Senate.

Mr. VILAS. It will be observed from that letter that the locations spoken of upon which those parties sought to make their claims were made in 1888. I have here copies of the affidavits of the locators, being the printed paper referred to in the communication which in my letter to the Secretary of the Interior I transmitted to him for the opinion which was given me. But there was no discovery then. I have here a copy of an affidavit made by the superintendent of the Gilson Asphaltum Company, of St. Louis, in which he sets forth the fact that the year previous to the time when those locations were made he was upon that land and himself claimed the discovery of those asphaltum mines or deposits. In order that that may be made perfectly plain, I will send up to be read by the Secretary the affidavit of Mr. Seaboldt, superintendent of that company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

UTAH TERRITORY, Salt Lake County, ss:

Bert Seaboldt, being duly sworn, on oath says: I am a citizen of the United States, native born, and for ten years last past have lived in Utah Territory, and am 31 years of age. For about four years last past I have been and am now superintendent of the mines in Utah of the Gilson Asphaltum Company, a corporation of Missouri. I am familiar with the location and whereabouts of an alleged claim, called the Evacuation Lode and Mining Claim, within the limits of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in Utah. Prior to the attempted location of the said alleged mining claim I was prospecting in that section of the country for gilsonite, and discovered and made the original discovery of the vein of gilsonite embraced within said so-called Evacuation Mining Claim, and upon such discovery I immediately on the same day located said lode, and the premises adjacent and appurtenant thereto, to wit, 600 feet in width by 1,500 in length on the lode, as a lode mining claim, and called the same the Black Diamond Lode Mining Claim. In making such location I erected a substantial and conspicuous stake at the discovery point on the lode, on which I posted a written notice of the location, containing the date of location, name of the locator of the claim, and such a description of the claim by reference to natural objects and monuments in the vicinity as that therefrom the claim and its boundaries could be readily identified and found, and also marked the boundaries of said claim with substantial stakes, so that therefrom such boundaries could be readily seen and traced, and in all respects, in making such location, I complied with all the requirements of the United States mining laws. I thoroughly prospected and inspected the premises and lode in said claim beyond the lines of said claim on its course toward the northwest for over a mile. There were no stakes, monuments, location notices, or other evidences whatever of possession or location of any part of said lode throughout its length prospected by me as aforesaid at that time, and such location and prospecting was made by me early in the fall of 1887, the month of September, as I recollect it. The weather was quite hot yet, I remember. My examination was thorough, and had there been any such evidence on the ground I should certainly have seen it. After I had completed such work of location, and while following out the lode, I saw it was making toward the aforesaid Indian reservation, and after prospecting the lode for the length aforesaid, and coming back to my aforesaid location, I began to look for the reservation line, and on going east of the claim for somewhere between half a mile and a mile, as near as I can estimate it, I readily discovered the one hundred and ninetieth milepost, if my memory serves me as to the number of the post of said reservation. This post was conspicuously placed on a knoll or hill, and was a high rock monument, marked with cuts in one of the large rocks. I then began tracing the east line of the reservation toward the south and north and readily found other rock monuments conspicuously placed and marked on said line, all of said monuments identifying said line as the boundary line between Colorado and Utah.

I then saw that my mining claim and the lode throughout its entire extent aforesaid was within the limits and boundaries of said reservation. If any person at that time had taken the trouble to make an ordinary search or any kind of a search whatever for the boundaries of said reservation, such person could not help finding the east boundary line aforesaid as readily and easily as I did. Shortly after this a man, then lately from Iowa and in the employ of the United States, but entirely unaccustomed to this Western country (as the place in question is), went to eject from said reservation certain persons then alleged to be trespassing thereupon, and at that time, without help or assistance, he readily found the monuments aforesaid and other monuments, and determined therefrom the boundary of said reservation.

My location was made in the utmost good faith and was the first and original location on the ground and on the lode aforesaid, and it covered substantially the same premises and portion of said lode embraced in said alleged Evacuation mining claim. On ascertaining that my said location was within the reservation as aforesaid, I abandoned my location and gave the same up, knowing it was unlawful for me to attempt to hold it, and therefore did not keep a copy of or record my location notice.

BERT SEABOLDT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, May 3, A. D. 1892.
[SEAL.]
W. M. BRADLEY,
Notary Public, Salt Lake County, Utah.

Mr. VILAS. In addition to that affidavit there is another one by the same person, giving additional particulars in respect to his discovery of that lode and the persons who were with him, and an affidavit of a considerable number there present, setting forth his high character and repute. Without asking to have them read, I will ask leave to have them inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The affidavits referred to are as follows:

UTAH TERRITORY, Salt Lake County, ss:

Bert Seaboldt, being duly sworn, on oath says: I am the locator of the "Black Diamond" lode mining claim near Evacuation Creek, within the limits of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, Utah, and situated about or between half a mile or a mile westerly from the one hundred and ninetieth milepost, as I recollect it, off and on the Colorado-Utah boundary line. I made an affidavit with reference to said "Black Diamond" mining claim and an alleged mining claim called the "Evacuation" on or about May 3, 1892, before the same notary public who subscribes and certifies to my oath to this affidavit. I know Charles Hill, postmaster and storekeeper at Rangely, Colo., about 14 miles east of the boundary line between Utah and Colorado, on White River, and have known him since 1886. After I located said "Black Diamond" claim, Hill and I went together to the milepost aforesaid, which, I think, was the one hundred and ninetieth milepost, and I showed the same to him. We were at this time out prospecting together for gilsonite, having heard that there was a vein of it in Colorado just over the Utah boundary line. We were camped at a place I named "Jacobs Well," in Colorado, on the dry fork of Evacuation Creek. We remained camped there for about two weeks. After I showed Hill the milepost aforesaid I took him over to my "Black Diamond" claim aforesaid and showed him that lode and my stakes and location notice thereof and thereon. He stated to me that he had never seen, known of, or heard of that lode or vein before, and also stated to me that it was certainly all within and west of the east line of the aforesaid reservation, and would do nobody any good for that reason. Afterwards, either on that day or the next day, we went together to the one hundred and ninety-second milepost on said boundary line, if I remember correctly (2 miles north of the one first herein named), and I showed same to him. It was in the bottom of a gulch. I set my compass on top of a stake that we placed by the side of this milepost, supported by a smaller stake, and took a course due north and took foresight on a bluff. We then set a larger stake by the side of the monument and tied a red handkerchief to it for a backsight. Having thus ascertained the course, we followed it up and readily found the next northerly milepost on the said boundary line (the one hundred and ninety-third, I think, but I am not sure of the number), which was on top of a high bluff or mesa. We built a large fire here and then went higher up on the mountain back of the mesa. From the top of this bluff we could see back on the course of said boundary line for 15 miles. We kept on prospecting east of the line and prospected long enough to satisfy ourselves that there was no gilsonite vein off the reservation aforesaid, as thus known to us. He was then, and had been for some time prior to the time aforesaid, engaged in the business of ranging cattle in that country, and after I had showed him the one hundred and ninety-third milepost (if that be the number of same), and while he stood on the bluff aforesaid, he told me that he knew where there was another similar milepost about a mile or 2 miles south of the aforesaid one hundred and ninetieth post (if that is the correct number). All this and the foregoing occurred about a month after I had located my said "Black Diamond" claim. Said Hill's full name is Charles P. Hill. About the time of the location of the "Evacuation" claim I was at Rangely aforesaid, and while there a man from Denver, Colo., a little, fat man in the tin-roofing business, I believe, came to Rangely, having heard that there was a vein of gilsonite in that country, and wanted said Hill to show him where it was, and Hill asked me whether or not he had better take the Denver man over there, saying to me at the time, that since the vein was all on the reservation it wouldn't do any harm, and that he would convince the man from Denver that it was all on the reservation by showing him the boundary line between Colorado and Utah, which is the east boundary line of said Uncompahgre Indian Reservation. They went and came back, and Hill told me he had taken the man to the lode and had also shown him the boundary line aforesaid. Prior to the time when my said "Black Diamond" claim was located I did not know where the reservation line aforesaid ran or was situated, but prior to the location of said alleged "Evacuation" claim said Hill knew where said boundary line was, because I showed it to him and we found it as aforesaid. I was the first and original discoverer of said lode, and had I not discovered same to be entirely within said reservation I should have located and held the entire lode throughout its entire length, not only the length of same explored by me, but also its length beyond the point where I stopped my exploration of same. I then went no farther on said lode, for the reason that it was making toward the middle of the reservation, and I thought I would find out where it was before I went any farther.

My commission expires March 26, 1894.

Mr. VILAS. I hold here a paper by Mr. James C. McGinnis, the attorney of the Gilson Asphaltum Company, of St. Louis, in which he makes some interesting statements in respect to this gilsonite as it was known at the time when he laid this document before the committee. It is dated the 21st of May, 1892. In that he says:

This gilsonite is a peculiar kind of bitumen, which, until a few years ago, was found only in Syria, Cuba, and Mexico, the principal supply in this country having been procured from Syria at a minimum cost of $100 per ton. Some years ago the fissure deposit now operated by the Gilson Asphaltum Company of St. Louis was located on the Uintah Reservation and opened up to commerce, and though it is operated under the great disadvantage involved in hauling the product by wagon a distance of 93 miles to the railroad, it has already wrought a revolution in the cost of the material, it being now sold in this country for less than one-half of what it cost before this mine was opened. The deposits sought to be developed by this legislation are, many of them, much richer in quantity, the fissures being wider than that worked by the St. Louis company, and they are known to extend at intervals of 2 or 3 miles over most of the territory sought to be opened by these bills—

Referring to the bills before the Fifty-second Congress—

besides which there are enormous deposits of the same material in other parts of the Uncompahgre Reservation as great, in fact, as those affected by these bills, if not greater.

He also makes some statements in respect to the use of this gilsonite. He says:

This is the only bitumen found in the United States which can be used as a base in the manufacture of asphaltum varnishes, baking japans, and iron paints, besides being useful in many other of the mechanical arts, where now a foreign and much inferior article is being used; and its scarcity and high price have hitherto prevented its being employed in many other ways to add to the comfort and wealth of the people.

Gilsonite is an absolute nonconductor of electricity, and is being used for this purpose in many forms, some of which are unknown to us. We have sold carloads of it to the Edison Company, and smaller quantities to many other well-known electricians in this country and abroad. It is also a very superior article for roofing and roofing paints; in fact, the uses to which it can be applied are too numerous to mention.

At that time all that was known to exist there was asphaltum and gilsonite, but a far more valuable mineral was distinguished by the Geological Survey. They have found what is called by them "elaterite" and another one of a kindred nature, called "wurtzitite." I desire to read a copy of a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey under date of the 17th of April, 1896, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior on this general subject. He says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to submit certain information touching the existence of elaterite, or "mineral rubber," in the Uintah Indian Reservation, in Utah, which has been furnished by Mr. George H. Eldridge, the geologist who recently examined the gilsonite deposits of the Uintah and Uncompahgre reservations.

In the southern part of the Uintah Reservation there are known to occur deposits of elaterite, wurtzitite, or "mineral rubber," and it is believed that little of this mineral exists beyond the reservation line, nor does it exist, so far as known, elsewhere in the United States.

The extent of the deposits is undetermined. At the time of Mr. Eldridge's visit to the region, incidentally to an examination of the gilsonite deposits, he was prevented from examining the elaterite deposits by reason of the fact that the ground in that region was covered to a considerable depth with snow. From information secured from persons who had seen the deposits, he believes them to be workable and to occur as veins, much after the manner of gilsonite.

Several years ago an attempt was made by a company, "the American Asphalt Company," (?)* to lease from the Uintah Indians, on royalty, several thousand acres of land known to include the elaterite deposits. This lease appears, however, never to have been consummated, and the deposits have neither been worked nor prospected to any considerable extent.

A small deposit of the elaterite occurs outside of the reservation line, and from this the Elaterite Rubber Manufacturing Company has obtained 50 or 100 tons for experimental purposes. The company has made from it a japan which has the same property of elasticity as that manufactured from gilsonite. By coating burlap with it, the company has also produced a roofing material which, it is believed, will prove of great durability. The liquefied mineral rubber has also been applied to leather, and a piece examined by Mr. Eldridge showed marked flexibility and could not be cracked under the sharpest flexion. The company has also manufactured from the raw material, in biscuit form, a product approaching in elasticity vegetable rubber. In this direction elaterite may be regarded as of especial importance; for, on account of its diminished cost, it may be used to advantage in mixing with vegetable rubber, not as an adulterant, but as a material with closely related properties.

When Mr. Eldridge visited St. Louis to inquire into the question of the manufacture of gilsonite products, the president and chemist of the company above referred to, in experimenting with elaterite, asked him to present such a statement as he conscientiously could to the Secretary of the Interior, for his consideration, as that company would like to secure control of the elaterite deposits of the Uintah Reservation, in part or in whole. Mr. Eldridge suggests, however, that prior to taking any action of this kind an examination on the ground in behalf of the Government would be advantageous, in order that a proper understanding of the extent and value of the deposits, which is now wanting, might be placed before the Department.

In view of these facts and suggestions, I would respectfully recommend that when Mr. Eldridge's work on the phosphate deposits of Florida is completed, which will probably be in July or August next, he be sent to the Uintah Reservation to make a thorough investigation of the elaterite deposits and any other hydrocarbon compounds upon which it may seem desirable to have further information.

I am, with respect, your obedient servant,

CHAS. D. WALCOTT,
Director.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

A far greater quantity, as it is said, of this elaterite and wurtzitite, or mineral rubber, also exists in the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation than is known anywhere else in the world, and it is said that the mineral is worth more than its weight in gold. Of course that statement must be taken with a great many allowances; but it is unquestionably true that the mines of elaterite are worth more than probably any mine of gold which is known to exist to-day. I have been assured by a person who claims to have invented a method of dissolving this elaterite—which it is said until recently was never known—that by his scheme of making it soluble that mineral can be applied to uses of the very greatest advantage to mankind. Not only will it make a garment perfectly waterproof, but at the same time, as stated by the Director of the Geological Survey, incapable of being cracked under any flexion that could be applied to it. It is also, in this state of solution, capable of being used as a mineral paint, which will produce the most beautiful effects, which glistens when it is put upon a substance until it resembles the finest polished metal. Its durability is such that it neither yields to wear or use or almost any attempts to injure it. It is also the best nonconductor of electricity, as is stated in this communication from which I read an extract; so that by simply dipping a wire into it the wire is at once made a completely isolated wire; and thus, as electricity is coming to serve so many additional uses, it is said by those familiar with the subject that this mineral will prove the greatest auxiliary to the usefulness of that process or mode of transmitting power in the arts.

The Secretary of the Interior in his report a year ago calls attention to the gilsonite and other mineral deposits on the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, and says in reference to the lands containing this very product:

If they are open to entry in the ordinary way a few persons will obtain them at practically no cost, and shortly thereafter they will become the property of large companies engaged in using this mineral. I believe the true policy should be for the Government to sell these deposits to the highest bidders, or else to lease them.

That, let me say, was the proposal of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Fifty-second Congress, in the year 1892.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I merely wish to ask from what the Senator is reading?

Mr. VILAS. I am reading from the report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1895. He says further:

If they are disposed of under existing law, a few thousand dollars will be picked up by the enterprising men who first go upon them, and then enormous profits, which at least in part should go into the Treasury of the Government, will be made by the companies organized to operate them.

I recommend the passage of such legislation as will provide for the disposal of the gilsonite deposits by lease or sale to the highest bidder.

Mr. President, it seems to me too plain for debate that the United States ought not to appropriate to a few persons, thereby establishing a monopoly, these immense deposits of valuable mineral, as I said yesterday, worth more than the entire appropriations of money from the Treasury contained in this bill. Unquestionably these deposits are worth millions of dollars. All the people who have examined them indicate that they are of the greatest value, and the very fierceness with which they are pursued also indicates that fact.

Mr. TELLER. I should like the Senator to let me interrupt him a moment. I wish to say that there is nobody in the West who believes these deposits are of such tremendous value; and the man who has made this wonderful discovery of its use is a Western man, and we are quite as familiar, I think, with its use as the Senator or anybody else he has read from here. There is no reason for the statement that gilsonite is worth any such tremendous sum. The statement is incorrect.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I have this information from those gentlemen who live there in the West.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt but what the man who has made this great discovery of the use of this mineral thinks it is worth all this, and that he thinks he has discovered the method of transmuting that substance practically into gold.

Mr. VILAS. That is only in relation to elaterite; but long before that time I had similar information from the gentlemen who were here in the Fifty-second Congress seeking to get those lands opened that they might obtain the gilsonite. They did not hesitate to say that the gilsonite minerals were worth millions.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, he has just referred to people who have gone upon those lands and taken them. There is a concern in St. Louis which has taken a large amount of them. That company has worked them to some extent, but has not found them so profitable as the Senator indicates. The balance of the land which has been taken up has been taken up by prospectors and miners and that class of people. I do not believe to-day, outside of the holdings of the St. Louis company, where they have made some developments, that the entire region could be sold for $100,000.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator is quite misinformed.

Mr. TELLER. I am not misinformed. I know as much about that as the Senator from Wisconsin or anybody else.

Mr. VILAS. Well, I have no doubt at all that the Senator thinks he does, because he always thinks he knows about everything as much as anybody else, or more.

Mr. TELLER. I usually inform myself before making a statement.

Mr. VILAS. But the statement which the Senator is making with reference to the mines worked by the Gilson Asphaltum Company, of St. Louis, is a statement in reference to a mine on another reservation, and I have just read from the attorney of that company his explanation of the difficulties under which they are laboring there, and that that mine is of comparative insignificance in comparison with the immense deposits on the Uncompahgre Reservation.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask if the Senator urges, because these deposits are of immense value, that that is the reason they should not be thrown open to entry under the mineral laws of the United States?

Mr. VILAS. That is a reason why they should not be thrown open to entry under the present mineral laws. What ought to be done with them is for the United States to provide that they shall be worked at some proper royalty, to go into the Treasury.

Mr. CLARK. Does not, then, the logic of the Senator's argument force him into the position that the gold and silver deposits of the United States should be worked under royalty for the United States in like manner?

Mr. VILAS. Not at all; not in the least. Here is a large body of mineral already discovered and known, never found by prospectors in the way in which gold and silver mines are found.

Mr. TELLER. They are found exactly in the same way.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is simply mistaken. I have already sent up to the desk to be read two affidavits showing that the year before these very mines were located and prospected another man had found all those minerals lying open there on the ground and himself put up his claim.

Mr. BROWN. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if the law requires a locator to discover a vein in the sense of discovering a patent? Is it not true that the word "discover" is not found in the mining laws at all, and that the lands are open to exploration and purchase?

Mr. VILAS. Of course they are. That is the very nature of the mining laws with reference to gold and silver. The idea of the mining laws with reference to gold and silver mining was that persons would be obliged to expend money in the pursuit oftentimes of veins which would prove to be worthless, and that it was of great consequence to the people of the country that gold and silver mines should be found. It was, in a certain sense, like the patent laws of the United States, which give a monopoly to any man who makes a useful invention; but who does not know that there are thousands and tens of thousands of patents issued which do not give any valuable monopoly at all?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President——

Mr. VILAS. Here and there a silver or gold mine has been found which was of value, but that is the lottery which the prospector engages in. Here there is no lottery whatever; here was no discovery. These lands were not within the class of mineral to which the mineral-land laws apply.

Mr. BROWN. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. VILAS. I am going to yield to the Senator's colleague, who first rose to ask me a question.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin kindly state how many mines of gilsonite, elaterite, or asphaltum are now being operated in Utah?

Mr. VILAS. I do not know of personal knowledge anything about it, but I understand from information that the Gilson Asphaltum Company, of St. Louis, has a mine on the Uintah Reservation, which, being situated nearly a hundred miles from a railroad, is operated, so far as that company does operate it, at great disadvantage of cost and expense.

Mr. CANNON. Is not that the only mine which is being operated?

Mr. VILAS. I know of no other, and I believe that there are no deposits of this character of value, except such value as exists in that mine and the immense deposits on the Uncompahgre Reservation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator yield to me for another question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator from Wisconsin states that this is unlike gold and silver mining, that it is not a lottery, and proceeds to show from the testimony which he adduces here that the only mine which has been operated is operated under such distinct disadvantages as can not make it greatly profitable. The only evidence which the Senator from Wisconsin adduces to the Senate at this time is to the effect that this is precisely like gold and silver mining, and in this respect that it is a lottery for those who engage in it.

Mr. VILAS. Not in the least. The reason why the Gilson Asphaltum Company's mine in the Uintah Reservation has not been profitably worked is stated in this document, that it is almost 100 miles from the railroad, and the cost of hauling—let me read to the Senator again the statement from that paper, which he did not hear. The attorney says:

> This gilsonite is a peculiar kind of bitumen, which until a few years ago was found only in Syria, Cuba, and Mexico, the principal supply in this country having been procured from Syria, at a minimum cost of $100 per ton. Some years ago the fissure deposit now operated by the Gilson Asphaltum Company of St. Louis was located on the Uintah Reservation and opened up to commerce, and though it is operated under the great disadvantage involved in hauling the product by wagon a distance of 93 miles to the railroad, it has already wrought a revolution in the cost of the material, it being now sold in this country for less than one-half of what it cost before this mine was opened.

That does not seem to indicate that the mine is not profitable.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the Senator from Wisconsin is entirely sincere in his statement as to the nature of these deposits, but I happen to know from an examination of the question—because I have friends in the city of St. Louis who have invested large amounts of money in this venture in the Uintah Indian Reservation—that he is misinformed.

The statement made by Colonel McGinnis, who was then the attorney of the Gilson Company, is very imperfect in one regard. The largest and most valuable deposit, if you can call it so, of this gilsonite or asphaltum—because they are essentially the same—is in an island in the West Indies, Trinidad Island, and a company from this city purchased that island or have certain rights upon it.

Mr. VILAS. I intended to mention that fact in the course of the discussion.

Mr. VEST. They have a lake there of liquid asphaltum. They constructed vessels and brought that asphaltum up the Potomac River. I have seen it, and other Senators who have been here any length of time have seen it taken up from those vessels in blocks looking like amber—gum; and that is the material which is melted in large vessels and poured upon the streets; and that is the asphaltum which we use here in the city of Washington, and for which we have paid an enormous price.

One word more, and I shall not further interrupt the Senator. I know by evidence as irrefutable as it can be made from human authority, from gentlemen who have gone there, who have large investments, and have personally inspected the lands on the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, that gilsonite is not found upon the surface, as the Senator says. It is covered with dirt sometimes to the extent of 5 or 6 or even 10 feet; it crops out just as gold and silver do; it is in veins. Those veins run down and disappear just like the veins of the precious metals do; in other cases they enlarge. There are two veins which are said to be 2 or 3 feet wide. The president of this company brought with him to Washington City one of the blocks taken out of one of those veins, which is now in the Interior Department, showing the width of the vein. That is the widest, and it is about a foot and a half or 2 feet across. Others of those veins run down to a thread and then disappear. A man who takes a claim runs the same risk that he would from that disappearance of gold or silver in a vein near the surface or at the surface of the ground.

Mr. WILSON. It is liable to pinch out.

Mr. VEST. It is liable, like gold and silver, to pinch out or to widen; and it is as much of a gamble, in the language of the mining camp, as a silver discovery or a gold discovery.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is almost always exactly right, but in this case he is only partly right, which is unusual for him. I shall read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior a statement from the Geological Survey, and I venture to think that the Senate will accept the statement of the Geological Survey as quite as trustworthy as any other. On this subject of the width of the veins—as that was the last point to which the Senator directed his attention, and upon which he was most in mistake—I desire to read a sentence:

Of the four veins in the eastern half of the reservation, one—the Black Dragon—is exposed on a tributary of the West Fork of Evacuation Creek, 20 miles south of White River, near the parallel of 39° 45'. This vein may be traced to the head of Asphalt Creek, and has a known length of between 3 and 4 miles. Its width at an opening near the southeastern end of the fissure as exposed is 8 feet 6 inches.

Mr. VEST. How far does it continue?

Mr. VILAS. I do not know whether it continues all the way or not; but, instead of there being no width greater than a foot and a half, as the Senator gave it, there is a vein eight feet and a half wide and 3 or 4 miles long. Whether the width continues all the way or not, the Geological Survey does not particularly state, but it does state this, which I omitted to notice:

From this point southeastward the diminution in size is very rapid.

But it is a long vein of great width. It is at the mentioned place where it has that width, and it is in the other direction, as I understand it, that it has been traced 3 or 4 miles.

Now, observe another statement in order that I may call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the mistake. The report speaks next of the second and third veins in the eastern portion of the reservation, known as the "Little Bonanza" and "Big Bonanza."

They are approximately parallel, and from 200 to 500 feet apart. They were traced to the north of White River for nearly 3 miles, and Mr. McAndrews, of the Indian police, states also that he has followed them southeastward across the river quite to the Colorado line; in all, a distance of 10 or 12 miles.

Let me ask the attention of the Senator from Missouri to this:

The maximum width of the Little Bonanza observed was 9 feet, of the Big Bonanza, 13 feet 6 inches; but locally the Little Bonanza exceeds the Big Bonanza in width.

That does not look like a foot and a half. There is another:

The "Cowboy," the fourth and largest of the important group of gilsonite veins in the eastern portion of the reservation, lies about 2½ miles northeast of the Bonanza veins, with which it is parallel. This vein has thus far been found only north of the river, but it here has a probable length of at least 5 miles, being clearly defined in outcrop for over half this distance, while for the remainder evidences of its presence exist in the float particles found in the soil and wash covering it. The maximum thickness of this vein was found to be 18 feet.

So my distinguished friend was in error in respect to the idea that the maximum thickness of this vein was a foot and a half. Now, let me add something which is still more pertinent:

The thickness of the veins varies from the figures given above to 0 at the ends, and they are observed to widen and contract from point to point; but for much of the lengths given they appear to maintain an excellent workable width, from 4 to 12 feet.

* * * * * * *

The amount of gilsonite in the region examined is enormous, for the depth of the fissures, though unknown, can not but be considerable—from 1,000 to several thousand feet—and, with their length and width, is indicative of phenomenal yield.

We are going to legislate in respect to this great mass of valuable minerals which the Geological Survey has told us of. Shall we legislate to give it into the hands of a monopoly, or shall we provide so that the people of the United States, who own it, shall enjoy a reasonable measure of the profits of their own property? That is the whole question.

Here is a peculiar case, entirely different from the ordinary business of gold and silver mining. Here are vast deposits known to exist and pointed out in character and extent and value by the United States Geological Survey, worth millions of dollars. Why, instead of giving them over to some great corporation, should we not provide that they shall be worked by anybody of sufficient capacity at a royalty, so much per ton, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States; or, if we do not wish that to be done, why not sell them outright and get something like their value? But the true course undoubtedly is to do as other countries have done, to do as our neighbor, Canada, on the north, has done with much of the valuable deposits put into the hands of that Government by nature. Let men who will go there with perfect freedom, open to all, and let them pay a royalty for the privilege of working in the mines. Then you have likened it to gold and silver mining, except that you have reserved out of the sureness of the profits a fair, reasonable proportion only for the people of the United States, a proportion that will amount undoubtedly to millions of dollars in the end, and nobody knows what untold millions. That is the way to deal with this property in fairness; that is the way to deal with this property so that any citizen can enjoy an equal opportunity with any other if his enterprise and means are such as to set him upon it.

That is all I have ever desired with reference to this property. I have no interest in it directly or indirectly except as a citizen of the United States. I have never spoken with any person interested in it except those whose interests have been such that I have felt it my duty to oppose them at every step. For six years I have been here looking after the interests of the United States in reference to these great deposits of mineral, and, as I have said, I have never seen anyone except those who were trying to get it and whom I have opposed during that time.

I think very likely a result like that which seems always to ensue with reference to anything that the Government has that is valuable, may, in the end, ensue with reference to this great deposit of valuable mineral. Sooner or later, perhaps, instead of the right thing being done in the interest of the people, some legislation will occur by which some monopoly will be created, and some persons made enormously rich out of the property that is the common right of all the citizens of this country. But I hope it will not now take place, and that hereafter, when more time is afforded for the proper solution of this question, the Senate will take it up with an intelligent understanding of the circumstances and enact such legislation as will open these minerals to the use of the people of the United States, and open them upon fair terms to the Government at large and to all those who wish to engage in mining.

But, Mr. President, at this time there is one plain, direct question addressed to you for decision. That is simply the question whether such a piece of legislation as this can be put upon an appropriation bill with your allowance, when the rule of the Senate is direct and explicit that it shall not be. I need spend no time in pointing out that the proposed statute is a direct amendment of the law of 1894, and intended so to be; but I should like to add that it proceeds to overrule that law in a most important particular. That law, bad as it was as it issued from the conference committee after having thrown away the safeguards which the Indian Affairs Committee had provided and the Senate had added to it from greater caution, still provided that before any mineral lands should be opened there should be allotments to the Indians made and that the President of the United States should make proclamation. It is the purpose of the proposed statute to do away with both those things practically. It begins by saying—

That all that part of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, except such lands as have heretofore been allotted or selected for allotment to said Uncompahgre Indians, is hereby declared open to public entry.

But, Mr. President, no allotments have been made. And what is meant by "selected for allotment?" There is no such term in the law as "selected for allotment." That is to say, there is no step in the process of allotment to the Indians where anything takes place that is known as a selection for allotment except simply that in parol Indians are proffered their choice, when they can be, of the lands they will take, and then the allotment is made according to their wish. But that is no formal step. There is no record of it. Nothing is done except when the allotment is completed the wishes of the Indians are carried out by the office.

So, as no allotments have been made and no steps have been taken that operate to segregate any of the lands from the general mass, this now would throw open the entire reservation of the Uncompahgre Utes. It would do it, sir, for what reason? In order that that great body of territory may be made available for settlement even? No, sir. In order that this little part in the eastern end of it may be made available for the enrichment of some great corporation.

Mr. President, I insist that the rule of the Senate shall be applied to this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I fully agree with the purpose asserted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] in his opposition to the opening of the Uncompahgre Reservation, but I can not see that the method proposed by him will avert the evil which he fears. On the contrary, it seems to me that the policy proposed to be pursued by the opponents of the opening will directly lead to the control of these incalculably valuable deposits by some great corporation under lease or under purchase of the lands from the Government, if they shall be sold at auction or leased at auction to the highest bidder.

I agree—and it is a pleasure to agree—with the Senator from Wisconsin in his statement of the vast extent of these fields of asphaltum, of elaterite, of gilsonite. I believe that he has not overdrawn the picture of their extent and of the varied uses to which they may be applied in the commerce and the industries of the United States. I agree with him that perhaps there has been discovered a solvent by which elaterite may be reduced to rubber, by which it may be made into the best insulator known. So numerous are the purposes to which these various minerals can be applied that there is scarcely a modern industry in progress in this country which will not find need of them.

I differ a little with the Senator in his statement when he compares these minerals in weight with gold. I differ with him distinctly when he states——

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator will understand that I did not mean to be taken literally in that respect.

Mr. CANNON. I have the misfortune of always taking the Senator from Wisconsin literally, and I supposed that he meant in this case that those minerals were worth more than their weight in gold. When there shall be perfected a proper solvent, perhaps some use may be found for them which in commerce will make them more valuable than gold.

At this point, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him if he has ever been over the area of land comprised within the Uintah and Uncompahgre reservations?

Mr. VILAS. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. "The cliffs of shadowy tint always appear more sweet than the smiling landscape near." If I had a desire to see the Senator punished in this life for any of his possible misdeeds, I should wish that he might be compelled to go upon either the Uintah or the Uncompahgre Reservation or on the adjoining lands, and hunt a vein of gilsonite or elaterite, with the assurance that he could neither eat nor drink until he had found one which was of commercial value.

Mr. President, while I have some considerable and intimate personal knowledge of the situation there, I shall make my comments upon the physical character of the land solely dependent upon official reports made to the Government of the United States. As has been rehearsed here on many occasions when the subject has been under consideration in some one of its various forms, under the appropriation act of 1894 provision was made for the appointment of a commission to go upon these lands and select the agricultural portions for allotment to the Indians. Three gentlemen of distinguished character, personally delightful, went out to Utah and made a report to the Secretary of the Interior concerning some of their investigations, and I quote briefly from one portion of the report, delivered by them to the Secretary of the Interior under date of May 6, 1895, the one month in the year when, if at all, that country would be beautiful and desirable:

That portion of the reservation explored, embracing, as before said, all the land east of Green River, and both above and below the White, is, with the exception of the valley of the White (about 10,000 acres)—

Mark you, out of two millions—and the valley of the Green (unsuited for agricultural purposes), a desert—above, a desert of shifting sand, scantily supplied with a stunted growth of sage and grease wood, and destitute of water after leaving these rivers until Badland Creek is reached, near the northern boundary of the reservation; and below, a desert, too, but instead of shifting sand one of hard gravel and sheets of rock, seamed and fissured, along which in every direction are crags, precipices, and piles of bowlders terribly broken and shattered, and thrown together in every conceivable shape and size.

That is a brief and accurate description from official sources of the country in which these deposits are located. It has taken the utmost heroism on the part of the men who were aware of the existence of these valuable minerals there to go into the country at all. It is positively at the risk of life that men pursue the explorations and the prospecting necessary to make mineral discoveries in that part of the public domain.

The Senator from Wisconsin declares that there have never been any discoveries in this case; that the veins were there; that the deposits were open under the sun; the inference being that a man could not walk along on a hunting trip without finding gilsonite, elaterite, or asphaltum. It is true that the original discovery was perhaps by accident, as has been nearly every mineral discovery of any considerable extent in the United States; but that a discovery was made there in the sense designated by the law no one can deny. The discovery of gilsonite was made by a man named Gilson, whose residence was in that locality. I knew him well. I knew of his successive trips into that country in his investigation. I knew of others who went out.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if Mr. Gilson's discovery of this mineral was not made originally on the Uintah Reservation? Was it not there that he discovered this mineral which is known by his name?

Mr. CANNON. I can not state at this time in what particular part of this region the original discovery was made by Mr. Gilson, but that it was a discovery in the sense contemplated by the law relating to the mineral lands of the United States no one who is informed concerning the facts can question. I am replying to that general statement of the Senator from Wisconsin that there has been no discovery of this mineral in the sense comprehended by the law.

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator will pardon me, that statement was made with reference particularly to these deposits on the Uncompahgre Reservation.

Mr. CANNON. I can not understand that that affects the general principle. That one may have discovered gold at Cripple Creek and that the Government may have issued, as it has issued, a monograph on the subject, and that other men have gone in and taken advantage of the general knowledge and the publication of Government reports and located upon grounds contiguous to those of the original discoverer, does not make them nondiscoverers in the sense to which the law applies.

The existence of tracts of land bearing gilsonite, asphaltum, elaterite, or wurtzitite and others of these rare substances in the Uncompahgre Reservation was perhaps known almost immediately after Mr. Gilson made the discovery either in the Uintah or the Uncompahgre Reservation, but their lack of accessibility was such that it took several years before men had the hardihood and the bravery to go in there and attempt to make locations. I have here a brief newspaper account, which I will read to the Senate, concerning some of the explorations and locations made there. I picked it up by accident since this discussion began. I am somewhat conversant with the facts in the case; I know all the parties named, and I offer it to the Senate, believing it to be exactly true:

In the summer of 1888 John McAndrews, of Ouray, Utah; A. C. Hatch, of Heber, Utah; Joseph Luxen, of Vernal, Utah, and Thomas Kennedy, of Ouray, Utah, while riding the eastern part of the reservation for cattle belonging to the adjoining ranges, discovered a quantity of gilsonite float, for which they and many others had searched for upward of five years.

They traced it for two days through the bad lands near Dripping Rock, and finally discovered and located the Cowboy veins.

The mineral is situated near the Colorado line, and every member of the party was positive it was off the reservation and in Colorado.

To settle the question beyond all doubt they employed a surveyor, Art Johnson, and with him ran the eastern line of the reservation for many miles from a well-known Colorado monument, only to discover that they were mistaken, and that the long-sought gilsonite was just within the reservation.

In the month of August their discovery and locations were made matters of record in Uinta County, Utah, and they immediately informed the agent of the Utes, Col. T. A. Byrnes, that they had discovered veins of gilsonite; had located and recorded same, and proposed to go to work at once and develop their property.

Of course the agent immediately forbade their operating the claims and warned the locators to keep off, under penalty of prosecution for trespass. If it be correct that these lands were withdrawn from the public domain of the United States, if the citizens of this country have not now and if they have not always had the legal title to them, then his threat was sufficient, as it was proper. No attempt is now being made to operate these claims. No attempt, so far as I am advised, is now being made to locate upon any of the veins or to prospect for other veins in that locality.

Mr. President, I have been very much surprised in the discussion of this question at the attitude assumed by the Senator from Wisconsin, who with much learning has given to the Senate the information concerning the character of the substances to be found in these reservations. But he has assumed an amazing attitude with regard to the matter of discovery, and the whole tenor of his remarks would indicate plainly to a listener that gilsonite and asphaltum lay out in a garden of gods, ready to be taken for the enrichment of mankind, and that some one man or some few men will rush in the minute the reservation is declared opened and seize the whole mighty area.

Two million acres and more of land constitute the Uncompahgre Reservation. It is of the character described in the report of the Indian commission sent out to those lands to locate the Indians thereon. In that vast area, in that wild country, is scattered here and there, in greater or less thickness, a fissure vein of asphaltum between walls, as any other mineral may be found in the United States.

Mr. VILAS. Are not all those veins within about four townships lying together, the same townships which in the Fifty-first Congress were sought to be set apart by the bill which the President vetoed?

Mr. CANNON. No man living knows. There is nobody who can answer the question. That whole region of country is permeated with minerals of various characters. The people who locate upon the veins and are now working the mines described by the Senator from Wisconsin naturally supposed that they had found the utmost richness; that they had found a substance which would be worth twice "its weight in gold," if I may be allowed to use that expression. They found, however, when they came to the practical operation of the mine that the physical disadvantages surrounding the production of the gilsonite were such that there was comparatively little profit to them, and the only result achieved in the main was the reduction of the price of the commodity to the consumers of the United States.

In every respect this mineral land compared upon exact line with all the other mineral lands in the United States. The mineral is discovered by prospecting. It is found by following those traces which appear on the surface, as in the case of other minerals. Sometimes the amount possible to be found within a location would, perhaps, not be sufficient to justify the expenditure for operating, exactly as in the case of other minerals. Certainly the hardships to be endured, the physical conditions to be overcome in approaching these deposits are as great as those which obtain in the average of cases when men pursue mineral wealth within the public domain of the United States. In every respect in which it is possible to make comparison, these lands are exactly as other lands are, and should be treated as such until that time when the Government shall choose to reverse the policy of years and adopt a new method of dealing with those things which belong to all the people of the United States.

I fancy that the gentlemen who are opposing the opening of the Uncompahgre Reservation will scarcely propose a bill for the Government of the United States to offer those lands to the highest bidder, or to go into partnership with any private individual or corporation for their operation under a royalty.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to say to the Senator that that was the nature of the bill which was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs when I was a member of the Fifty-second Congress. It provided for just those things.

Mr. CANNON. The effort was soon abandoned, and notwithstanding the fact that this question has been pending before the Senate as a live issue for nearly one year, no attempt has been made to renew it. I had a desire only to meet the question of discovery as it was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The principal issue involved in this question, however, does not relate either to the vast value of the deposits or to their discovery. It relates to the policy which the Government of the United States shall pursue toward its citizens and toward its public domain. I will be as ready as the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin to vote that the resources and natural opportunities existing in the United States shall be utilized under Government control for the equal, exact, and just benefit of all the people of the United States, but I will not be ready to do by accident that which, if it shall ever be done, should be accomplished by design, and after most careful consideration by the Senate, the House, and the Executive.

This would be a reversal of a policy that has been thought to be most effective in the past. The high rewards which sometimes and in infrequent cases accrue to those who pursue the quest for fortune in the mountains of the West, have induced a great many of our citizens to labor to the enrichment of the country, and very often with the result of impoverishing themselves. Under no other system, so it has appeared to the lawmakers of the country, could it have been possible to obtain that strong endeavor which has been required to develop the gold, the silver, the lead, the coal, the iron, the asphaltum, the gilsonite lands of this country, in order that the commodities there existing in profusion in some instances could come forth for the benefit of the country.

The Senator from Wisconsin used an expression intimating that if these lands were opened under existing law they would be lost to the Government. In fact, the Senator used those words, in commenting upon a bill which was formerly pending here. Mr. President, if they were opened, they would be a gain to the Government, and not a loss to it. They are now absolutely lost in the practical sense of that word, not only to the Government, but to the people. A brief recital of the location of these Indians upon the reservation will indicate more clearly what I mean by this assertion.

In 1882 this tract of land was set apart by Executive order, and to it were removed a band of Ute Indians from Colorado, 956 in number. The area of that reservation is such that every Indian buck, squaw, and papoose has 2,132 acres in this domain. By the report of the commission, which spent $16,000 in an examination into the character of the lands, it is shown that there is not enough agricultural land within that whole domain of 2,000,000 acres to supply an allotment in severalty to any considerable number of the 956 Indians. So long as the lands remain as they are now, this great mineral wealth, which is practically the only value that the land has, is lost to commerce, is lost to the Government of the United States, is lost to our people.

The Senator states that the operation of one mine of gilsonite reduced the price of that commodity in the markets of the United States from $160 a ton to $80 a ton. The true value, then, of this property to the Government and the people is to have it opened and utilized. One might as well draw a veil in front of the sun as to keep by Executive inaction these lands and their great deposits reserved from the use and ownership of the people of this country.

I am not in favor, sir, of having these lands go into the possession of any monopoly or corporation, and that is why I insist that the present laws of the United States on this subject should be executed. Those laws have been in operation for more than a generation. Every temptation for monopoly has existed, but under the wise system and under the beneficence of nature, which has scattered her valuable gifts in such a way as not to permit one man to get in a compact body any very great area of mineral-bearing land, we have had constant competition in the production of coal and iron, gold and silver. In this particular case the result will be the same.

But if the policy proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin should ever find proponents numerous and bold enough to have it enacted into law in the United States, and if these lands should be leased to the highest bidder, it does not require even the learning of the Senator from Wisconsin and his wide experience in public affairs to know that every acre of the lands leased by the Government would be in the hands of an absolute monopoly. Some great corporation would be formed to obtain the leases from the Government; it would not want competition; and after it had secured the particular tracts desired for the operation of its business it would overbid other smaller operators or corporations, and no one else would secure any of the land; we then would have the very result which the Senator from Wisconsin is so desirous of averting.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he thinks they will do it any less when they can obtain the absolute ownership of the lands at $5 an acre?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly they will do it less. Under the law as it now stands no man can take more than two of the gilsonite or asphaltum or elaterite claims.

Mr. PEFFER. How much would that be?

Mr. CANNON. Twenty acres.

Mr. PEFFER. How many claims?

Mr. CANNON. Ten acres to a claim. In the aggregate no man could have more than 20 acres.

Mr. VILAS. If he has located 1,500 feet on the length of the lode.

Mr. CANNON. That is the general law, but there is a special provision concerning these particular claims which, of course, would have to be obeyed in any entries which were made concerning them, unless Congress should repeal the special provision.

Mr. President, if these lands lie as portrayed in the beautiful picture drawn by the Senator from Wisconsin, perhaps just as soon as men located upon the lands they would sell to some corporation at an enormous figure. But no corporation will buy any of these lands until their value is demonstrated. In the meantime there will be constant effort on the part of locators to show the value of the possessions which they have secured by their entry on the public domain, and thus we will have the very competition which is so desired by the Senator from Wisconsin and by myself.

I am somewhat conversant with the discovery described to the Senator from Wisconsin by the gentleman who has found a solvent. I am aware that that gentleman imagines he has found a great fortune. I am also aware that he remained in Washington for weeks (perhaps he is here now) with the expectation that this attempt to open the reservation would be defeated. He was even so well equipped with information that he stated to me the exact manner in which it would be defeated. He then purposed to secure from the Secretary of the Interior, whose ear he thought he could get, a lease of the elaterite or gilsonite or asphaltum land. With his solvent and with an exclusive lease he would have an absolute monopoly, and perhaps his dream of millions, as the quick result of his discovery of a solvent and of his influence in securing a lease, might be realized.

I believe, Mr. President, that the people of the United States desire now to have operated all those natural resources of the country which can lessen the price of what are called raw materials, so that our local industries may have an impetus given to them. In these beds of asphaltum and gilsonite are the bases for carriage paints and varnishes, for all of those products described by the Senator from Wisconsin. An opening of the reservation at this time and the location upon these claims and their operation will project at once into the industrial field of this country a resource, a raw material, a commodity which may be made the basis for innumerable industries.

I have addressed myself somewhat briefly to the merit of this question, to the practical question involved, and not to the point of order, concerning which doubtless those who are better informed from longer service in this body as to the manner in which the Senate observes its own rules will speak in their chosen time. I have observed that rules are never invoked here; that points of order are never raised except when all other resources have failed. I presume that the Senate will do in this case as it has done in every other since I became a member of this body—it will decide upon this question according to its own sweet will, regardless of rules. But it seems to me that if in this case, as in every other case it has done, the Senate shall decide on the merit, it should, so far as lies in the power of this body, take immediate action and open these lands to settlement and location by individual citizens of the United States. To longer withhold them is a cruelty; it is a barbarism; it is not worthy of this nation in this nineteenth century.

These lands, with their wonderful wealth, have been known to possess these deposits for many years past. Civilization needs them. Every time it is proposed to open this reservation, so that all the citizens of the United States, without distinction, may have access to them, there is opposition on the ground that they would pass into the hands of a monopoly. The Senator from Wisconsin holds that it would be unfair to open them because they contain deposits of unusual value. The Camp of Mercur, in Utah contains deposits of unusual value. Gold is found there in vast quantities and in a most unusual formation, so unusual that nothing like it was ever known in the history of mining operations in this country. I never heard that because of the vast value or the unusual character of the deposit it was wise for the Government to refuse to sell those lands to individual locators. Every day the Interior Department is engaged in the examination of filings upon such lands.

Mr. President, I sincerely trust that the Senate will find it within the judgment of a majority to order, so far as this body can, that these valuable deposits shall not longer be lost to the Government and the people of the United States; that we will not leave this matter to the danger which now menaces it; because, if we shall not have these lands entered by the individual citizen, but shall lease them or sell them to the highest bidder, the Government and the people will lose more, ten times over, than they will gain by any royalty. If the Government shall go into partnership with any corporation, deriving a royalty, the people of the United States who consume the commodity will pay the entire amount of that royalty, for the monopoly which will have control of the product will add to the price all that it has to pay to the Government for royalty.

There is one thing more to be stated as a reason why the Senate should take action in this matter. A specific statute exists upon the books of this country requiring the reservation to be opened upon the fulfillment of certain matters now absolutely accomplished. The former Secretary of the Interior, notwithstanding the mandatory character of that law, chose to recommend another policy to Congress for reasons best known to himself, and that, too, after there had been given by the executive department of the Government a positive assurance that by a given date the reservations would be opened. It is a very bad precedent, sir, to permit any officer of the Government to violate a law, or to refuse to carry out a law, and then put into execution his pet idea as to how the law should be framed. It simply encourages every man who has some plan of his own against the plan of Congress to deliberately refuse to carry out the provisions of a statute, realizing that there will rise in the Senate, and perhaps in the House, some distinguished men who will fight against the execution of the law and for the carrying out of the plan or method proposed by the officer who refused to obey the law.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question, with his permission. In view of the fact that the newspapers this morning announce that the President of the United States has withdrawn most of the land from the public domain in the West, would it not be advisable to let a little of it be thrown open to mineral entry?

Mr. CANNON. I agree with the implied comment of the Senator from Washington. I am informed that there was yesterday withdrawn from entry upon the public domain of the United States some 21,000,000 acres of land by Executive order, thrown into forest reservations, with apparently not the slightest knowledge on the part of the officer who designated the forest reservations as to whether there was any timber upon them larger than a jack-rabbit bush. I know that in Utah, where a forest reservation was designated, a great deal of the land comprised would not raise anything larger than sagebrush. There is no forest in the major part of Utah. I agree with the Senator from Washington that if there be any lands which we can throw open to mineral entry in the United States we ought to give the individual citizen a right to go upon them and enter them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the pending amendment in order?

Mr. VILAS. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. I do not see him in his seat, and for the present I withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and withhold my vote.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROACH (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. ROACH. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. TURPIE. Then I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUAY (after having voted in the affirmative). Is the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] recorded as voting?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. QUAY. Then I am compelled to withdraw my vote, having a general pair with him.

Mr. BURROWS. I should like to inquire whether the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. CARTER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. Observing by the recapitulation that he has not voted, I desire to withdraw my vote. [A pause.] As I understand a quorum has not voted, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]; but in view of the fact that a quorum has not voted, I will cast my vote, and cast it "yea."

Mr. GEAR. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—31.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate decides that the amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments to controvert one or two of the positions which have been so ably taken by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. We have been dramatically told that this amendment was a proposition to take from the Treasury of the United States from seven and a half million to ten million dollars, although I think a careful review of the circumstances, or even the most casual review of the circumstances, will show that this amendment takes nothing whatever from the Treasury of the United States, or from the United States in any sense.

First, I think my friend is mistaken a little about some of the early facts connected with this so-called reservation. I wish to recall them briefly. The Uncompahgre Utes had lands in Colorado. They lived in that State. In 1880, in consequence of a rebellion and massacre committed by them, a new treaty was framed, by which they sold their lands to the United States and received pay for them. Their money lies now in the Treasury of the United States largely, from which they receive an income. It was also agreed at that time that they should remove from their reservation and that they should occupy lands, not, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, in the then Territory of Utah, but should occupy lands in Colorado, near where the city of Grand Junction is now situated, fertile land, valuable land, and if they were entitled to the present use of any lands whatsoever, it was those in Colorado, not in Utah. They went, however, to Utah, instead of to those lands at Grand Junction. They moved to the premises now occupied by them, and remained there. Those premises were not an Indian reservation. The Indians have no right there. They were public lands of the United States, which had theretofore been declared open to exploration and purchase and to location by the miners of the United States.

In 1880, when those Indians were placed upon those particular lands, these mines were opened to location. They were a part of the lands which the general offer of the United States has been made in regard to, that any miner could go upon them and, if he could find mineral there, could make a location. The Indians remained on those lands from 1880 to 1882 without any sign of right. They were in a certain sense trespassers there. They were not invited there by the Government; they were not citizens there for the purpose of making homes or locations in the ordinary sense of the word, but they were there and remained there until 1882 without any sign of right at that time. Two years after they were there the President of the United States made what is called an Executive order, setting aside those lands for their immediate use, not taking them from the market, not excepting them from lands where mineral locations could be made, not saying that they were not subject to entry by other locators on public lands in the ordinary way—I doubt if the President could do that, at all events he did not do it—but simply permitted them to remain at that place, and appointed an agent to look after them at the locality known as the Uncompahgre Reservation. They have remained there ever since and in that same condition until these mines were discovered some time perhaps in 1890 or in that vicinity—1889 or 1888, perhaps, they were discovered.

At that time it was thought desirable that the title of those Indians should be quieted, although they had no title, so that their possessions should be disposed of peaceably. Miners went on the lands and made location of claims, and I think that they were valid locations made in the ordinary forms known to the mineral laws.

In 1894 the act of Congress was passed, to which the Senator from Wisconsin has made reference, from which it appears, as read by the Senator from Wisconsin, that it was not the intention that those lands should be reserved from sale, because he has shown to us most clearly that the clause which was proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], that the land should be reserved from sale, was stricken out, and that clause was left out intentionally. It was the intention, then, of the act of 1894 that those lands should be open to mineral entry and to other entry. They were declared to be open as soon as the allotments could be made. The expression of the statute is that it shall be the duty of the President to open by proclamation to entry as soon as those allotments can be made. This language is mandatory upon the President. He was to obey the law. The will of the people was then expressed that these lands should be used for mineral purposes and for other entries as soon as those allotments could be arranged. That was the only necessity that they were under before the lands could be utilized by citizens of the United States.

Since 1894 locations have been made. Much time has been spent by the Senator from Wisconsin to show that these locations were not in the pursuit of a new and original discovery. Mr. President, it is not necessary that a locator should discover a mine in the same sense in which a patentee discovers a new process. The word "discover" is not used in the statute at all. The lands of the United States are open to exploration and purchase. It makes no difference who discovers the mine, he who first locates it, in pursuance of the statute, obtains the title. It is no more necessary to discover the mine in the sense of being the first discoverer than it is to discover valuable agricultural lands. It is not the man who first gazes upon beautiful meadows who has the prior right to them, but he who first makes an entry pursuant to law. So with mineral land; he who first makes the entry upon it has the right to it. This statute of 1894 opens these lands, I take it, to those who may make such location; it opens them in pursuance of the general system of law, so that anyone who should come and care to make a location should have the prior right.

I have been less earnest about this case because it has seemed to me that under that law the right of the miners had been protected. I think all they have to do is to apply for their location; and if anybody interferes with their possession—any Indian agent or any officer of the Government—to bring suit against him. Under similar circumstances, in the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, since we discussed this question last year, United States Judge Hanford, the district judge for the State of Washington, has held that on that Colville Reservation the mineral entries which were made before the final proclamation of the President opening the reservation were valid mineral entries. Hence, I take it that those who have gone upon those lands in the Uncompahgre mining district and made valuable mineral entries or lawful mineral entries will be protected.

Our friend from Wisconsin has said, however, that these peculiar forms of mineral, these hydrocarbons, are not subject to be entered under the mineral-land laws the same as gold and silver. He has expressly stated to us that the mineral-land laws do not apply in the case of elaterite and the other minerals we are now discussing. If that is true, there can be no objection to this amendment. It is not proposed to change the mining law by extending it in any way. If they are now open to entry under the mineral laws, then there is no harm done by the amendment. I should take issue, however, with the learned lawyer upon that subject. The statute says that all lands may be located which bear gold and silver or other valuable minerals, and all lands containing valuable deposits are within its purview. Another section of that act says if these are valuable minerals and valuable deposits they are subject to the mineral laws of the United States, and I take it the locator has the right to them, unless there should be some exception made, which has not been made in the general law, with regard to this particular class of deposits.

Mr. President, one word further on that subject. Why should there be any exception made? The learned Senator from Wisconsin has spent much time to show that these veins are more easily discovered than gold and silver veins, and that they possess a more uniform width and are of greater length; but, after all, when you come to hear the opinion of Mr. Walcott, it was shown that they widen and contract; that the greatest width was 18 feet, and that they contract, but what the minimum is is not stated anywhere in the report. Other veins are of a width as great as 18 feet. Many gold veins are greater than 18 feet at a maximum width. That is not their greatest width at the widest point, yet they may contract down, "pinch out," as it is called, to a mere seam, barely traceable to the eye, and for aught we know or for all the report states, those veins possess a similar quality. The report does show that they are fissures in the earth's surface, like gold and silver veins, fissures to be exploited and explored in the same class exactly as gold and silver mines are. For that reason it seems to me eminently proper that the general rules of laws should apply to them. If they do not, as I said before, no harm can come. If they do, the locators have the right.

But, Mr. President, the argument of the learned Senator went further; it went away beyond the Uncompahgre Reservation, beyond Utah. It reached out into the public policy of the United States on the subject of the land laws. He has said there is no reason why the United States should not share by royalty in this vast wealth of deposits. If that is true of gilsonite, it is true of gold; and if it is true of gold, it is true of all the other minerals which we possess. In other words, the Senator from Wisconsin by the course he indicates under the amendment proposes that the United States shall recede from its time-honored policy of holding the public lands of the United States in trust for the settler and the locator, and shall keep them as a source of revenue, to be sold, to be utilized, to make a royalty out of them, as he calls it. Not only that proposition is to be asserted in this single case of gilsonite, but, carried to its proper and logical extreme, it would include valuable agricultural lands. Why should we sell the valuable meadows, the beautiful sites, the points where the best farms can be located to the homesteader for nothing? Why should we allow them to take them for the paltry sum of $1.25 an acre? If they can be sold, the United States might in selecting good premises, good ground, acquire much more money by selling such land to the highest bidder. That is the argument the Senator from Wisconsin here is indulging in. It is the argument of the Bourbon of the past, it is the argument which looks back to the past when the lands of the United States were used in that way and for that purpose; but the argument for the last thirty or forty years has been that the best use we could make of the public lands of the United States was to encourage the settlers, to encourage the locators, to encourage those who were building up this country. We are seeking, and have sought during these forty years, to use the public lands for a greater and better purpose than merely to squeeze a few dollars in royalty out of those who have discovered our mines or those who are working our lands.

For that reason, Mr. President, it seems to me that now is a favorable opportunity to repeat again our old-time policy. We had it discussed here the other day on a free-homestead bill. It was sought then to put the lands in one of the neighboring Territories or States up to the highest bidder, to compel the homesteader to pay the price of valuable lands for the privilege of settling on a homestead. This Senate repeated again the policy, which had always been that of this country, to protect the homesteader and the settler, and to say to him, "You shall not be called upon to pay anything for occupying and improving lands which have been those of the United States; take them, and when you improve them they are yours, because you have added more wealth to the whole country by improving them than you could have added by paying a few paltry dollars into the Treasury." So in regard to these mines or any other mines; their wealth is not in sale, their wealth is not that which can be reached out and disposed of by the sheriff or the community around it, but it is a wealth to be manufactured; it is a wealth to be discovered by working the mine. These mines may not turn out profitable to those who operate them. There may come out of them the $10,000,000 which the Senator from Wisconsin sees so greatly before his eyes, and yet the man who takes it out may not make one penny in the operation. It will cost him, very likely, $10,000,000 to do it. In this very case we are discussing, before these mines can be operated or utilized, a railroad must be built through the wilderness, where there is nothing else for it to carry but this particular product; a road of at least 100 miles in length must be built; and when he has built the railroad and bought the mines and worked them, if he makes anything he is very successful. He is simply going to-day to undertake one of those great efforts which are common to this country, which have brought success to our nation, but which have not generally brought success to the person who has first been enterprising enough to do the work.

This is simply a proceeding to develop one of our great mining industries. Will the Senate of the United States say, "We will recede from our time-honored policy and see if we can not get a royalty," or will they say, "We will move onward and hold these properties in trust for those who have legally located them?"

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the establishment of the policy to keep the mines open to exploration and development has been from the beginning a favorite policy with the people of the West. A little over thirty years ago an attempt was made in Congress to have the mineral lands surveyed, sold at auction, and to use the Federal Army to protect the purchasers. After about twenty years had elapsed, during which time the miners had been left without legislation and left free to explore and develop the mines, they made rules and regulations for their own government, and those rules and regulations were adopted by the courts and by the legislatures of the various States. At the time of this scheme of selling the mines for the purpose of furnishing revenue was inaugurated and urged with great energy in both Houses of Congress there was a system of local laws which had been molded into shape by the decisions of the courts of all the States and Territories of the West after a very hard struggle, but as soon as the members of the two Houses of Congress had come to understand what the system was, what was desired, what was the condition of the people of the West, and what had been done, they adopted the system now established, which has been in operation for over thirty years. It has worked well and the people are satisfied with it. There may be some imperfections in the system, but as a whole it has been very beneficent.

Before I would vote to make any change in the system, before I would vote to allow the Government to become a partner in any way or a lessor in any of these operations, I should want to see a very strong case made.

I am confident that no harm can come from the system. Let these mines and any other mines be taken and developed by the people. Those who know the difficulties the miners have to encounter, the obstacles they have to overcome, will willingly allow such of them as may find something good and who makes a success of their enterprise to enjoy it. It is by the success of the few that the many are encouraged to continue to develop that country, and out of their efforts States have grown up. We have now States from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which we should not have had under any other system.

Now, I ask Congress not to vary the system. I have seen no reason which satisfies me that this particular case ought to be an exception. It is said that a monopoly will grow up under it. We have heard of monopolies of mining claims from the beginning; but we find there is not much in that. The expense of opening and developing a mine, the vast expenditures of money for improvements which are made, wipe out your monopoly, because all mines are speedily exhausted. Mines containing precious metals do not constitute a permanent property; and I do not believe there will be a monopoly in the mining of this peculiar mineral. The mines are worked out rapidly, when the monopoly ceases; but while the mining is going on great benefit is realized by the community at large, by those who furnish supplies, machinery, etc., as well as by the laboring men. It would be a good thing if, in this particular case, somebody could go to that country and build a railroad and make a lot of money. It would set prospectors at work all over the country to find other similar deposits, and much good would be accomplished by it. If you are going to take away from the men who find these minerals the lands containing them, you take away the motive of others to search for mines. Suppose the mines had been sold at auction when it was supposed the military had been sent there to protect the purchasers; prospecting would have ceased and your mineral products would have been merely nominal now. The great mines which have been found since have produced minerals, gold and silver and copper and lead, which have been so advantageous to the country. It is because they are open for prospecting, for exploration and development, and the man who finds them has them, that others have been encouraged to make similar explorations; but take away the motive by establishing a different policy and prospecting will cease. Besides, the Government will never make anything out of any speculation. It is not the business of the Government; it is the business of those who have enterprise enough to go into the rough mountains and endure the privations and expend the money which may be necessary to develop the mineral resources of this character.

I do not think the case here presented is any exception, and I hope those who undertake to develop that section will have great success. If they succeed, they will find other similar prospectors, and we shall have good results from this discovery.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire simply one word upon the pending amendment. To begin, I must confess my utter inability to understand or comprehend the opposition to the pending amendment. It involves, as I understand, the taking of not one dollar from the Treasury of the United States. If that could be urged against the amendment, I could understand in part the opposition. It involves no point of high moral principle of dealing with the Indians, because the Senator from Wisconsin, with all his ardor against this amendment, does not for one moment put it upon the ground that it is harmful or will be injurious to any Indian tribe or individual on the face of the earth.

Not only am I unable to comprehend the opposition to this amendment, Mr. President, but I am unable to comprehend that wall of opposition which every Western Senator runs up against in this Chamber whenever a Western proposition is presented here for consideration. I am unable to comprehend the animus which set forth the Executive action, of which Western Senators were first informed by papers upon their desks this morning, that the Executive of this Government, without, in my judgment, authority of law duly given to him, has withdrawn from the public-land States over 20,000.000 acres of land from the Government domain; drawn away from the public domain lands upon which there are vast mineral deposits; drawn from the public domain lands upon which we had hoped to plant happy and prosperous homes; drawn from the public domain in my own State, in one lump, over a million acres of land, ostensibly for forest-reservation purposes, when from personal observation I know there is not enough timber on it to build a four-rail fence around the tract reserved. I am unable to comprehend these things.

I see no reason under the shining sun why this amendment should not be adopted. It opens up a tract of land which, according to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, will pour forth immeasurable wealth into this land of ours. Well, I am for that. According to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, instead of having this wealth given here, there, in a thousand gentle rivulets into a thousand homes, to a thousand prospectors, he would center it all in one corporation deriving its right to mine the mineral of the United States on leasehold from the United States. Did it occur to the Senator from Wisconsin that he was treading dangerously near the ground occupied by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and other Senators advocating the Government ownership of railroads and other things?

Mr. VILAS. I should judge that the Senator from Wyoming had not heard a word that I have said.

Mr. CLARK. I did; and the Senator from Wisconsin, in answer to a question of mine, said that he believed it was right for the Government to own these gilsonite mines and to lease them out under royalty. If that does not come about as near Populism as the average Democrat can get, I should like to know where you would find it.

Mr. VILAS. The Government owns them now, does it not?

Mr. CLARK. The Government does not own them as a Government. The body of the great American people own the lands upon this continent, and to follow the lead of the Senator from Wisconsin, learned though he be, patriotic though he may be, with all the experience he acquired while for four years in control of the Land Department of this Government, would be to turn over the lands of the Government to great companies, holding its agricultural lands in great monopolies, owning its mineral lands. To that I hope the Senate of the United States neither to-day nor at any time will ever consent.

I do not believe that a single reason can be urged why the brawny American prospector, who has poured into the lap of the eastern part of this nation more money than they have produced in all other ways combined, should not go on the Uncompahgre Reservation and open up still new fields of wealth and industry. There is no argument that can be made against it from precedent established in the land laws of the United States. There is not an argument that can be raised against it which in itself is based on the highest benefit to the American people. There is not an argument that can be raised against it that it would injure an Indian or an Indian tribe in any of their treaty or other rights. If there be an argument against it, I can say that I honestly desire it to be made. While this question is small in itself, while it does not appeal to Senators east of the Rocky Mountains, it does appeal to me.

The principle of this amendment is such that there ought to be no hesitation on the part of the Senate in adopting it. I do not believe it is legally necessary. I believe with the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] that a citizen of the United States can to-day go upon that reservation, stake out his claim, and hold it in spite of all the rules of the Indian Department, or the Land Department, or of the Secretary of the Interior. I believe that he has that right; but, alas for the Western prospector, alas for the man who takes his life in his hands and goes into those mountains, the Interior Department in its wisdom has for years overridden all the law that has ever been enacted by Congress or enunciated by the courts of the nation.

We have had an illustration of that in my State within the last ninety days. When the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] was Secretary of the Interior, under his direction and under his decision in my own and other States patents were prepared for oil lands under the placer-mining acts. His Department then held, as the courts had held and as the Senator from Utah has stated, that oil being a valuable deposit, land containing it could be entered under the placer-mining acts of the United States. For seventeen years the Interior Department held that to be the law, and under that law it had operated. Vast tracts of that land last summer were held under the placer-mining laws of the United States, when one fine morning, without any warning being given, like a flash of lightning from a clear sky, the Associated Press dispatches said that the Interior Department on the day before had decided in a case before it for adjudication that no man could take petroleum lands under the placer-mining laws of the United States.

The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] well knows the havoc that was wrought in his State by that decision. I know the havoc that was wrought in my State by that decision.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WHITE. With his permission, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming whether it is not a fact that hundreds of patents were issued by the Interior Department for petroleum lands upon the theory that such lands came within the purview of the placer-mining law? I will also attract his attention to the fact that the construction of the word "mineral" by the Department lately made, I think in the month of October or September of last year, would give the title to much valuable mineral land—that is, land in which there is petroleum—to various railroad companies, because if petroleum is not included within the word "mineral," then manifestly those lands pass to the railroad companies.

So the decision which the Senator criticises would not only deprive of their lands those who have located placer-mining claims and whose claims were jumped by alleged homesteaders, but it would manifestly affect favorably to the railroads a vast quantity of land. I believe that the decision to which he alludes is now covered by a motion for a rehearing. Hence, its ultimate decision is now uncertain.

Mr. CLARK. If it is not covered by the motion for a rehearing, it is covered by an act of Congress which has been passed and signed within thirty days, and probably without the knowledge of those concerned in rendering the decision in the Land Department.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that that act of course can not affect the railroad grants, because if the construction of the word "mineral" made by the Department is valid, then it follows that the railroad grants covered that land, and it was not subject to divestiture by act of Congress. Hence the additional evil of the decision.

Mr. CLARK. There is no question on earth but that the Senator from California is correct in his statement. For twenty years nearly—for more than seventeen years at least—it had been held by the Department, and during the time when the Senator from Wisconsin presided over it with great ability, that petroleum lands were mineral lands within the meaning of the placer-mining acts of Congress, and hundreds of men have staked their all in such claims. Hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars have gone into the development of that country.

Some of the lands have been patented. Others were held under the ordinary tenure of the mining claim. Still others had been filed upon. But all over that country, by the mere ipse dixit of the Secretary of the Interior, on that October morning every patent went flying into the air. Every dollar of property in those mineral claims was left unsettled.

Mr. President, it was a cause of great surprise, because nobody knew that any question had ever been made or was sought to be raised; and when we came to run the matter down, the fact was found, as stated by the Senator from California, that within recent years great oil deposits have been discovered in the southern and other parts of California within the limits of railroad land grants. According to the terms of the railroad land grant, mineral land did not pass with the grant. All other lands did. If petroleum should be considered as a mineral by the Department of the Interior, the land entered for the petroleum would not pass with the grant. The grant was immensely valuable. So, on a case of some sort, and the Lord only knows what, a decision is brought forth from the Department of the Interior that petroleum is not a mineral within the meaning of the law, and it throws the land into the hands of the Pacific companies, it throws it into the hands of the land-grant railroads. It not only takes it away from the prospector, it not only takes it away from the individual holder, it not only takes it away from the individual miner, as the rejection of this amendment may take it away, but it throws it directly into the hands of the great corporations who have already waxed fat upon the bounty of this Government.

Mr. President, I should like, if anybody can advance one argument, to hear some good reason why the committee amendment should not be adopted. I am seeking light. I confess I am prejudiced in this matter. I do not believe that the people in the West have got what they are entitled to, and I am not modest in saying it. We are crude. We are undesirable States and unsafe Commonwealths. I know that, because we have been told of it often enough. But I believe, as to public-land matters, that the final solution of all such questions should be left with the people of the very States in which the public lands are situated. The ignorance that exists in both Houses of Congress upon the true situation of the public land in the West is surprising; it is amazing. It is not because we are more intelligent, but because we see with our own eyes. We know exactly the condition of affairs, and I doubt whether the Senator from Wisconsin, with all his learning, with all the geological reports he has read, with all the special reports he has read upon this gilsonite field, can tell whether a gilsonite vein runs up and down, like that, or flatwise, like that [indicating].

I have spoken a great while longer than I intended. I am anxious upon this matter because it is a sample of what we have to contend with. There is no reason why the amendment should be obstructed, while there is every reason why it should pass.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, accepting the statements of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] as true, and no doubt they are, the people of the West have been treated very badly. I do not think anybody can withhold his assent from those statements after listening to the very interesting accounts of the grievances they have suffered. But after all, what has that to do with the particular question before the Senate? It seems from all that I have been able to collect in the course of the debate that there is on a particular reservation a tract of land which has a peculiar value. It has a peculiar value from discoveries already made. I understand it is not, as the Senator from Nevada intimates, that this is open to exploration or that exploration is necessary for the discovery of the peculiar substance which gives value to the land. I do not understand that to be the case. But the simple statement of the case appears to be that there has already been discovered qualities that are peculiar to this particular district, not found anywhere else, and the proper subject of inquiry then is, What shall the Government of the United States do with this reservation, in view of its exceedingly great value? Shall the United States Government give it away?

The Senator from Utah discoursed eloquently with respect to agricultural lands. He thinks that the logic of the position of the Senator from Wisconsin would lead us to the conclusion that the Government should retain the ownership of all these valuable lands and have them worked on the principle of a royalty. But that is not in harmony with the policy of the Government. Is not this case somewhat like any other property of the Government which has an accidental value? I suppose it sometimes happens that the United States owns property near large cities and a peculiar value is given to that property by its proximity to a large city and because of the uses to which it may be devoted in connection with the business and commerce of New York or Philadelphia or Chicago. It has this peculiar value from peculiar circumstances.

Now, what shall the Government do with that land? It is not referable to the illustration of agricultural land. It is not like mineral lands in the mountains; they may contain infinite riches, but the region must be explored and the wealth must be discovered. Here is a case where the lands are known to be valuable; the mines have been discovered, or the substance has been discovered, which gives value to the lands. Why should those lands be an exception to the rule where the United States owns property that has peculiar value growing out of circumstances already well understood? Why should that property be given away? That seems to be the only proposition here.

The Senator from Wyoming says he is anxious to hear some reason why this land should be made an exception to the general rule. The case is of itself exceptional. It is not within any rule in relation to the general property of the United States or in relation to mining lands or agricultural lands. We know these lands are valuable. We know, too, that we may tickle the soil of the fertile prairies and it will bring crops. We know that the mountains contain gold and silver, and precious stones, if you will; but those mountains must be explored. Here is a case where we know the value of the property. We know that it is circumscribed in extent; and why should that which is exceptional in itself be brought within the general rules that apply to the disposition of the national domain?

It seems to me that is all there is in it. Senators have sometimes spoken of the effect of the principle of leases, which, by the way, I would not by any means prefer. I would prefer that this exceptional property, circumscribed in limit, should be offered for sale to the highest bidder. Is it any more likely to pass into the hands of a monopoly from that consideration than from any other? Do not Senators know that substitutes are obtained for the entries of lands? From the history of the older States we know that men have procured homesteads under the dictation of men of large wealth or of corporations. We know that they have gone on those lands and have secured the lands and have been paid for their services, paid to secure homesteads on the lands. There is no way that I know of to hinder monopolies, and this allowance of an entry of land will just as certainly insure the monopoly of these valuable lands as any other method.

There is but one mode by which we can avoid monopoly, and that is to put up the property at public sale and let the highest bidder take it, and that will produce, as I am told by the Senator from Wisconsin, a large sum of money to be placed in the Treasury of the United States. If Senators will tell me of any mode by which men of money will not acquire these lands, or that men of small means will acquire them, and hold them, and enjoy them—if any scheme can be devised by which that result may be secured, I will readily concur; but Senators know as well as I do, because they know human nature, that these lands will pass into the hands of monopolists, of men who will make the largest amount of money out of them. With the knowledge of these valuable deposits, with the knowledge that these lands are immensely valuable, with the further knowledge that they can not be kept out of the hands of monopolists, the simply short method is to put them up at public auction and let the longest pole knock down the persimmon.

Mr. CANNON. Before the Senator from Illinois takes his seat, may I ask him a question?

Mr. PALMER. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. Gold has been discovered in the same Uncompahgre Reservation. Is the Senator from Illinois in favor of putting up the gold lands of the Uncompahgre Reservation to auction and selling them to the highest bidder?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly not. If a mine had been discovered on those lands, I should then favor the sale of the gold mine to the highest bidder. If the mine had been discovered, if it was known to be there, and to be rich and profitable, I would be in favor of selling it.

Mr. CANNON. The same knowledge is had with regard to gold as is had with regard to asphaltum and gilsonite.

Mr. PALMER. Then it will bring——

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator will pardon me, there is an assumption all the way through this debate on the part of the opponents of this particular amendment that these deposits of gilsonite, asphaltum, and elaterite are thoroughly well known, are thoroughly explored, are within certain circumscribed areas, that their value is ascertained, when their value must depend upon exploration and prospecting, from development, exactly as would be the case in the matter of a gold discovery. Nobody knows anything about it. There is but one instance, I will say to the Senator with his permission, in which there has been any demonstration of the extent of any one of the deposits, and that is most unfortunate in its results for the opponents of the proposed amendment, or those who oppose it on the ground stated by the Senator from Illinois. The Senator from Wisconsin himself recounted the disadvantages which had been met by the people who are operating the only mine of gilsonite or asphaltum which is in operation.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that I read extracts from the report of the Secretary of the Interior showing that the Geological Survey maintained by the United States has explored all these various veins for several miles in length, giving their width and distance, and that they extended to the depth of a thousand feet or more?

Mr. CANNON. With the permission of the Senator from Illinois, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to what depth the exploration of the Geological Survey went in making this examination? How many shafts were sunk along a given vein?

Mr. VILAS. This is what the Geological Survey says:

> The amount of gilsonite in the region examined is enormous, for the depth of the fissures, though unknown, can not but be considerable—from 1,000 to several thousand feet—and, with their length and width, is indicative of phenomenal yield.

So it was hardly discovered by these people.

Mr. CANNON. Those generalities do not indicate the precise point asserted by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Illinois. These veins, so the report says, go to an unknown depth. Their value is "enormous." I have here a report from the Geological Survey on the Cripple Creek mining district in Colorado in which practically the same statements are made. Precisely as much indication is given of enormous value. A map is made showing the extent and character of the veins of gold in the Cripple Creek mining district, and nobody would pretend for one instant that under the custom which has prevailed those lands, with all that knowledge given to the public, should be withdrawn from public entry and sold to the highest bidder. The words "enormous" and "unknown" are the common words used in describing any tract of land containing minerals.

Mr. PALMER. If those lands had been acquired by private parties, or any considerable portion of them had already been acquired by private parties, as seems to have been the case at Cripple Creek, it would be different; but I submit to the Senator from Utah this plain question: If it were known that there was in this limited district the valuable product to which we have had attention called, and that in addition there was on that land an already discovered mine of gold of fabulous wealth, of enormous productiveness, would he be in favor of opening it to private entry?

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator will permit me to answer his question by a statement that is larger than a mere answer, I will say, with all due respect to the Senator, that the mistake into which he falls is this: Here is prospectively a great deposit, and the Senator speaks of it as a mine. It can not be a mine. It is merely a prospect. There can exist on the Uncompahgre Reservation no mines under the circumstances. They are deposits. A mine is a thoroughly prospected, developed deposit of wealth. It becomes a mine only by the expenditure of money upon it. In the hypothetical case presented by the Senator, whether, if it was a gold mine, I would be in favor of its entry by a private party, I will say that I should be in favor of its entry by the man who had made it a mine. It can not be one until human energy, human skill, human bravery, has developed an almost valueless deposit into a mine.

Mr. PALMER. The theory upon which I proceed is that we know all that has been reported by the officials whose duty it is to know and to report the facts of the case. I do not know any better authority than that. I am not skilled in the distinction between "prospect" and "mine," and perhaps I use the one for the other, and use neither with great accuracy, but I understand the fact to be that we know enough—not all—as to the value of the lands which would make them sell in the market for a very large sum of money. I assume that to be true. Shall those lands, which are known to be valuable for special reasons, be given away? Would it be in harmony with any policy which has heretofore been adopted by the Government, and would there be any more reason for giving them away than for giving away any other tract of land or any other body of land that has an equal value?

Mr. MANTLE rose.

Mr. PALMER. I will listen to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANTLE. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois a question in relation to the suggestion just made by him a few moments ago. If the danger which he apprehends is to result from the throwing open of these lands to the general public under the land laws of the United States, is it not a danger that is common to all the lands of the United States? That is to say, is it not equally probable that the homesteaders who settle upon the agricultural lands of the country would sell their lands, so that in the end there would be a monopoly of all the lands? Again, will not the method proposed by the distinguished Senator from Illinois to throw these lands open, subject to sale to the highest bidder, inevitably result in the man who has the most money getting possession of the land, to the absolute shutting out of a poor man, who, under the general laws of the country, with perseverance, and industry, and energy, and the courage to go ahead and make the development and the exploration, might thereby acquire some wealth for himself?

Mr. PALMER. No man has more respect for the courageous miner than I have, but I understand that in this particular instance the facts are known. It requires no courage to go on this reservation such as would be required of the explorer of the ranges of a mountainous country. I understand that here is a tract of land that has a peculiar value, which is known to all the people who are interested in acquiring such knowledge. It requires no courage, no spirit of adventure, except a disposition to put money in it. I grant that if it is put up at auction it goes to the highest bidder.

Mr. MANTLE. And therefore, because of that fact, it would, in all human probability, develop into a great monopoly.

Mr. PALMER. Most likely.

Mr. MANTLE. Now, I want to offer another suggestion. Is it not true that for years past, and even now, we purchase from the Indians of the country portions of their reservations, for which the Government pays large amounts—tracts that are known in advance absolutely to contain rich mineral deposits—and in every case are not those lands thrown open to settlement under the public-land laws of the United States?

Mr. PALMER. I have no doubt that the mountains of the West contain valuable minerals, but they are to be found; they are not in the mountains everywhere and anywhere; they are discovered. But in this case I understand the discovery is already made. It requires none of the spirit of adventure, or courage, or self-denial to go upon these lands. I understand that their value is known, and as their value is known and they possess a peculiar value, a value attributable to that particular district and nowhere else, I insist that they are an exception to the general rule.

Mr. MANTLE. In answer, I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PALMER. As I am through, I shall very gladly yield the floor to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANTLE. Then I will offer the suggestion without reference to the distinguished Senator from Illinois. The very fact that these lands are known to be valuable for this particular mineral is due to the courage and the energy and the heroism of men who went upon the lands in the face of the greatest difficulties and discovered and made known the fact that they were valuable for this mineral.

Mr. CANNON. I believe that the spirit shown by the remark of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] is a just one, but I think the Senator labors certainly under a grave misapprehension as to the character of these lands, as to their accessibility. The man who might choose to go upon them and locate a claim tomorrow, should this bill become a law, and should the reservation be opened, would have not only to undergo hardships, but he would have to exercise the utmost skill, and then take the risk of finding nothing in the location which he might make. All along the lines laid down in the geological report of the Department there are indications, outcroppings, showing the existence of this mineral. A claim could be taken of 10 acres. A man, after taking it and paying for it, prospecting it to the depth of a thousand feet or more, as described by the Senator from Wisconsin, might find absolutely nothing with which to reward him for his endeavor. It is the history of all mining operations, no matter how beautifully the reports may be written up, that notwithstanding courage, skill, heroism, toil, and investment, nine men fail absolutely where one is successful.

There is no reason, sir, to doubt that there will be more failures than successes amongst those who go upon these lands and work them. There has been no discovery, no exploration, no showing in the sense described by the Senator from Illinois. These deposits do not lie as coal measures do. They are fissures. A man might locate within 10 feet and explore his entire claim to the uttermost limits of it and never find 1 ounce of this mineral. In that particular respect they are precisely as the Cripple Creek gold fields. Certain discoveries were made in Cripple Creek upon the public domain of the United States. Men located in various places contiguous to the original discovery, and then the Department, considering the matter of sufficient importance, had a geological survey and a report made showing the probable area within which were valuable gold fields, indicating the points at which there were outcroppings of the ore which bore gold. Men are still permitted to go there and locate upon those lands, notwithstanding the open demonstration which is had of the existence of valuable mineral deposits there. The man who would go and locate upon the public domain at the Cripple Creek Camp in Colorado, or the Mercur Camp in Utah, would be as reasonably certain of being rewarded as would be the man who went into the gilsonite fields in the Uncompahgre Reservation and located there. In either case he would have the chance, with courage and skill and the investment of money, to get a good reward. In either case he would have the chance of losing everything which he put in. There is not upon the face of the matter that absolute demonstration and showing which separates the two cases in any considerable degree.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senate has spent three hours in a discussion of the general land laws and the mineral laws, with but little attention paid to the amendment, as it seems to me. I have little hope of making any impression with what I am going to say about the amendment, and I will occupy the time of the Senate but a very few minutes.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Wyoming each insisted in their arguments (and they may be right about it; I do not know) that citizens of the United States have the right now under the laws as they stand to locate on these gilsonite fields, to claim these gilsonite deposits, and to work them; that there is no change of law necessary to give the people this right. If that be true, I appeal to the Senate not to adopt the amendment, which can not be necessary for the defense of the people who propose to occupy these gilsonite fields, by doing a gross injustice to this tribe of Indians. Now I will read the amendment.

That all that part of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, except such lands as have been heretofore allotted or selected for allotment to said Uncompahgre Indians, is hereby declared open to public entry under the land laws of the United States.

The amendment will open the whole of the reservation belonging to these Indians except so much as has been allotted or selected for allotment to the Indians.

I came by the Interior Department when the bill was first brought up for consideration, and asked the Secretary of the Interior how much of these lands had been allotted for use to the Indians. I was informed by him that there was not one foot so allotted.

I suggested to some Senator yesterday or to-day that it would be unjust to deprive these Indians absolutely of their homes, to take bodily possession of the entire reservation for the purpose of allowing these people access to the gilsonite beds. I was told after some discussion that these lands had been perhaps selected, while none had been allotted.

I respectfully submit that there is no difference between the selection and allotment. There must be a selection before there can be an allotment, but there is no action taken by the officers of the law which is technically known as a selection. There is no record made of a selection. It is simply a part of the act of allotment. If the amendment passes as is proposed by the committee, we are depriving this tribe of Indians of their homes. The law as it stands now, as was stated by these two Senators, gives these people the right to occupy the gilsonite fields if they choose to do so, and leaves these Indians in possession of their homes or the possibility of making homes under the management of their present agents.

I think the Senate ought to be slow in adopting an amendment which, according to the statement of its friends, is not necessary and which will, it seems to me, inevitably result in gross wrong to these Indians.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the Senator from Arkansas on this subject.

In the first place, these lands do not belong to the Indians. That fact should be distinctly remembered. The Senator from Wisconsin has himself read the statements of the Secretary of the Interior, taken from the time when he was in the Department until now, showing that it has always been conceded that the lands do not belong to the Indians. Their lands in Colorado were sold, and they got the money for them.

In the next place, as the Senator from Arkansas well says, selection must precede allotment. All of the agricultural lands in this so-called reservation (it is not a reservation at all; it is a place where they are permitted to stay) have been selected. There are not enough agricultural lands. All of them have been already selected. Every foot of the agricultural land was selected for the use of these Uncompahgres. They must have further lands out of those belonging to the Uintahs, a cognate tribe living there adjoining them, and from those lands they can have sufficient for their own use in an agricultural sense. The gilsonite beds are situated a hundred miles or more away from where there are any Indians or where there are any agricultural lands. They are away out in the truest desert that ever could exist. No Indian can be injured in any sense whatever by this amendment.

One word further. My friend calls attention to the fact that some of us have claimed that these locators have their rights now in court. That is true; I claim so, but others have disputed it. It is a mooted question. If they have rights there, Congress ought to protect them in them. It ought not to remit them to the necessity of litigation. It should be settled by an act of Congress.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, that the Senate has been detained three hours upon this amendment, as the Senator from Arkansas has observed, is not its fault. If the executive department had carried out the law, as it was the duty of that department to do under the Constitution, this debate and this delay would not have occurred.

In 1894, as has been stated here and as the record shows—and I have it in my hand—we passed a law that made it mandatory upon the President and the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission to go to the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in Utah and allot to these Indians such lands as were suitable for their occupation, and we provided that the balance of the reservation should be opened to settlement under the land and mineral laws of the United States.

It is true the Senator from Wisconsin has told us he did not know that the law was enacted, but I take it that does not affect its validity. It was his misfortune, and possibly the misfortune of the country, that the Senator from Wisconsin did not know that it was a public statute; but it was passed and signed by the President in 1894.

A commission was appointed and made its report. I hold their report in my hand. The commission declared in their report that, except some 10,000 acres on White River, the balance of the reservation was a desert, utterly unfit for the support of any sort of animal life. After that report was made and the proclamation drawn up by the Interior Department and sent to the President at Buzzards Bay, he refused to sign it, upon the ground that Congress had passed a bad law, which he had signed but did not propose to carry out.

I speak by the card, because I saw that proclamation in the hands of Mr. Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior, who told me that he had carried it to Buzzards Bay, and the President had refused to sign it because Congress, he said, did not understand what they had enacted. That is the reason why we are here now thrashing this old straw.

Mr. President, no Senator here will justify that sort of conduct. It is utterly indefensible. If we made a mistake, the President ought to have called our attention to it and relied upon the patriotism and intelligence of Congress to correct it by repealing the law. Instead of that, he refused peremptorily to obey the statute, and we are now here trying to enact something without the approval of the President, if possible, or without his connivance or his cooperation.

It is true, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, that there has been no allotment and possibly no selection, because the whole thing was stopped by the refusal of the executive department to obey the law of the land.

I would suggest an amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read. I think it meets the objection made by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all of the Indian reservation in the State of Utah except about 10,000 acres of bottom land, extending about 10 or 12 miles up the White River on both sides from its mouth, as described in the report of the commission appointed by the Interior Department under the Indian appropriation act of 1894 and contained in House of Representatives Document No. 191.

Mr. VEST. Here is the document, House of Representatives 191, and here is the report of the commission which Mr. Cleveland ignored and refused to carry out:

After a thorough exploration of this country east of the Green, which embraces about 1,800,000 acres of the 2,000,000 acres that make up the entire reservation, the undersigned do not hesitate to say that there is no arable land upon it suitable for Indian allotment except about 10,000 acres of bottom land extending 10 or 12 miles up the White on both sides from its mouth.

In this amendment I have incorporated the exact language used by the commission. They declare that out of the 2,000,000 acres there are 1,800,000 that are totally unfit for settlement or allotment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. By whom is the report signed?

Mr. VEST. The report is signed by all the members of the commission. Here is a map which shows, if any Senator is curious about it, the exact lines adopted by the commission. It is signed by S. S. Scott, T. A. Byrnes, and William S. Davis, Ute Indian Commission.

Mr. President, the whole question, it seems to me, is in a nutshell. There is no injustice proposed here to Indians. There is no job here of any rich corporation. I stated here in 1894, and I state here now on behalf of the gentlemen who invested their money in this gilsonite company in St. Louis, that they are willing to execute a bond with a million-dollar security that they will not bid on or enter one acre of this land. They have their gilsonite lands there, upon which they are now operating, outside of this reservation, and upon which they have spent a quarter of a million dollars. They propose to build a railroad through that country, a precipitous, mountainous, desert country, for 100 miles to the Union Pacific, in order to make the vast deposits available for purposes of civilization and commerce. Are they to be taunted here and told that they are monopolists? Unless that railroad is built, the deposits are not worth 10 cents an acre, and every intelligent man knows it. Will it be built by individuals who have no means? How can that domain be opened up? How can we diminish the price of asphaltum or gilsonite? We paid, if I am not mistaken, between $5 and $6 a square yard for the asphaltum pavements in the city of Washington, and an immense fortune was made out of it. It was a monopoly. Recently the city of Kansas City, where I reside, and the city of St. Louis, in my State, have contracted with this gilsonite company (although they export for more than 100 miles the products of the mine outside of the reservation) for work to be done upon the streets at $1.75 and $2.25 a square yard. If that be the result of this competition under these difficulties, what will be the price of gilsonite if a railroad is built and this illimitable amount opened up to the world at large?

The question presented to us is, Shall we let that desert remain as it is, or shall we make the deposit available? Shall we produce competition with the Island of Trinidad, shall we give to the world that advantage, or shall we sit here and say we would rather that this thing should remain as it is and that these deposits shall not be made available because some man may make money out of it?

Mr. President, never has this country adopted the principle or system of putting up its mineral lands or any other lands to the highest bidder. We have fixed the price of mineral lands at $5 where there are lodes, at $2.50 where there are placer mines, and we have sold all our public lands in that way. We are asked now to make an exception, and what will be the result? If there should be two wealthy companies who would bid upon these lands to the exclusion of all poor men, how easy would it be for these corporations, and do we not know that they would collude with each other, buy up the land, divide it, and make a monopoly, or a trust, or a combine, if they pleased to do so? Why not let men who have gone there for the purpose of availing themselves of the mineral laws of the United States receive some portion of this money, if money is to be made? That is the whole question, and that is the one to be determined by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not quite understand the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I propose that amendment to the Senator in charge of the bill as a substitute for the other. There is a portion of the other amendment which is not objected to. This is only a portion of it that is to be put in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the proposed amendment be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all of the Indian reservation in the State of Utah, except about 10,000 acres of bottom land, extending about 10 or 12 miles up the White River on both sides from its mouth, as described in the report of the commission appointed by the Interior Department under the Indian appropriation act of 1894, and contained in House of Representatives Document No. 191——

Mr. CANNON. Is the word "Uncompahgre" in that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The word "Uncompahgre" is not in the amendment.

Mr. VEST. It ought to be there. Let the word "Uncompahgre" be inserted before the words "Indian reservation."

Mr. VILAS. I ask to have the amendment read once more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri goes to the word "Indians."

Mr. VEST. "Uncompahgre Indians," it ought to be. I move to strike out all from the beginning of line 9, on page 66, down to the words "is hereby declared," in line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Including the word "Indians," in line 12?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Now let the amendment to the amendment be read in connection with the amendment, so that we can see its bearing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as proposed to be amended will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of the committee amendment, beginning with line 9, on page 66, down to and including the word "Indians" in line 12, and insert, so that if amended the clause will read:

That all that part of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, except about 10,000 acres of bottom land, extending about 10 or 12 miles up the White River on both sides from its mouth, as described in the report of the commission appointed by the Interior Department, under the Indian appropriation act of 1894, and contained in House of Representatives Document No. 191, is hereby declared open to public entry under the land laws of the United States: Provided, That no one person shall be allowed to make more than four claims on lands containing gilsonite.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that amendment is entirely proper, and I shall be glad to accept it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I only wish to add a word or two, and then to offer an amendment. I am by no means led to believe that the Senate does not know what general legislation is by the vote which has been taken this afternoon on the point of order. I hoped for an enforcement of the rules of the Senate through the firmness of the Chair. I know very well that the practice of the Senate, when a point of order is submitted to it, is to vote as if the proposition itself were submitted instead of the point of order, and that if our rules are to be enforced they are not to be enforced by the Senate itself, but only by those to whom their enforcement is committed by law.

Mr. VEST. Then we must take resort in our presiding officer, and not in our power of self-government.

Mr. VILAS. No; the great right and privilege of self-government is entirely beyond this body, as the Senator from Missouri suggests.

Mr. VEST. I do not suggest that. I suggested that would be the result, if the Chair please, of the Senator's argument, that we must take resort in our presiding officer, and not in our own power of self-government.

Mr. VILAS. Now, Mr. President I have discharged substantially all of the duty which I owe to the Senate, I think, or which I owe to the country whose officer I am for a short time yet, and whose interests I desire to conserve. I have no other. I have pointed out that here is a peculiar case, unknown in our history, perhaps in any history, that the United States happens to possess this immensely valuable tract of land lying within a small compass. The Senator from Utah talks as if it were scattered over 2,000,000 acres. It lies within a small compass, a narrow range. The question is presented by this amendment whether it shall be appropriated to the uses of a few men who have pursued it for years, or whether this Congress is capable of protecting the public right, and so appropriating the use of that land as that the mineral shall be enjoyed and the rights of the public protected.

The Senator from Wyoming said that he never could understand why such objections were made; never could understand why, when anything was proposed from the West, Senators from other parts of the country seemed to throw obstructions in the way. No obstruction lies upon the ground of locality, and the Senator from Wyoming must understand it. The only basis of objection to this proposal is that frankly and freely stated by the Secretary of the Interior in his report—stated as a public officer recognizing the obligation upon him ought to have stated information to a body like the Congress of the United States. He was asked why he had not put this land open to settlement by proclamation by the resolution passed by this body at the first session of this Congress, and he answered:

In response to said resolution I have the honor to call your attention to pages 10 and 37 of my annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, a copy of which I herewith transmit. That report sets forth the fact that valuable discoveries of "gilsonite" have been explored by officers of the Geological Survey on this reservation since the date of the passage of the act of August 15, 1894, supra, and shows that if these lands are opened to entry in the ordinary way the Government would be deprived of extensive profits which should go into its Treasury.

And the President of the United States refused to proclaim them. The Senator from Missouri arraigns him now for his protection of the public interests of the people of the United States as if it were something done in violation of law.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I hardly think the Senator would be guilty of anything like subterfuge or of concealing facts in regard to this case. He makes the impression upon the Senate that the Secretary of the Interior and the President did not know of the existence of these gilsonite deposits until a report was made at a recent date, comparatively, by the Geological Survey. That is the Senator's contention.

Mr. VILAS. No; that is not "the Senator's" contention.

Mr. VEST. What is the Senator's point, then—that the information came recently to the Department?

Mr. VILAS. That the information which before that time was unofficial and only known by report became officially known by the Geological Survey having made the investigation and established the great value of that property subsequent to the date of that report.

Mr. VEST. What is the date of the Geological report?

Mr. VILAS. I was just reading what the Secretary of the Interior says.

Mr. VEST. What was the date?

Mr. VILAS. It appears in the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year 1895. Here is what the Secretary of the Interior says in regard to it.

Mr. VEST. I know what he says.

Mr. VILAS. The Secretary says:

That report sets forth the fact that valuable discoveries of "gilsonite" have been explored by officers of the Geological Survey on this reservation since the date of the passage of the act of August 15, 1894.

And the report of the Geological Survey is contained in the report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year 1895.

Mr. VEST. Yes, Mr. President; but that geological survey was not the basis of the refusal of the President to issue that proclamation which we had directed him to issue. I know personally, and other Senators know, that the Secretary of the Interior knew all about these deposits; that he had specimens brought to him, for I myself went with the president of this gilsonite company, who carried with him a large block of gilsonite or asphaltum, and it is in the Secretary's office, for I saw it there not two months ago. Those deposits were well known before that report of the Geological Survey. After that report was made, if the Senator will get the date of it, and before the report was made, on three occasions the President declined to issue that proclamation, because he said that Congress had passed a bad law and that he did not intend to enforce it.

I arraign the President of the United States, if the Senator wants to use that word, because I declare that he had no right to disobey an act of Congress which was mandatory upon him as an executive officer. If he believed that we were wasting the substance of the people of this country, he ought to have called it to our attention in a constitutional and legitimate way and asked us to repair the wrong. Instead of that, he usurped legislative functions and declared that he would not obey the act of Congress. Those are the undisguised facts.

Mr. VILAS. Well, Mr. President, they are so far from the facts that I am astonished that my distinguished friend from Missouri should have made the statement in that way. There was perhaps no occasion for bringing any such subject before the Senate as is brought by his remarks. He is in entire error.

Mr. VEST. Prove it.

Mr. VILAS. The act was passed in the manner which I have pointed out, but which I will not characterize, by the report of a conference committee after the Senate and the Senate's committee, in the first place, had put in words which would have protected this very mineral land from spoliation, and then it directed, such as it was, that certain allotments should be made after certain surveys were made. All the necessary surveys had to first be made. Those surveys were made during the year 1895. They could not, indeed, well be made before, for the act did not pass until the 15th of August, and no surveys could be made in that rough, mountainous country during the winter. Then the Geological Survey made their explorations and showed the fact that had previously been known only by rumor in a certain sense, only by the reports of persons who had been out there, or were interested, that here were these veins as perfectly plain to be seen as anything need to be, miles in length, one of them 18 feet wide, another 12 feet wide, another 9 feet wide, extending to an unknown depth, from 1,000 to 5,000 feet, filled with this valuable mineral. The Secretary of the Interior in his report for the year 1895 set forth these facts, and the President of the United States mentioned them in his last message, inviting the attention of Congress to them.

Mr. BROWN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VILAS. Let me deal with this question first.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask why the Senator says these veins are from 1,000 to 5,000 feet?

Mr. VILAS. Because the Geological Survey says so.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Geological Survey know anything about it? Have they made any exploration of it which shows that the veins extend down 100 feet?

Mr. VILAS. I am as satisfied to accept the testimony of those officers of the United States as the wild declarations of persons who know nothing about it.

Mr. BROWN. They do not say that they have made any explorations or that they know that they are a thousand feet deep or any other depth whatever. They say in the report that there are no explorations as to the depth. It is mere fancy as to how deep they may go.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the Senator may cross-examine the officers of the Geological Survey if he chooses; but I am satisfied to accept their testimony, for I think they know what they are talking about, and I believe every one of the people interested in this business knows it just as well as the Geological Survey does. The value of this property is not open to question. It may be very difficult to measure its full value, but the immensity of its value is not open to doubt and is not doubted, either on the part of those who are trying to get it or on the part of the officers of the Geological Survey, who have made their report.

I think that the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior would have been wanting in their duty if, after this survey, they had not informed Congress of the facts in reference to it, and if the President had not, in the exercise of that discretion which the law itself commits to him, withheld his proclamation exposing those lands to the capture of those who had been after them and had secured the law for that purpose. So much for that.

Notwithstanding I recognize, and have for some time recognized, how little chance there may be for saving the public interest in any property on which a great private interest has concentered its attack, I purpose still to maintain my hope that the interests of the public will receive the support of the Senate until that hope shall be finally dashed by a vote. I propose an amendment to the amendment of the committee as it stands now, after the acceptance of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. The last line of that amendment is—

That no one person shall be allowed to make more than four claims on lands containing gilsonite.

I propose to strike that out and substitute:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause to be carefully surveyed by the Director of the Geological Survey all lands in said reservation supposed to contain mineral, and to subdivide all such land as shall be determined by such survey to contain any of the minerals hereafter named into lots of suitable size and form for the convenient and proper working of the mineral, and that after such survey shall have been completed the Secretary of the Interior shall, after such inquiry as he shall find necessary, fix and settle by an order in writing a royalty or price per ton for asphaltum, gilsonite, elaterite, wurtzilite, or other like valuable mineral substance found to exist thereon; and thereafter by proclamation such lots, as so surveyed, shall become subject to entry under the mineral-land laws of the United States, except that each claim shall be for one such lot as so surveyed, and that no price per acre shall be paid, and that, instead of a patent, a lease shall issue granting to the lessee, his heirs or assigns, the exclusive right to occupy and mine said lands for a term of twenty-five years, subject to the payment on the 30th day of June and the 31st day of December in each year of the royalty or price per ton so fixed for all such mineral taken from said lots so leased during each six months, respectively, preceding.

Mr. President, observe what that will do for our friends from the West. It will open all that land at once upon the same basis upon which they seek to have it taken now, except that it will open it with the reservation of a reasonable royalty per ton to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and to be paid only when and after they shall have taken the mineral from the land. There is no interference with the right to take it. The same provision for establishing the right will exist then that would exist under their amendment if it were adopted; the same requirement for entry, except that, in order to preserve the property from the myriads of controversies which arise over every mining claim, the lots having been first surveyed, shall be claimed by only one claim for a lot. If there is a contest over the claim, the parties may have the same contest as in any other case. In the end they get a conveyance which is perfectly good for a term of twenty-five years, and the United States reserves only its reasonable royalty according to the result to the prospector, if you choose to call him so, or the entryman. I am seeking only to preserve the public right and interest in that mineral. The same laws which are invoked by the other amendments will cover the case.

As I have said, Mr. President, I have discharged the duty which I owe to the Senate. I have pointed out all the facts in this case so far as they are known to me. I trust they are understood by at least that small portion of the Senate which gives attention to the business which the Constitution imposes upon them to understand and discharge.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I rise to make the same point of order upon this amendment to the amendment that has been made to the original amendment, to wit, that it is general legislation under the name of an amendment to an amendment. There is hardly a point involved in the general mining laws of this country which is not sought to be set aside by this amendment.

In the first place, a mining claim is awarded to him who makes the location and stakes it out where there has been a discovery of mineral. That is proposed to be set aside, and it is to be staked out by the Government and sold at auction.

The next step in the proceeding of the mining law is that the man who takes a claim shall do certain work to improve it. That is set aside by this proposed amendment. Finally, he is to pay for it, not, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] says, to receive it for nothing—he is to pay for it at the rate of $5 per acre to the Government, after he has done certain work amounting to about $100 a year and $500 upon each claim. All that is set aside by this amendment. In fact, the entire mining law of the United States is obliterated with one sweep by this proposed amendment for the sake of allowing the Government to stand in as partner or as landlord in this transaction. My friend from Illinois says he is opposed to that policy; and who would not be? It was the same policy which cost one of the early kings of England his life—for seeking the treasure that had been found—and it is the same policy which our friends here insist on pursuing—to try to get something which does not belong to the Government. The lands of the United States are a public estate, upon which citizens may settle and where citizens may locate. I make that point of order.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, what was the point of order?

Mr. BROWN. The point of order was that the amendment suggests general legislation. It is general legislation in the form of an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule on that point.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I have been occasionally obliged to confess that I was surprised. I am gradually getting to the point that I am not likely to be any more.

I presume we shall not lose our balance because the Senator from Utah charges the United States with being a landlord. The Senator from Utah seems to think it is terrible, that it is discreditable to the United States to be called a landlord. I do not know that it is any worse for the United States to be a landlord than to be a tenant. It is a very numerous tenant, renting property everywhere and paying the people's money for it. Here happens to be some property of the people which it possesses from which it can derive a reasonable return. It is the practice of a good many governments to have their mineral lands worked in this manner. There is nothing novel about it. No doubt a great change might be made in our general land laws with advantage to the public in many particulars, but in this particular instance I have conformed the amendment to every feature of the amendment as proposed, with the single exception that instead of paying a price per acre which is merely nominal, they shall pay a fair price, far below what would be fixed in any other case, perhaps, for such mineral as shall actually be removed, and no more.

There is one other change which ought to be made with reference to every particle of the mineral lands of the United States, if possible, and that is that they should be presurveyed into lots rather than that claimants should throw their conflicting surveys and claims over one another in the manner in which they have been permitted to do under our mineral-land laws.

But, sir, having submitted the amendment, and thus brought the question distinctly and directly to the attention of the Senate, whether this land shall be disposed of simply for the spoil of the few, or whether it shall be opened so that the Government shall derive a reasonable return for its own, I am not desirous of occupying the attention of the Senate any longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah insist on his point of order?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. VEST (to Mr. BROWN). No; let us have a vote.

Mr. BROWN. Very well; I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the committee amendment, as modified by the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri, which was accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the amendment to the amendment read before we vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the Senate ought to hear the amendment to the amendment before it votes on it, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Elkins,	Martin,	Sewell,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Gear,	Mitchell, Wis.	Shoup,
Bate,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Smith,
Berry,	Gorman,	Murphy,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Teller,
Blanchard,	Hill,	Palmer,	Tillman,
Brice,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Brown,	Irby,	Peffer,	Vest,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Vilas,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Kenney,	Platt,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Pritchard,	White,
Daniel,	Lodge,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Davis,	McBride,	Quay,
Dubois,	McMillan,	Roach,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Provided," in line 13, on page 66, and insert in lieu thereof:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause to be carefully surveyed by the Director of the Geological Survey all lands in said reservation supposed to contain mineral, and to subdivide all such land as shall be determined by such survey to contain any of the minerals hereinafter named into lots of suitable size and form for the convenient and proper working of the mineral, and that after such survey shall have been completed the Secretary of the Interior shall, after such inquiry as he shall find necessary, fix and settle by an order in writing a royalty or price per ton for asphaltum, gilsonite, elaterite, wurtzitite, or other like valuable mineral substance found to exist thereon, and thereafter by proclamation such lots as so surveyed shall become subject to entry under the mineral-land laws of the United States, except that each claim shall be for one such lot as so surveyed, and that no price per acre shall be paid, and that instead of a patent a lease shall issue granting to the lessee, his heirs or assigns, the exclusive right to occupy and mine said lands for a term of twenty-five years, subject to the payment on the 30th day of June and the 31st day of December in each year of the royalty or price per ton so fixed for all such mineral taken from said lot so leased during each six months, respectively, preceding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as modified, which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, except about 10,000 acres of bottom land extending about 10 or 12 miles up the White River on both sides from its mouth, as described in the report of the commission appointed by the Interior Department under the Indian appropriation act of 1894, and contained in House of Representatives Document No. 191, Fifty-fourth Congress, is hereby declared open to public entry under the land laws of the United States: Provided, That no one person shall be allowed to make more than four claims on lands containing gilsonite.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that it might be well to say "mineral-land laws of the United States."

Mr. VEST. The phrase "land laws" includes that.

Mr. STEWART. It may include it, but there might be a question, and the insertion of those words would make it certain.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think it would be very proper to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. VEST. Very well. I suggest that we add the word "mineral."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Before the word "land" insert the word "mineral."

Mr. STEWART. I suggest the words "mineral and other land laws of the United States."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should say "mineral-land laws."

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. TELLER. Let it stand "the land laws of the United States."

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as modified.

Mr. VILAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired on this and all further votes to-day with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. KYLE'S name was called). The junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] stands paired on this question with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. My colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. With the consent of the senior Senator from Wisconsin, I transfer my pair to my colleague, so that the senior Senator from Mississippi will stand paired with him, and the senior Senator from Wisconsin and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I announce my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON].

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—48.

Allen,	Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Allison,	Davis,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bacon,	Dubois,	McBride,	Sewell,
Baker,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Mantle,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gibson,	Murphy,	Teller,
Brown,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Turpie,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Vest,
Cannon,	Hill,	Perkins,	Wetmore,
Carter,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	White,
Chandler,	Irby,	Platt,	Wilson.

NAYS—17.

Bate,	Gray,	Mills,	Sherman,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas.
Caffery,	Kenney,	Palmer,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pasco,
Daniel,	Martin,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—25.

Aldrich,	Gear,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Voorhees,
Butler,	George,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Call,	Gordon,	Proctor,	Warren,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Quay,	Wolcott.
Clark,	Hale,	Squire,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Thurston,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Tillman,

So the amendment as modified was agreed to.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. VEST. I ask leave to submit a report at this time. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3721) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River, to report it favorably without amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to the bill.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will take but a moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be obliged to object. I refused to assent to unanimous consent being given to several Senators, and I do not think it would be fair to make a distinction.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I very much hope that that motion will not prevail.

Mr. VILAS. The question is not debatable.

Mr. SMITH. It is not debatable.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We have scarcely commenced the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from South Dakota can not debate the question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I will call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LODGE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. As he has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand that he has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who is not in his seat at this moment, but who, I understand, has voted. I then recognize my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. He would vote "nay," if present, and I should vote "yea," if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. BATE. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is unable to be here. He is paired generally with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is also absent from the Chamber.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Allen,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Bacon,	Dubois,	Martin,	Stewart,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Tillman,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Murphy,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Hill,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Caffery,	Irby,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,	White.
Chilton,	Kenney,	Roach,

NAYS—29.

Allison,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Shoup,
Baker,	Gear,	Peffer,	Teller,
Brown,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Thurston,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Platt,	Wilson.
Davis,	McBride,	Pritchard,
Elkins,	McMillan,	Quay,
Frye,	Mantle,	Sherman,

NOT VOTING—26.

Aldrich,	Clark,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Brice,	Cockrell,	Jones, Nev.	Squire,
Butler,	George,	Kyle,	Voorhees,
Call,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Warren,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Wis.	Wolcott.
Cannon,	Hale,	Morrill,
Carter,	Harris,	Proctor,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 24, 1897, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 23, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LIEUT. ROBERT PLATT.

Mr. FISCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3150) authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Robert Platt, United States Navy, to the rank of commander.

The bill was read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to reserve the right to object.

Mr. MILNES. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. FISCHER. I send to the desk the report of the House committee, which is virtually a copy of the Senate report.

The report was read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman explain the bill fully and tell us why this extraordinary bill should pass. I do not think the report is satisfactory.

Mr. FISCHER. I had supposed that the report, containing as it does the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, would most fully explain the purport of the bill. Lieutenant Platt was a volunteer naval officer during the war. If the documents accompanying the report, which the Clerk did not read, should be read, I am satisfied that my colleague [Mr. BARTLETT of New York] would agree that the bill should be passed, for by those letters and in reports of battle it appears that during the war Lieutenant Platt received special commendation for his services. The Secretary of the Navy is desirous that this bill should pass. In view of the peculiar office held by Lieutenant Platt, the Secretary may not retire him unless a bill of this kind shall become a law. The Secretary in his letter asks that the bill may be enacted.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Why should we select one officer and promote him out of the regular line of promotion? What excuse is there for such a course?

Mr. FISCHER. Let me say further that, as stated in the letter—I presume my colleague listened to the reading of the report——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes; but I do not think the letter is clear at all.

Mr. FISCHER. By reason of his peculiar position in the Navy, Lieutenant Platt is the only man who is not permitted to receive promotion. He is not in the line of promotion.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. How is that?

Mr. FISCHER. Because he holds his office under a special act of Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Has he not been rewarded enough?

Mr. FISCHER. No, sir. For meritorious service rendered during the war he has received less than any other naval officer.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What is the amount of money involved?

Mr. VEST. Very well. I suggest that we add the word "mineral."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Before the word "land" insert the word "mineral."

Mr. STEWART. I suggest the words "mineral and other land laws of the United States."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should say "mineral-land laws."

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. TELLER. Let it stand "the land laws of the United States."

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as modified.

Mr. VILAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. ALDRICH's name was called). I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired on this and all further votes to-day with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. KYLE's name was called). The junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] stands paired on this question with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. My colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. With the consent of the senior Senator from Wisconsin, I transfer my pair to my colleague, so that the senior Senator from Mississippi will stand paired with him, and the senior Senator from Wisconsin and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I announce my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON].

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—48.

Allen,	Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Allison,	Davis,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bacon,	Dubois,	McBride,	Sewell,
Baker,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Mantle,	Smith,

Burrows,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Vest,
Cannon,	Hill,	Perkins,	Wetmore,
Carter,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	White,
Chandler,	Irby,	Platt,	Wilson.

NAYS—17.

Bate,	Gray,	Mills,	Sherman,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas.
Caffery,	Kenney,	Palmer,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pasco,
Daniel,	Martin,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—25.

Aldrich,	Gear,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Voorhees,
Butler,	George,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Call,	Gordon,	Proctor,	Warren,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Quay,	Wolcott.
Clark,	Hale,	Squire,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Thurston,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Tillman,

So the amendment as modified was agreed to.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. VEST. I ask leave to submit a report at this time. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3721) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River, to report it favorably without amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to the bill.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will take but a moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be obliged to object. I refused to assent to unanimous consent being given to several Senators, and I do not think it would be fair to make a distinction.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I very much hope that that motion will not prevail.

Mr. VILAS. The question is not debatable.

Mr. SMITH. It is not debatable.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We have scarcely commenced the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from South Dakota can not debate the question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I will call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LODGE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. As he has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand that he has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who is not in his seat at this moment, but who, I understand, has voted. I then recognize my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. He would vote "nay," if present, and I should vote "yea," if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. BATE. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is unable to be here. He is paired generally with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is also absent from the Chamber.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—35.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 23, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LIEUT. ROBERT PLATT.

Mr. FISCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3150) authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Robert Platt, United States Navy, to the rank of commander.

The bill was read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to reserve the right to object.

Mr. MILNES. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. FISCHER. I send to the desk the report of the House committee, which is virtually a copy of the Senate report.

The report was read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman explain the bill fully and tell us why this extraordinary bill should pass. I do not think the report is satisfactory.

Mr. FISCHER. I had supposed that the report, containing as it does the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, would most fully explain the purport of the bill. Lieutenant Platt was a volunteer naval officer during the war. If the documents accompanying the report, which the Clerk did not read, should be read, I am satisfied that my colleague [Mr. BARTLETT of New York] would agree that the bill should be passed, for by those letters and in reports of battle it appears that during the war Lieutenant Platt received special commendation for his services. The Secretary of the Navy is desirous that this bill should pass. In view of the peculiar office held by Lieutenant Platt, the Secretary may not retire him unless a bill of this kind shall become a law. The Secretary in his letter asks that the bill may be enacted.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Why should we select one officer and promote him out of the regular line of promotion? What excuse is there for such a course?

Mr. FISCHER. Let me say further that, as stated in the letter—I presume my colleague listened to the reading of the report——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes; but I do not think the letter is clear at all.

Mr. FISCHER. By reason of his peculiar position in the Navy, Lieutenant Platt is the only man who is not permitted to receive promotion. He is not in the line of promotion.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. How is that?

Mr. FISCHER. Because he holds his office under a special act of Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Has he not been rewarded enough?

Mr. FISCHER. No, sir. For meritorious service rendered during the war he has received less than any other naval officer.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What is the amount of money involved?

Mr. FISCHER. The half pay of a commander. He will be retired on the 14th of this coming March; and unless this act is passed he will be retired from the Navy without pay.

Mr. BAILEY. If that is true, I object, if it is the purpose of the bill to retire anybody.

Mr. FISCHER. He does retire, as a matter of course, on the 14th of March.

Mr. BAILEY. You say unless this bill is passed he can not retire.

Mr. FISCHER. He retires without pay.

Mr. BAILEY. I am of the opinion that any man who retires from work ought to retire without pay, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

RESERVOIR AT GULL LAKE, MINNESOTA.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9756) to amend the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," which became a law August 18, 1894, which provides that the United States shall not be subject to any cost or expense for lands, mills, or other property necessarily taken or injured for the reservoir and dam at Gull Lake, headwaters of the Mississippi River, in the State of Minnesota, be, and is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the report read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOOKER. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, subject to the right to object.

The report (by Mr. TOWNE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred House bill 9756, submit the following report:

The river and harbor act passed at the last session of Congress contained an appropriation of $80,000 to continue the improvement upon the reservoirs at the head of the Mississippi River, which, together with the amount of $5,374.97 remaining on hand from the last preceding appropriation, makes a total of $85,374.97 available for the purpose. But the act of 1894 contained a condition that the United States should not be subject to any cost or expense due to overflowing land or property necessarily taken in the construction of the Gull Lake Reservoir. This bill removes that limitation. The subjoined letter from the Acting Chief of Engineers, United States Army, fully explains the reason for the enactment:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter, dated the 7th instant, from the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives inclosing, for the views of the Secretary of War thereon, House bill 9756, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, "A bill to amend the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894."

The river and harbor act which became a law August 18, 1894, in the item making appropriation for the care and maintenance of reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi, authorizes the construction of a reservoir and dam at Gull Lake, Minnesota, but specifically provides that the United States shall not be subject to any cost or expense for lands, mills, or other property necessarily taken or injured for this reservoir and dam. This provision is a continuing one and prevents the application of not only the money appropriated by the aforesaid act, but of that appropriated by the subsequent act of June 3, 1896, in payment for any land, or in liquidation of any damages that may be inflicted upon land by flowage as a result of the construction of this dam.

While the right to overflow some of the adjacent lands has been given gratuitously to the Government, there are a few tracts of improved property the owners of which will not grant the right to overflow without payment by the Government for the damages inflicted. As the construction of the reservoir will necessarily inflict damage upon this land, and as the owners demand payment for such damages, it has been found necessary, on account of the restriction in the act of August 18, 1894, to suspend operations on the work.

The removal of the restriction is absolutely necessary to permit the prosecution of the improvement, and assuming that it is the intention of Congress that the work shall proceed, the passage of the bill under consideration is recommended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. MACKENZIE,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

For the reasons indicated in this letter your committee are unanimously of the opinion that the bill should pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York what is the value of the land that it is supposed will have to be paid for?

Mr. HOOKER. I am unable to state, but it is not a very large amount, as only a few persons have refused to donate the land.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall be glad to have some authoritative statement on the subject.

Mr. HOOKER. My friend from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER], who is interested in the matter, can probably make a fuller explanation than I can.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, between $700,000 and $800,000 has already been expended on this reservoir system. This relates to the completion of the last reservoir. All of the mill sites, all of the pine lands, and all the property involved has been specifically donated except a few pieces owned by individuals who refuse to donate, and the estimate of the engineer in charge is that the expense will be between $5,000 and $8,000, certainly not to exceed $10,000 or $12,000 at the outside. After the expenditure of the large amount which I have stated, it is necessary to expend these few thousand dollars more, but the money will be taken out of the appropriation already made. The bill does not carry any new appropriation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will it not require an additional appropriation in the future?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think not. I think this is intended to complete the work.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask the gentleman if, when this proposition first came up before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, they were not assured that the people who owned the property adjacent, which might be affected by the overflowage, would, in consideration of the Government granting this appropriation, not demand any damages?

Mr. FLETCHER. To a certain extent that was true, and the principal owners did not demand anything.

Mr. TERRY. Now, since they have got the appropriation, they want to come back and demand payment?

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me answer one question before you ask another. The mill owners and all the principal property owners have donated the land, or given the right of flowage, but there are a few who refuse.

Mr. TERRY. There are a few who want to hold us up in the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are a few whom there is no way to reach except by condemnation. I will ask my colleague [Mr. TOWNE] to explain this matter, as it is in his district.

Mr. TERRY. I should be very glad to have some explanation.

Mr. TOWNE. I will say in explanation that of course, when you come to build a reservoir which requires the use of a large amount of land, you have got to pay for the land. So much as has already been donated is so much gained. At the time of the passage of the act of 1894 providing for this appropriation for the extension of these reservoirs it was supposed that all of these lands which would be overflowed in the construction of this reservoir, which is the last one of the system, would be donated for the purpose. When the river and harbor act of 1896 was passed, that provision of the act of 1894 was lost sight of. When, therefore, the appropriation added to the $5,000 for the Gull Lake reservoir was proposed to be expended, it was found that not all the property required by the overflow of the reservoir had been conveyed to the Government, and therefore the appropriation could not be availed of unless that restriction of the act of 1894 was done away with.

Mr. TERRY. If you do away with the restrictions, you thereby subject the Government to claims for damages.

Mr. TOWNE. It is not properly claims for damages, but part of the expense of building the reservoir.

Mr. TERRY. I understand that. You have spent $84,000, or whatever it is. Now, why not have a proviso in this bill providing that nothing herein contained shall authorize any greater charge or expenditure than the amount originally appropriated?

Mr. TOWNE. I do not think there would be any objection to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. The only trouble is it would have to go back through the Senate.

Mr. TERRY. I think you had better have a limitation.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman from Arkansas does not desire to ask further questions, I would like to ask if the refusal to pass this bill will prevent the completion of this work?

Mr. TOWNE. Absolutely.

Mr. LOUD. Then I object. If it is possible for one man to prevent any more of this foolishness, I shall object.

Mr. TOWNE. The gentleman is acting in entire ignorance of the subject.

EMMA WEIR CASEY.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2729) granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Emma Weir Casey, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Thomas Lincoln Casey, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, at the rate of $75 a month.

Mr. BLUE. I object.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

Mr. BLUE. I shall not object to that; but no pension of $75 can pass if my objection will prevent it.

Mr. WHEELER. Will you be content to make it $50?

Mr. BLUE. Yes, sir; but under no other circumstances.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I ask to have the bill amended so as to make it $50.

Mr. BLUE. With that understanding, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert the word "fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 1832) entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company." I do not care to ask the attention of the House to it this morning. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and give notice that I will call it up to-morrow at the earliest time I can get recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the report be printed in the RECORD. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. If that conference report is submitted in this manner, does it not lose its privileged character?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the impression that it does not.

Mr. POWERS. I have no objection to it being considered at this time.

Mr. McMILLIN. It clearly does not lose its privileged character simply because of the fact that it has been presented and printed.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not so clear as the gentleman imagines.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it loses its privileged character.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1832) entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In line 2 of said amendment numbered 1, and after the word "to," where it occurs the second time, insert the words "the United States;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the word "not" in line 31 of the bill, and in place of the language stricken out by said amendment insert the words:

"Except all debts, demands, and liabilities which were due or owing by the old company, which were contracted, accrued, or were incurred, or are due or owing for tickets and freight balances, or for wages, work, labor, materials, machinery, fixtures, and supplies of every kind and character, done, performed, or furnished in the repair, equipment, operation, or extension of said road, and its branches so purchased, and all liabilities incurred by said old company in the transportation of freight and passengers thereon, including damages for injuries to employees or other persons, and to property, and which debts, demands, and liabilities have accrued or upon which suit had been brought or was pending, or judgment rendered, within twelve months prior to the appointment of a receiver or receivers in the foreclosure proceeding, or since the appointment of any such receiver, but such liabilities shall not include any liabilities to other railroad companies except for tickets and freight balances."

Strike out the words "legally chargeable against said old corporation," in the amendment of House numbered 2; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, and 5.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Provided further, That in case any uncompleted contracts for the purchase of lands shall be pending at the time of such foreclosure sale, such new company shall, upon payment to it of any unpaid balance of purchase money for such land at the time provided in such contracts for the sale thereof, convey and release to the holders of such contracts all its title, interest, and estate in and to the land embraced in such contracts."

And after the word "company," in line 4 of said amendment numbered 6, insert the words "to any bona fide settler and occupant in a tract of 640 acres or less."

Also strike out from line 7 of said amendment numbered 6 the words "said contracts for the sale of lands," and in lieu thereof insert the words "any such contract."

Also after the word "of," in line 12 of said amendment, insert the word "any."

Also strike out from line 12 of said amendment the word "contracts" and insert in lieu thereof the word "contract;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7.

H. HENRY POWERS,
GEO. P. HARRISON,
GROVE L. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

O. H. PLATT,
DAVID B. HILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

Statement to accompany the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 1832, entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company."

The amendment of the House numbered 1 seeks to subject the new corporation to all the obligations and duties to the United States imposed upon the original company by the charter of 1865. Hence the words "the United States" are added to the amendment by the conference committee to make such meaning clear and certain.

The amendment of the House numbered 2, with respect to the liability of the purchases for the unsecured debts of the old company, is enlarged to cover the instructions of the House to the conferees on January 29, 1897 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 1378), and is in accord therewith.

The insertion in detail of all such debts, demands, and liabilities under such instructions renders ungrammatical and unnecessary the words "legally chargeable against said old corporation," and for this reason only they are stricken out.

The amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, and 5 are accepted by the Senate conferees.

The amendment of the House numbered 6 requires the new company to protect the land warranties and contracts of the old. It is not clear that the amendment applies to executory land contracts whereon the purchaser has made partial payments, and language has been added so providing in terms.

With respect to executed land contracts, the Senate conferees insisted that such liability should be applied to actual settlers and occupants purchasing in tracts of 640 acres or less, following legislative precedent in this regard, as illustrated by the general railroad land-grant forfeiture act of September 29, 1890, section 3 (26 Stat L., 496), where the right is so protected to a maximum of 320 acres on payment to the United States of $1.25 per acre. Here the new company is required to recoup the purchaser for loss of title to the extent of 640 acres, but without any compensation therefor.

The amendment of the House numbered 7 is accepted by the Senate conferees.

H. HENRY POWERS,
GEO. P. HARRISON,
GROVE L. JOHNSON,
Conferees.

JERUSHA STURGIS.

Mr. KIEFER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 122) granting a pension to Jerusha Sturgis, widow of Brig. Gen. Samuel D. Sturgis.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report read before leave is given.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. MILNES. We can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The request is made for order. The Chair again begs leave to remind the House that the passage of this bill, and any other presented in this way, requires unanimous consent, and every member becomes personally responsible in regard to it; and unless there can be silence, it is impossible for members to do their duty, and the Chair supposes they intend to do so.

Mr. SAYERS. If that be the case, and everyone is responsible, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Every member is responsible for the passage of bills which require unanimous consent.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not doubt it, and I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

HUGH M'LAUGHLIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1515) for the relief of Hugh McLaughlin, with Senate amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

GEORGE I. SPANGLER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4424) to correct the military record of George I. Spangler, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read and concurred in.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10336, and the Clerk will resume the reading where it was stopped at the time the committee rose yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Puget Sound, Washington: One clerk, at $1,200; 1 rodman inspector, at $3.50 per diem; 1 messenger and janitor, at $1.76 per diem, including Sundays; in all, $2,937.90;

Naval station, Port Royal, S. C.: One clerk, at $1,200; 1 rodman and inspector, at $3 per diem; 1 messenger and janitor, at $1.50 per diem, including Sundays; in all, $2,688.50.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, at the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], that paragragh was passed over informally.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, civil establishment, Bureau of Yards and Docks, $67,110.44; and no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such services.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, that also ought to be passed over in connection with the preceding paragraphs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. To how many points does the gentleman propose to address himself?

Mr. BARRETT. The paragraph just read is simply a recapitulation of the other two, and if they are passed over this must of necessity be passed over also. It is a mere summing up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] asks unanimous consent that the paragraph just read be passed over informally with the points of order raised and pending thereon. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Boston, Mass.: For swinging gates for dry dock, $10,000; additional culverts in caisson for filling dry dock, $4,500; in all, $14,500.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer an amendment to this paragraph, but before offering it I should like to have the attention of the committee for a few minutes——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must first offer his amendment, in order that there may be something before the committee for him to speak to.

Mr. BARRETT. I think it has always been held, Mr. Chairman, that where a member rises and says that he proposes to offer an amendment to a pending proposition he may be allowed to make a statement before he offers it, but if the Chair insists upon the point, I will now send the amendment to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On line 2, page 18, insert, after the word "dollars" where it first occurs in that line:

"For construction of a concrete dry dock, the total cost of which shall not exceed $1,000,000, the contract for which the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make, $100,000."

Strike out "fourteen thousand five hundred" and insert "one hundred and fourteen thousand five hundred."

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, against that amendment I desire to reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] is recognized on the point of order.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the House kindly set aside its rule yesterday and allowed me fifteen minutes to debate this matter. Inasmuch as I propose in a general way to speak on the whole dry-dock question, I shall ask the indulgence of the House, in view of the extent of the subject, if I am compelled to trespass for a few minutes longer. I should like to have the attention of the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts kindly state whether this is the point at which he desires to occupy the fifteen minutes accorded to him?

Mr. BARRETT. I wish to call the attention of the committee to one of the most important parts of a naval establishment, which, for some reason or other, has been left without any favorable consideration by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not wish to invade the sacred precincts of that committee room, and therefore shall not discuss any reasons why or why not the committee has neglected to make any suggestions or recommendations in regard to the building of dry docks.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit the chairman of the committee thus seriously arraigned——

Mr. BARRETT. Not seriously "arraigned."

Mr. BOUTELLE (continuing). To say that we failed to find any recommendation for any such appropriation in the estimates of the Navy Department.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to yield to any member on the floor for any proper question. I propose to answer the suggestion which I have thus brought out from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, but I do not wish to have the time occupied by interruptions taken out of the too short time allowed to me.

Now, everybody who knows anything about naval affairs knows that the most important feature of a modern navy, outside of warships, is dry docks.

I need only recall the fact that Great Britain has 43 dry docks, 18 of which are at the harbor of Portsmouth, and that France has 34 dry docks, while the United States has only one on each coast large enough to hold its largest ships, to make the Committee of the Whole recognize the importance of this question.

The best naval authorities in Great Britain, discussing the question of war with France, admit that, though the coast of France is only 150 miles away from that of Great Britain, it would be impossible to keep in actual service on the coast of France more than two out of three of the British war vessels supposed to be in active service. That is, within a radius of 150 miles from the basis of operation one ship out of every three must be constantly in the docks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we build a navy, I suppose, with the apprehension that at some time we must go to war with it. We do not build our Navy for yachting or for purposes of pleasure. We build it to fight.

To fight with whom, Mr. Chairman?

There are only two nations on the face of the globe from whom by reason of a suitable naval base we have anything to fear in connection with naval warfare. The first is Spain, who has a base of operations in Cuba. But for this purpose she need not be considered. If this country had done its duty, the navy of Spain would have been wiped off the surface of the ocean months ago, or else she would have treated American citizens with that decency which every other nation, weak or powerful, compels, or tries to compel, from every nation on earth. [Applause.]

Spain is not dangerous to us.

How about Great Britain? Great Britain has two bases of operations against our eastern coast.

The first is at Halifax; the second is at Bermuda.

Bermuda is distant from Norfolk, where we have a navy-yard, 660 miles. It is distant from Port Royal, where we have another navy-yard, 800 miles. That is, the nearest distance to Bermuda for our naval base is 660 miles.

What have the British at Bermuda? They have a great floating dock into which every war vessel of the British navy can go; they have great shops, covering acres of ground, from which not only one but many war vessels can be repaired at a time. What have we at Port Royal, which is distant from Bermuda 800 miles? We have a dry dock which our large war vessels can get on only about seven days in every month, and into which under no circumstances can the largest vessel in our Navy find entrance.

Now we come to the other part of the Atlantic Seaboard of the United States. There we find, 480 miles away from Boston, the port of Halifax.

What about that port?

Ever since the Louisburg was captured by General Pepperill and New England troops, in 1745, and afterwards returned to Great Britain in 1763, and its works destroyed—ever since then the port of Halifax has been armed, fortified, and developed by the power of Great Britain until it is to-day one of the strongest naval posts on the globe.

What have they in Halifax? They have a great granite dry dock in which the largest vessels can find a place for repair. They also have a great ship railway upon which a vessel of 3,000 tons can be taken out and thoroughly repaired. They have shops covering acres of ground, and as well equipped for repairing as any shops in the United States of America. They have a regular garrison. They have a citadel and forts which make the place impregnable.

Now, that will be the great center of British operations on the Atlantic seaboard.

From there, if a war should come, the British vessels, close by their field of coal supply and close by that great naval base, would break out to make war on the United States. Where would that battle be fought, if fought it should be? It would be off the coast of New England.

And where would the American fleet find a place for repairs in case of any disaster?

As at present constituted no vessel of any size could find a dry dock, and without a dry dock none of these great iron vessels can be repaired short of the navy-yard at New York; and the navy-yard at New York is not only hundreds of miles away, but the course to it lies around Cape Cod, one of the most dangerous points of navigation along the Atlantic coast, whose sands are absolutely filled with the rotting hulks of vessels which have been wrecked there for the last two centuries and a half.

Have we no navy-yard on the New England coast where this work of repair could be done?

Why, of course we have. We have there one of the largest, and certainly, so far as machinery is concerned, the best equipped of all the navy-yards owned by the United States. Yet for the last dozen or more years that big navy-yard, which must inevitably be the base of all operations in case of war with England, has not only been neglected but almost suffered to fall into dismantlement because of the policy of the Navy Department.

Mr. Chairman, we will suppose that that battle is fought where I say. Every naval officer will agree with me on this proposition. We will suppose an American ship is injured below the water line. I make the statement that Congress has made no provision by which any repairs can be made. Any vessel thus injured must be irretrievably lost. And when I make that statement I give the very best reason why this dry dock should be constructed at Boston. It is an essential part of any system of defense against a naval antagonist.

Let me illustrate my point by what is going on in the State of Washington.

The British have within the last few years erected a great naval station at Esquimalt, situated near Vancouver; and they have put in there a great concrete dry dock. They intend to make that their naval base on the Pacific Coast. They have great shops there, too.

What have we done there? We have in the last few years gone out to Puget Sound—13 miles away from any considerable town (that distance across the Sound from Seattle), at a place where there is no railroad; where they had to clear away the underbrush in order to make a naval station; at a position which can not be defended by torpedoes because of the depth of the water, and whence the opening into the broad waters of Puget Sound is so wide that a competent naval authority tells me this morning he would not hesitate, in spite of the forts, to put through any ship of which he was in command—at a place which thus can not be defended we are establishing a naval depot in opposition to that of the British at Esquimalt. We have built a great dry dock up there, and, so far as anybody knows, that is all there is there at the present day——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Not at all.

Mr. BARRETT. I quote the statement of an authority at the Department—with the exception of five or six houses for officers, a machine shop now in process of completion, and a little village near by. I am glad that a naval establishment is being constructed there. It ought to have been built. We must offset that at Esquimalt.

But as compared with the immense interests on the Atlantic Seaboard menaced by the works located at Halifax, for which no provision has been made—as compared with this immense danger, I say the threat to be apprehended at Puget Sound from Esquimalt is hardly to be put into the balance and weighed against it.

You might destroy all the property in the States of Washington and Oregon; you might sweep it all out of existence to-morrow; and you could find on the coast of New England property of immensely more value to be destroyed, as well as more strategic advantage to be gained in the event of success, than on the whole Pacific Coast of the United States.

Now let me tell you what our dry docks consist of to-day. I wish the members of this House could see this diagram which I have had brought here from the Department. It shows that we have five or six of what we call large dry docks, at New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Port Royal, Mare Island, and Puget Sound. In only one of them (New York) on the Atlantic Coast, and in the new one (Puget Sound) on the Pacific Coast, can the largest war vessels of our Navy find refuge.

The one at Norfolk will not hold such vessels; the one at League Island will not hold them; the one at Port Royal will not hold them; the one at San Francisco will not hold them.

We do not especially need dry docks south of Norfolk. My friend, the chairman of the committee, well knows——

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman will please not refer to me to confirm statements that are absolutely erroneous.

Mr. BARRETT. If, when I get through, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will say it is erroneous, I will apologize. I repeat, as my friend the chairman of the committee well knows, south of Norfolk the shallowness of the waters renders all our South Atlantic coast practically impregnable against any of the great battle ships of a foreign power. It is along the northerly coasts where deep water is to be found—here we must make our defense against this kind of attack. No provision has been made for it, except a single dry dock at the New York Navy-Yard, and that, as you know, in time of war, would be absolutely incapable of furnishing the supply which is necessary in case of the great demand that would then be made upon it.

Let me give you the dimensions of the various dry docks on the Atlantic Coast. That at Boston, which every naval officer who has ever written on the subject says must be the central base of all naval operations in case of war with England, is 280 feet long. Those at Philadelphia, Norfolk, and Port Royal are 410 feet long, and the one at New York, the only one, as I say, capable of holding our large war vessels, is 560 feet long.

Now, how does it happen, Mr. Chairman, that the demands of the country for a naval base at Boston have not been met?

I can only answer that by referring to the legislation on this subject. I find that the New York and Norfolk navy-yards 410-feet docks were authorized by a vote of this House, which passed in the spring of 1887. This was done by an understanding that the then Secretary, Mr. Whitney, of New York, should designate those two yards.

I find that no appropriation was ever made for the New York dock now building, because the Administration sold enough land off of the navy-yard premises to pay for that dock.

I find that at Puget Sound and Port Royal docks were authorized in 1890 and 1891. When I tremulously asked the question at the Department why they ever established a naval station at Port Royal, I was told that, after all, "considerations of locality and of politics weighed very much in such matters."

I will say that New England does not ask this dry dock on account of locality or of politics. We have found in the last half dozen years that our naval interests have been sedulously set to one side, but we do say that for the interest of the country, in case of the only possible war which we could have on the ocean, this dry dock should be established in Boston, or else we are practically defenseless for the protection of our coasts against a foreign fleet.

I will not go into the advantages of Boston. I dismiss that in a sentence.

It is the natural base of operations. There are plenty of workmen of the most approved skill to be had there for the asking. It is a place well defended already by the Government, because of the great commercial importance of Boston. It is a harbor whose equal may be found, but whose superior does not exist in the country.

Now, my friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. BOUTELLE] intimated—and I trust it was no more than an intimation—that the reason why this appropriation was not authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs was that no estimate was furnished by the Navy Department. I wish to say, as illustrating the methods employed in this Administration, that the proper head of a department in the Navy Department was directed by the present Secretary of the Navy not to put in his annual report any reference to dry docks.

The man who knows more about the subject by virtue of his position than any naval officer in the country, when making up his annual report, was informed by the Secretary of the Navy that he did not want any reference made therein to any new dry docks.

Then, what did the Secretary of the Navy do? I say this in all kindness. I bring up no sectional question. I do not allude to the very noticeable amount of money that has been expended at the Norfolk Navy-Yard during this Administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARRETT. I ask the House to allow me to finish this. It will only take two or three minutes.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. I suggest that the gentleman be allowed to complete his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRETT. I shall be very brief. The Secretary of the Navy having already directed that the officer of the Department who knew all about this subject should make no reference to it in his report, I find that the Secretary of the Navy himself comes in with the following recommendation for a yard which already has two dry docks; for a yard which, within the memory of members of this House, has had immense sums appropriated for its development; for a yard which occupies no strategic naval position in regard to any possible foreign war—I find the Secretary of the Navy, having, as I said, directed that the proper officers of the Department should suppress all reference to the subject in their reports, in his own report uses the following language:

> At the navy-yard, Norfolk, a dry dock of sufficient size to take in the longest, widest, and deepest draft ships is very much needed. It is therefore recommended that a dock of the following dimensions be appropriated for at that place: Length on floor, clear, 650 feet; width of entrance, 100 feet; depth at mean low water, 30 feet.
> This dock the Department recommends to be built of concrete, which possesses advantages over stone, first, in that the structure would be a monolith; second, more readily repaired; third, much cheaper. Its advantages over wood are durability and dryness. Estimated cost, $1,000,000.

It must strike gentlemen as being a little peculiar that as to this great navy-yard at Boston, on which I have challenged contradiction of its being the great strategical point of probable naval warfare, that this bill only appropriates for improvement and extension $14,500, while the Norfolk yard, that under no possible circumstances in case of war could be of so much importance, gets $130,000, while Philadelphia gets $190,000, and Brooklyn $133,000.

I repeat, with no desire to do anything which is disadvantageous to either of the other yards, that the Boston yard is better equipped to-day in machinery and in every other quality, except a dry dock for the repair of our great war vessels, than either of the other yards. Yet it has for the last ten years been set aside resolutely, because the administration of the Navy Department for the last three Presidential terms in this country has been devoting itself to the extension of the Norfolk and New York yards.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one more point, and I am done. I am satisfied from what I have learned of this question, and I think no member of the Commitee on Naval Affairs can dispute my position, Philadelphia is the best place to build the ships of all navy-yards. Board after board of naval officers has reported to that effect. That city has all the natural advantages and everything there to enable it to build ships cheap and to the advantage of the Government, yet not a single ship of the new navy has ever been built in the Philadelphia Navy-Yard. Every one of them has been built, so far as navy-yards on the Atlantic coast are concerned, either at Brooklyn or Norfolk, Va. I was told by a responsible party in the Navy Department, "You must remember that they are in doubtful States."

"Doubtful States," Mr. Chairman!

Has it come to that, that the building of vessels for the new

Navy in the navy-yards of the United States is not carried out where it can be done cheapest and best for the Government, but for some political consideration?

Now, as I was saying, Philadelphia is the great——

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman state who in the Navy Department stated to him that the reason battle ships were not built at Philadelphia was because these other States were "doubtful?" Was it anyone who was authorized to speak for the Department?

Mr. BARRETT. I trust the gentleman will not press me on that point. I simply state that a prominent officer in the Navy said that to me. Did he not tell the truth?

But I do not ask that Boston shall be made a place to build ships. I admit that the best place for the construction of ships is the place nearest the coal, iron, and other materials used in their construction; but I do say that when the stress of war comes on this country, if it ever does come, that the place where that conflict will be made is Massachusetts Bay; and the place to have ready to repair your damaged ships in such event is the place nearest to which they can fly, and that place is on the New England coast. My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] has reserved a point of order. That will be discussed later.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARRETT. I thought I was to have reasonable time to conclude my remarks. I can conclude in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended for three minutes further. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARRETT. I have no quarrel with the Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy-Yard, nor with any other navy-yard. The citizens of this country demand, and that is confirmed by every naval authority in the country, that we should make some provision for maintaining a place to repair these great warships within a reasonable length of distance from where the inevitable conflict must come, if we ever get into a war with England.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to disclaim absolutely and utterly any selfish interest in this matter. If gentlemen can prove to me that any other port than Boston is a better place than that is, I will vote for the construction of a dry dock elsewhere than at Boston. I think I have proved that the New England coast is the place where this great conflict must occur, if any comes. If I have not done so, I will withdraw all claims for Boston. If you are to have a Navy for actual use and service in time of war, you may build battle ship after battle ship, and make your Navy big enough to stretch from the Atlantic around Cape Horn to the Pacific, but if you have not a suitable provision on the Atlantic coast, within a reasonable distance of the probable battle zone, where repairs can be made, the whole Navy will only be a fleeting show, an idle pageant, simply for display in naval parades in times of peace, and of no earthly use when the great stress comes in times of war.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we will never have use for the Navy in time of war. I sometimes doubt very much that we will ever have to use a navy in battle. I hope there will come up no occasion when we will have to use it, as little Greece has to-day. Little Greece, with her little, sparse, scantily settled country, is challenging the admiration of the whole civilized world by sending her navy in the cause of humanity and of civilization for the relief of that little Island of Crete. She is able to do so because she has made for herself along the coast of the Piræus proper naval arsenals, which furnish the basis for the operation of these vessels.

I ask members of this House to consider carefully whether a great wrong has not been done the people of this country in thus leaving our New England coast, and inferentially our whole Atlantic coast, without provision for the repair of naval vessels in case of war with England, in the only location where they can go for repair, the only location where a dry dock can then be of any service in the defense of the country.

With that, gentlemen, I am done. [Applause.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been a point of order made against this amendment. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to discuss the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Washington on the point of order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I have supposed that at all times when men were seeking advantage of relief for their own localities from the Congress of the United States in addressing themselves to the subject they would feel it rather wise than otherwise not to attack other sections of the United States, and I did not suppose that in supporting this amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] would find it either necessary or pleasant to make an attack upon other sections of the country. He attacks the Pacific Coast and attempts to belittle the value of property there and of the settlement of that region, and incidentally, it seems to me, the citizenship of that part of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking of the Port Orchard dry dock, on Puget Sound, that dry dock was located after the fullest investigation by the officials of the Navy Department. Commissions were sent out there repeatedly, and the whole ground was examined, the whole situation was looked into. The dry dock at Port Orchard is advantageously situated, and, as I understand, is the largest dry dock now in the United States. Right across the Straits of Fuca from the mouth of Puget Sound the British Government has a great outpost. That place is the headquarters for the British fleet in the Pacific Ocean. The British have invested many, many millions of dollars in fortifying that place, and within 30 miles of Puget Sound is one of the most important of the British outposts.

Gentlemen will remember that a transcontinental line runs through the British possessions from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and that probably as fine coal fields as exist in the world are within the soil of British Columbia. They will understand, also, that that coal supply is of vast importance to a fleet operating in the Pacific, and with this great railway and with their outlet the British have us at a great disadvantage; so it is all important to the United States that a place where war vessels can be repaired at any time should be established and maintained as near as possible to that British outpost. For that reason Port Orchard has been selected as the site for a navy-yard and a dry dock.

I see no reason for criticising the action of the Navy Department in that behalf. On the contrary, I believe that Congress and the Navy Department are to be commended for that action. This Port Orchard navy-yard or dry dock is not "away from everybody," or anything of that sort. It is easy of access from the cities of Puget Sound, and it is surrounded by a settlement which is a pretty dense settlement in some places. It is advantageously located in all respects. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in discussions of this kind some regard ought to be had for all portions of our country. I would be with the gentleman from Massachusetts for an appropriation for his proposed dry dock. I have always been willing, ever since I have been in Congress, to assist other members in accomplishing desirable legislation, and never have I for a single moment permitted myself to tear down, with the idea of benefiting myself or my constituents, or to object to some other member's proposition, with the idea of retaliating or accomplishing something for myself. I feel such a course to be beneath the dignity of a Representative in the Congress of the United States. I think we ought to display patriotism here upon these subjects as upon all others affecting the interests or the protection and welfare of the whole nation. That is the attitude I have always taken, and it is the attitude I shall always preserve on this floor and elsewhere as a citizen of this country or as a representative of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE], who could not have heard what I said, although he sits right behind me, that I expressly stated that I was in favor of the Puget Sound dry dock.

I took it simply as an illustration to prove that we are by every consideration at least equally entitled to a like naval basis on the New England coast.

Now, I propose to use the gentleman's own arguments to demonstrate that proposition.

He says that right opposite to this station on the Pacific coast is the terminus of the great Canadian Transcontinental Railroad. Well, sir, Halifax is the other end of that Transcontinental Railroad, and Boston stands in the same relation to Halifax that Port Orchard does to Esquimalt.

The gentleman speaks of the great deposits of coal in British Columbia. The great deposits of coal in Canada are around Halifax, and they help to make Halifax the great British naval station on the Atlantic that Esquimalt is on the Pacific.

The gentleman says that I spoke of this Pacific dry dock being not easy of access. I did, and I told the truth. I said it was 13 miles from Seattle, and that it had no rail communication with that or any other city.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Naval vessels, however, do not travel by rail.

Mr. BARRETT. But supplies do. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say that if there is one argument for establishing a great dry dock at Port Orchard, there are at least a hundred for establishing such a dry dock on the New England coast.

I congratulate my friend from Washington upon having achieved so great a success in getting that dry dock established on his coast. I regard it as the best possible argument for establishing a similar dry dock in a part of the country where there are ten times as many people, ten times as much property, and where there is ten times as much danger of a naval conflict.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I regard American soil everywhere as sacred, whether there are people living upon it or not.

Mr. BARRETT. So do I; and I invite the gentleman to help to protect it everywhere.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order on this amendment to enable the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] to call attention to the general subject of dry docks and their importance. In much that he has said I agree with him. His argument is in favor of the right thing at the wrong place. New England merits and deserves a dry dock. I am not now to discuss the question whether it should be located at Charlestown or not. If I were to do so, I think I could satisfy this House that that is the most inappropriate place under our flag. Boston Harbor has a large area of flats covered with but little water, with a narrow, crooked, snake-like channel winding round the ledges, and it would be a practical physical impossibility to get a war ship into Charlestown Harbor, and that if, in the chapter of accidents or the providence of God, you should get one into a dry dock there and should have occasion to use that vessel at sea, the only way you could get her out would be to take her to pieces, transport her overland by freight to Portsmouth, set her up and launch her there, where there is water enough to float any vessel, where we have 60 feet of water 4 miles inland at low tide. At Charlestown Harbor a merchantman of ordinary size can not turn around. And it is a matter of newspaper notoriety that almost every day the coasters, in endeavoring to get from Boston Harbor to sea, go ashore on the ledges and reefs.

I sympathize with my friends from Boston who want to make Charlestown a seaport town. I will cheerfully vote for all the appropriations which may be needed to enable them with dredging machines to dig out the mud in Charlestown Harbor, to tear out the rocks and ledges which now present an impassable barrier from the high seas into that harbor for a ship of any magnitude. With them, I say, I sympathize. I say go on, gentlemen; dig out your mud; tear out your ledges; and when you get that harbor into such a condition that a good-sized merchantman can get into it with safety, then I shall be ready to vote an appropriation for a dry dock, if we need one elsewhere than at Portsmouth, where, as I have said, we have to-day 163 acres of Government land; where we have shops and everything in addition necessary to build an ironclad. We have 60 feet of water at low tide 4 miles inland, with rocky bottom—all that is necessary—a place where God designed that a dry dock should be, and where His will, I think, will obtain some time. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, having said thus much—not thinking it profitable to discuss the matter further, because I have a notion, which may be erroneous, in reference to the ruling of the Chair on this subject—I ask that the point of order may be decided.

Mr. TYLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but will hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TYLER] on the point of order.

Mr. TYLER. Mr. Chairman, I have been rather surprised at the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT]. I had supposed that this bill was prepared on great national lines for the defense and safety of the American people. I did not expect that any member of this House would take such extreme provincial ground as that taken by a gentleman coming from the State where the "hub of the universe" is supposed to be. I am rather inclined to suppose, Mr. Chairman, that he thinks the safety of this great American nation depends upon the protection of property in the city of Boston alone. He seems to be utterly unaware except in the most general way of the geographical advantages of the various ports of the South Atlantic coast. I wish to call his attention to the fact that there is, as he admits, at least one place on the North Atlantic coast at which we have a good dry dock in which repairs can be made, and that is the New York Navy-Yard. Now, he comes and says, "Give us a navy-yard such as we desire at the port of Boston; give us a dry dock that we seek there; and the rest of the country will be thoroughly defended." He attempts to minimize the natural advantages of the port of Norfolk. He says that hundreds of thousands of dollars has been spent on that navy-yard, and that it is no longer necessary for us to make the expenditure of this $130,000 as provided in this bill. He criticises the Secretary of the Navy because that officer has called the attention of Congress to the necessity of a large dry dock at Norfolk.

When he talks about the strategic importance of Boston, has he forgotten that Norfolk is to be hereafter the defense of the national capital? Has he forgotten that in Chesapeake Bay is the great rendezvous for our ships of war for the North Atlantic and the South Atlantic coast? Has he forgotten that but a few years ago (computed in the life of a nation) because of the nondefensive condition of Chesapeake Bay the national capital was burned by an invading force? And does he think, in his wonderful and patriotic provincialism, that Boston is of more importance in the event of a great war with a foreign power than the preservation of the capital of the United States?

I am amazed, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman should have taken the ground which he has taken. I expected to see him exhibit a larger and more liberal spirit. Because he considers it necessary—and I may say that I agree with him in that regard—that there should be a dry dock at Boston, why does he consider it necessary to take the unusual ground—I may say, with due deference to him, the absurd ground—that there is no pressing necessity for a dry dock anywhere else?

Mr. HALL. Allow me a question right here. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] has stated that these ships to which he has referred were built by the Navy Department for political reasons. I should like to ask the gentleman now on the floor whether it is not a fact that the construction of battle ships is always let out by contract; that political reasons have nothing to do with the giving out of those contracts?

Mr. TYLER. I have always so understood. I have never heard that accusation made before, and I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts has made it unadvisedly in the heat of discussion, in the heat of his love for "the hub of the universe."

Mr. BARRETT. Allow me a moment. I propose to discuss the point of order when we get to it. But I am surprised that two members of the Naval Committee——

Mr. TYLER. I supposed the gentleman wanted to ask a question.

Mr. BARRETT. I wish to correct a misstatement, if you will allow me.

Mr. TYLER. Let the gentleman do it in his own time.

Mr. BARRETT. I want to make the correction in connection with your statement. I am surprised that two members of the Naval Committee, supposed to know all about this matter, did not understand that I said these vessels were not built by contract; they were built by the Government in the navy-yards at Norfolk and Brooklyn. And yet they tried to befog this House by making me appear to have said that they were built for political favoritism when they were let out by contract. These two ships were not let out by contract at all by the Government, and I want that statement to go into the RECORD at the same time as the other.

Mr. TYLER. You are only talking about two ships of the Navy, the Texas and the Raleigh, built at the Norfolk Navy-Yard.

Mr. BARRETT. I am talking about the ones built by the Government.

Mr. TYLER. Therefore the gentleman does not withdraw the charge as to the building of those ships that have been built under contract. Does he think those ships built by the Cramps were awarded to them because of political influence?

Mr. BARRETT. Shall I answer that question?

Mr. TYLER. No; I do not ask you to answer it. You have your own time in which to do so.

Mr. BARRETT. All right.

Mr. TYLER. I am amazed that there should have been such a charge. I can not understand where the gentleman gets his facts upon which he bases such an unjust charge against the Navy Department and against those who have had control of the naval affairs of this country for many years. I am very sure that the only reason why the Navy Department decided to have the Texas built at the Norfolk Navy-Yard was because it was a Government navy-yard, and there a ship could be constructed equal to any that floated on the seas. The fact of it is that at the Norfolk Navy-Yard there is every appliance for the construction of vessels. You can get there as good labor as any in the United States. You can get as skilled mechanics as you can at Boston or any other point, and so far as ships have been constructed there, two of them—the Texas and the Raleigh—are, of their class, as good as any that sail beneath the flag of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do, very briefly. I simply desire, for the sake of the truth of history and the orderly consideration of public business, to call the attention of this committee to the fact that the only proposition pending here is a desire on the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] to have a dry dock authorized at Boston.

Now, I can sympathize with that desire to a very great extent, but I am unwilling to permit this conversation to close without entering my dissent from nearly all of the conclusions which the gentleman from Massachusetts reached in the observations which he has submitted. He said that I very well know certain things. Now, I do not desire to take the time of the committee to deny in detail that I know certain things which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] was kind enough to incorporate in my supposed knowledge, but I do desire to say that the situation in regard to the dry-dock system of this country is very simple, and is very familiar to me. Indeed, I have participated to some extent in all of the legislation connected with the construction of the new system of dry docks, and I know of nothing which has taken place which should furnish even a reasonable basis for the criticisms which the gentleman from Massachusetts has indulged in here to-day.

It is sufficient for me to say that when the new Navy was begun we had in this country a very large number of navy-yards and a very small number of ships. In fact, we had no modern ships of war when I came to Congress. At that time a New England Secretary of the Navy, a man of great energy and ability, a Republican in politics, had undertaken to reorganize the naval service by doing away with our old wooden ships and commencing the construction of a modern steel navy. In one of his early reports the strongest criticism that he brought to bear upon the existing condition was in connection with the surplus of navy-yards and the deficit of ships. The expenditure for the maintenance of navy-yards was enormous compared to the number of tons of the ships and the number of guns that we could utilize. As an act of administration of the Navy Department, he issued certain orders under which certain navy-yards were practically or constructively closed in order that the expenditure there might cease.

Immediately after Mr. CHANDLER'S retirement from the Navy Department a proposition was brought into Congress under Secretary Whitney for reorganization of the entire Navy Department. In that reorganization Secretary Whitney reiterated the criticisms of Secretary Chandler in regard to the excess of expenditure for navy-yards, and he, in a scheme of reorganization which was afterwards practically carried out, recommended that the Boston Navy-Yard—the navy-yard at Charlestown, Mass.—should cease to be a navy-yard for the construction or repair of ships, but that it should be maintained for its ropewalk, and as a place to which the manufacture of steam galleys and utensils of that character should be transferred from the Washington yard, and for other purposes which he indicated. That practically closed it for the construction or repair of ships. This scheme further contemplated what has since been carried out, closing the Washington yard as a shipbuilding and ship-reparing yard, and establishing in it a great gun factory, which has proved a great success. The work of construction and repair of ships under these orders was concentrated in the New York and Norfolk navy-yards; and the navy-yard at Pensacola, which has gone into "innocuous desuetude," was closed up.

Now, I took a little part in the debate at that time, and my memory is very distinct about it. I recollect that I opposed the closing of these yards. I recollect that I used some of the language, or similar language to that used in some of the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], about the desirability of keeping these yards in full operation. My arguments were not so cogent, and my words, of course, not so eloquent; but I recognize in the language heard to-day some of the general trend of my argument in 1887. I have before me here the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing that debate, in which it will appear to anyone——

Mr. BARRETT. What is the date, please?

Mr. BOUTELLE. February 25, 1887, on page 2297. If anyone should care to examine so inconsequential a matter as my observations at that time, they will find that I uttered as strong a protest as I could frame against the closing of the navy-yards in New England. I set forth the facilities of the Boston Navy-Yard and the special facilities of the Portsmouth or Kittery Navy-Yard, and called attention to the fact that the Boston Navy-Yard had the best outfit in its shops of any navy-yard in the United States; and with as much urgency as I could command, I insisted that that yard should not be closed or the one at Portsmouth in the carrying out of this new scheme. I have a vivid recollection that there was not a gentleman from Massachusetts in the House of Representatives at that time who felt called upon to sustain me or to lift up his voice in so much as one word in behalf of the position which I took, or enter a protest against the closing of the Boston yard. I had the order here before us on which the Secretary of the Navy was transporting the material from the Boston Navy-Yard shops to those in New York and Norfolk to carry out his plan, based on his argument that it was a wise policy to concentrate the great building and repair works in these great yards. And while I called attention to what was going forward, and almost appealed for support from my New England colleagues here, I find that I made these remarks in the course of the debate. I will interpolate here, however, that we had got along to a point where it was proposed that a sum of money should be appropriated in the appropriation bill with which the Secretary of the Navy should locate and construct two dry docks—modern dry docks—but I opposed that on the ground that Congress should indicate where those dry docks were to be, if we were to act upon legislation. That was to the effect, if it was futile to utilize the different navy-yards of the country, I wanted to know where these dry docks were to be built. I insisted that a dry dock should be built at Boston; and then I appealed to my friends from Massachusetts to help me. But I find it recorded here:

This proposition has been brought in here by the committee with the express purpose, so declared, of precluding discussion upon the floor of the House. It is brought in here for the purpose of taking the matter out of our hands, and, as I said before, the gentleman from West Virginia has expressed the whole scope and motive of my amendment when he says this proposition ought to be brought in here on its own merits and not smuggled in under a tricky advantage taken of parliamentary practice, not by any pettifogging with the rules of the House, but brought in here openly on its merits as a proposition for the consideration and action upon the deliberate judgment of the members of this House.

I am in favor of supplying dry-dock facilities. I am not persuaded that the great seacoast of New England is necessarily precluded from having anywhere along its coast line the opportunity to build or repair a ship of war. I do not understand the geographical distribution which would count out from the beginning that great section of our country where shipbuilding has been a recognized art for centuries; and if the gentlemen from Massachusetts on this floor fail to raise their voices and protest, I raise my feeble protest in behalf of their constituency and their State.

[Here the hammer fell.]

I have said this much, Mr. Chairman, to relieve myself from responsibility of any failure to recognize the interests of New England.

Mr. MORSE. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks it is fair to the present delegation to charge upon them the sins of their predecessors?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not say anything except what I say, and if I can say that so that the gentleman from the Canton district will understand me, I shall have accomplished my object.

In conclusion, I just want to say that from that time to this time there has been more or less construction of dry docks in the United States. We have constructed a great many. We have constructed a series of dry docks. The debates in this House show at the time that these constructions were conceived to be large enough to take in any vessel that was liable to be designed or constructed in the future. We made a mistake. The enlargement of ships of war went far beyond all anticipations. At the time the first dry docks were authorized, one at New York and one at Norfolk, if my memory serves me, the longest ship of war in the world was less than 300 feet. We built and have utilized those docks. We have designed larger ships and have found it necessary to build larger docks. We have at Port Royal to-day a dry dock in which the Indiana, one of our largest battle ships, has been docked within a year. We have a dry dock at New York, which will be open very soon, that will take in the largest vessel we have either constructed or under construction. We have another dry dock on the Pacific coast, on Puget Sound, of equal dimensions, and undoubtedly we shall construct more dry docks in the future. The dry dock on Puget Sound was constructed upon the recommendation of two commissions. Two separate commissions were sent to the Pacific coast, and they located the dock there and Congress made appropriation for its construction.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish the gentleman would not interrupt me.

Mr. MORSE. I only want to ask him one question. I want to ask the gentleman if he is now in favor of constructing a dry dock at Boston?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, Mr. Chairman, if I thought the gentleman was asking that question in good faith, I would answer it. He knows that I am not in favor of authorizing the construction of a dry dock at Boston in this bill. The committee do not recommend it, and the reason——

Mr. MORSE. I thought from the earnestness of the gentleman's argument and his appeal to his former record that he was in favor of it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will permit me to state continuously my own view, I think he will perhaps understand it better, and it certainly will be a great deal more convenient for me. [Laughter.] I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that at the same time the commission recommended the construction of a dry dock on Puget Sound another commission recommended the establishment of a dry dock in Louisiana, at Algiers, opposite New Orleans. There are various reasons why that project has not been carried out. There were rivalries among different localities on the coast, and various conditions have intervened to hold that work in abeyance up to the present time. Year after year the Bureau of Construction has made the strongest kind of recommendations for a dry dock at Portsmouth, N. H., and I use moderate language when I say that the strongest recommendations that have reached the committee officially in regard to dry docks have been in favor of a dry dock at that point. There have also been recommendations for the construction of the dry dock at Boston, and for other dry docks on the Gulf coast. There is an absolute necessity in the near future for a larger dry dock at the Mare Island Navy-Yard, and it will undoubtedly be built.

The Committee on Naval Affairs have not undertaken to discriminate against any section of this country, or in favor of any particular port or navy-yard; but, in view of the same circumstances which have induced me as an individual member of that committee, with my strong prejudice in favor of pushing the work of constructing our battle line with the greatest possible rapidity—a spirit which, I am glad to say, has equally inspired my colleagues on that committee—we have refrained from making recommendations beyond those contained in the pending bill. We have done that in view of the circumstances in which we find ourselves at this time and in deference to what we believed to be the general sentiment of this House, that, with the large amount of construction now under way, we could afford to let this session go by and wait until the Treasury had begun to recoup from the deficiency which has existed so long. For the same reasons we felt that we ought not to come to this House recommending the inauguration of great expenditures for the building of dry docks at a time when we felt so poor that we could not recommend the building of more battle ships.

I do not know how much confidence the House of Representatives has in its Committee on Naval Affairs. I give all possible weight to the views and desires and arguments and knowledge of my friend from Massachusetts. I simply say that your committee, in failing to recommend the construction of a dry dock in Louisiana, or in Massachusetts, or at Kittery, Me., have acted in accordance with what they believe to be high public considerations of duty and a wise regard to meeting the exigencies of the time in a proper way. All I have to say in conclusion is that if my friend from Massachusetts from the Melrose district desires, for any purpose, to delay or obstruct the passage of this bill by making points of order against paragraphs which provide facilities that the Navy absolutely requires, and provisions in the bill that are made on the estimates and the recommendations of the Department regularly sent to the committee (which has not been the case with regard to a dry dock at Boston), why, of course, he is a member of this House, and has a right to make use of all the privileges that the rules afford him, in such way as may seem to him best.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Unless some gentleman desires to discuss the point of order, the Chair will rule.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. BARRETT. I desire first to have the point of order stated, and then I will determine whether I wish to discuss it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order, as the Chair assumes——

Mr. BARRETT. I beg the Chair's pardon. I submit that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] is obliged to state his own point of order. He has not done so. I want him to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire will state his point of order.

Mr. SULLOWAY. My point is that this proposition is new legislation, not authorized by the rules.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BARRETT. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, there have been two occasions in the history of this House when points of order have been raised against dry-dock appropriations. The first was in connection with the proposed navy-yard at Algiers, La., in regard to the purchase of land for a dry dock there. On that occasion it was held by the then occupant of the chair, Mr. Butterworth, of Ohio, that inasmuch as it was proposed, in effect, to establish a new navy-yard, it was new legislation. So the proposition was ruled out of order.

Again, at the last session of Congress an amendment was offered by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] which was ruled out of order by the then Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. I believed then and I believe now that the gentleman from Illinois was entirely wrong in that decision. I wish to quote from a statement made in this House by a former chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, Mr. John R. Thomas, of Illinois, who may be presumed, perhaps, to have known something about the question whether a dry dock is "new legislation" or "in pursuance of existing work" or not.

I desire that the Chair, although he has stated that he was ready to rule, will listen to this discussion. The question was upon a proposed appropriation for the dry docks at Norfolk and New York, and Mr. Thomas said—I read from the proceedings of February 25, 1887, page 2293 of the RECORD for that session:

> A dry dock is simply one of the tools employed by the Department in building and repairing vessels, and no more requires a special act of Congress to authorize its construction or building than it does to buy a hammer or 100 pounds of oakum.

Those docks were authorized by this House on a naval appropriation bill!

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman reading from the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BARRETT. I am reading from a statement made in the House of Representatives by a gentleman who often served in the chair, and who was at the time chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, Mr. John R. Thomas, of Illinois. I happened to be in Washington during the time when Mr. Thomas was a member of the House; and I remember very well the high reputation he had for parliamentary knowledge and ability.

A MEMBER. What date was that?

Mr. BARRETT. February 25, 1887.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That was during the term of a Democratic Congress. I hardly think Mr. Thomas could then have been chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BARRETT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He was chairman in the following Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The following Congress was not a Republican Congress.

Mr. BARRETT. Well, he was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in a Republican Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He was not a member of the following Congress.

Mr. BARRETT. Then he was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the so-called Keifer Congress. I make the statement that he was at one time chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, or was at the head of the Republican members of the committee.

Now, I submit—and I do it with all respect to the Chair—that if the Chair should decide that this point of order is well taken, he must of necessity decide that a large number of other items in this bill are improperly reported. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BOUTELLE], when last evening I raised a point of order against two previous paragraphs, expressed his willingness that they should be dropped out, admitting thereby that they were open to a point of order. I wish, speaking only for myself, to put on record my belief that the action of any chairman of the Committee of the Whole in deciding arbitrarily—and by that I mean arbitrarily as one man—that this House shall not consider a proposition to put into an existing navy-yard a thing which the common sense of every member here must recognize is as necessary for the conduct and maintenance of that yard as a commandant or a sentry at the gate—I say that such a stretch of authority seems to me to be not in consonance with the ideas that should run this House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is the information correct which has just been brought to me that, while I was inadvertently failing to listen to the gentleman, he said that I had agreed to drop something out of this bill?

Mr. BARRETT. I said that last evening, when I made a point of order, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs said, "Let it go out."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I said no such thing as "Let it go out."

Mr. BARRETT. I refer to those two appropriations for extra help, on which points of order were raised.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I never said such a thing, according to my recollection.

Mr. BARRETT. Well, I got up and stated——

Mr. BOUTELLE. What are the items?

Mr. BARRETT. They are in regard to the extra help at Port Royal and Puget Sound.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Extra help?

Mr. BARRETT. New officers.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. BARRETT. I withdraw my remark, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Absolutely.

Mr. BARRETT. But I understood the gentleman so carefully that I stated to him that he need not withdraw them, because I only wanted to offer my point of order to hold it in readiness, and probably should withdraw it at the proper time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. BARRETT. I withdraw the remark, then. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I never made any reference to it.

Mr. BARRETT. I think it is very strange. I think if other gentlemen who were sitting around here would refresh their memories——

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman undertakes to put it that way, I arraign him. I say I never made any such statement here.

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman need not arraign me. Will he be kind enough to wait until I get through with my sentence? I said if other gentlemen who were sitting around here would refresh their memories, I think that they would remember that I said that I did not desire to push that point of order to a decision at that time, but simply desired to hold it in readiness. I now understand that the gentleman said, "Let the matter go over," instead of "Let it go out."

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, that I believe that it is one of the most arbitrary things in this House when matters are brought in here in discussion of the bill which every man on this floor must feel are pertinent to the bill under discussion that they should be ruled out of order, simply ex cathedra. While I understand from what I have heard, and from the Chairman's statement of his readiness to rule, what his decision perhaps may be, I say, in all respect to him, and I think he will understand that I say it with the utmost personal kindness, that if he shall rule that this amendment is not in order I shall most respectfully and without any desire to embarrass him at all take an appeal, in order that the House may go on record as having decided that a dry dock is not an essential part of an existing naval establishment. I know that the making of that statement will not influence the decision of the Chair, and so I feel I can make it with perfect propriety.

I simply want the House to decide, in its wisdom, if it chooses to do so, that a dry dock for a navy-yard already established and equipped is not a part of an existing work. When that is done, Mr. Chairman, I shall bow as gracefully as anybody could to that decision.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BINGHAM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 257) providing for printing the reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. I desire to say a few words on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. If it is not in order, Mr. Chairman, to insert an item in a naval appropriation bill for the construction of a dry dock, I do not think it is in order to put in an item for the construction of a battle ship.

A dry dock is simply a sort of hospital for a ship that has been injured in war, and it seems to me that if you insert in an appropriation bill a ship, there is just as much reason why you can insert an item constructing a tool whereby the ship of war may be re-created and again made capable of performing the duty of a ship.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, to speak upon the question of the necessity for a dry dock at the Boston Navy-Yard, and also at various other points upon our coast; but as I understand the Chair desires to hear nothing at this point except strictly on the point of order, I will reserve what I have to say on that point until another time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I have already stated, I desire respectfully to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARRETT) there were—ayes 67, noes 19.

Mr. BARRETT. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the pending paragraph.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert on page 18, after line 2:

"The President is hereby authorized to designate two competent naval officers and one competent Army officer to inquire into the need of one or more concrete dry docks, capable of docking the vessels of the Navy existing or in process of construction, to be located at existing navy-yards north of Cape Cod. Said officers shall report whether, with due regard to cost, to commercial and naval interests, one or both of the existing docks shall be enlarged or new concrete docks constructed. Said officers shall report to the President not later than November 1, 1897, and the President shall transmit such report to Congress, with his recommendations, at the beginning of the first regular session of the Fifty-fifth Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, before a vote is taken on that, I want to say to the House that it does not seem to me that that proposition is at all a useful one.

Mr. BINGHAM. I should let it go in.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In the construction of the navy-yards already established we never authorized a commission to locate a dry dock except in the case of the original location. There is no question but what the Government will have proper dry-dock facilities. There are navy-yards at Portsmouth and Boston. I can not see any benefit to be accomplished by it, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why he has included an army officer?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to find something that would accommodate the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I drafted this as closely as possible to the exact language of the provisions which have previously passed the House. But I have left off any civilian. I did not want to make this so that there would be any unnecessary payment of money, but simply that plans may be designed, and hence I included an army officer. That is the reason the amendment is in the shape I have offered it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not propose to debate this matter. It is, in my judgment, utterly unnecessary; and it would seem to me that with the prospect of the Secretary of the Navy being from Massachusetts, the gentleman ought not to be apprehensive that the interests of that part of the country will be overlooked.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me to offer a substitute for his amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman propose to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon as practicable, appoint a board, to consist of three officers of the Navy, one of whom shall be a line officer, and one shall be a member of the Steam Engineering Corps, and one naval constructor, who shall investigate the question of the advisability of the construction of new dry docks.

And if they find that such additional docks are necessary, to recommend how many shall be built, where they shall be located, and of what pattern and of what material they shall be constructed.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the House will notice that the only difference between my amendment and that of the gentleman from California is that his amendment covers the whole country, while mine is direct and has reference simply to two places.

Now, I want to say one word in reply to my very distinguished friend from Maine, who has made this statement, in effect, in keeping with that made of another matter by my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], that it is almost "assumed" that a Massachusetts man will be Secretary of the Navy. I want to say I do not base my action here on any man being Secretary of the Navy from Massachusetts.

I would never go to a Secretary of the Navy from my own State and ask him to do a thing that I would not ask him under the same conditions to do for California. I want him altogether relieved from any possible suggestion that he is to use the high office of Secretary of the Navy for the benefit of Massachusetts. My friend from New Hampshire has brought up the question of the Boston Navy-Yard, and says that vessels can not go in there, and they can at Portsmouth. We know that the great new vessels of the Navy have laid at anchor at the head of the Boston harbor within a very short space of time. We know, and he ought to, that the largest steamers plying between this country and Europe come regularly to Boston. I know that he does not represent his State, for which Boston is the commercial metropolis, in his attack on the latter. But there is no question as between Portsmouth and Boston, as my friend indicated in the course of his remarks, though his remarks will undoubtedly prejudice members of this House against this attempt to secure a dry dock at Boston.

I want this House to leave to a commission of three officers to decide and report before the opening of the next Congress in December whether or not this dock should be built at Boston or at Portsmouth.

I would be willing that it should go to Portsmouth, if that is the best place. But I want some dry dock on the coast of New England, which this commission believes shall be the very best in a strategical naval sense. I ask the members of this House whether they will not make it possible to have that done, and have this question eliminated from the discussion in this House in the way it has been brought in.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that both the original amendment and the substitute are out of order.

Mr. BARRETT. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that point comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the point, coming after discussion, is too late.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I simply appeal to the common sense of this committee, that, if a commission is to be appointed to consider the location of dry docks, it ought not to be appointed to decide between the possible rival claims of two ports on our coast. There is no controversy between Boston and Portsmouth. There is no controversy between the States of Massachusetts and New Hampshire in regard to the location of a dry dock. There is a navy-yard at Mare Island, where there is surely going to be built a large dry dock at some time in the near future. There is a proposition for a naval station on the Gulf coast which will unquestionably be determined upon before long. There is an urgent request or recommendation for a dry dock at the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, and also a recommendation for one at the Boston Navy-Yard.

Now, for this House, at this time, to incorporate in this bill a mandatory order on the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to determine whether or not a dry dock ought to be built as between any two of these places does not seem to me to be dealing with great public questions in the broad manner in which they ought to be dealt with. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], or any other member, sees fit to make a motion here that the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to appoint a committee or a commission composed of distinguished officers to take into consideration the strategical conditions of our coasts, and to report in regard to the location of dock facilities and other things pertaining to the subject of naval defense generally, while I do not think it is necessary, it will not be harmful. But I do think that it would at least have the appearance of narrowing this question down to a local controversy for us to direct the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a commission to determine which has greater weight, the recommendation of the different bureaus that a dry dock shall be built at Portsmouth or the recommendation that a dry dock shall be built at Boston, that a dry dock shall be built at Algiers, La., or that a dry dock shall be built on the coast of California at Mare Island, instead of empowering the commission to act upon the broad question of where upon our coast dry docks are most needed. I hope, therefore, that the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts will not be entertained.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In your opinion, is not the Secretary of the Navy qualified to determine such questions by making a report or recommendation to Congress?

Mr. BOUTELLE. We have up to this time acted entirely upon the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy and of the boards that have been appointed for the location of dry docks at new points. We have located a dry dock at Port Royal, because there was no navy-yard there and nothing to indicate the building of a dry dock, so that it had to be done by special legislation. We have located one at Puget Sound, because it was generally agreed and strongly recommended by the Secretary that the Pacific Coast should have a dry dock, and a board was appointed to go over there and inspect the coast and decide upon the best location.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is there any necessity, then, for such new legislation as is proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is, of course, for the Committee of the Whole to determine. The Committee on Naval Affairs did not believe that it was either requisite, necessary, or expedient for the Congress at this time to take any action in regard to dry docks.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is not the Secretary of the Navy invested with sufficient power now for this purpose?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Secretary of the Navy can not cause the construction of a dry dock without an appropriation.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But can he not make recommendations to Congress?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Unquestionably he can, and he may at any moment order any number of officers to consider this whole question. I am glad the gentleman asked me that question, because it enables me to state that Secretary Tracy, on his own motion, in the exercise of the ample powers conferred upon him, did instruct a board of distinguished officers to consider the whole question of the naval defense of our coast, a board which became known as the "policy board," and which made a very elaborate, able, and important report.

[Mr. MEYER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, one moment and I am done. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs objects to this method of proceeding; and yet this is the method which has been adopted in every similar case. It was adopted with reference to Puget Sound, and with reference to Port Royal, and with reference to the case of my friend from Louisiana. It is the well-established practice of the Government. I ask that this proposition with respect to the coast of New England shall be given the same consideration which has been given in other cases where there has been a dispute about the location of a dry dock.

I hope that my friend from California will not insist on his amendment at this time or ask that his proposition be adopted in connection with mine. The effect of such a proceding would be merely to complicate this question with a number of others. We had a special commission for Puget Sound; we had a special commission for the Gulf of Mexico; we had a special commission for the dry dock at Port Royal. Now I ask—and I think it is a fair request—that we may have a special commission for this New England matter. Let it stand on its own merits.

Mr. HULICK. Allow me to make this inquiry: Is the question here whether a dry dock should be built at that place, or can be built, or is needed? What is the question which the gentleman wants a commission to settle?

Mr. BARRETT. I want the commission to report on the whole question whether there shall be one or two dry docks built.

Mr. HULICK. You wish the question determined whether a dry dock shall be built at Boston Harbor or at Portsmouth?

Mr. BARRETT. Why, of course. There is no question a dry dock must be built at one or both of those places.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does not the gentleman think that his proposition would be stronger standing upon the merits of the case, with the whole question before the Department as to where the establishment of new dry docks should be recommended to Congress?

Mr. BARRETT. I do not know whether my position would be stronger or weaker in the sense which the gentleman suggests. I want the facts. I want the men who know about this matter to report. I do not want anything lobbied through here in an omnibus bill in such a manner that we must vote for something else in order that our proposition may succeed. I want the Navy Department to decide through a board of officers about this New England question. Let questions affecting other parts of the country be decided by themselves. Let our proposition go through or not upon a statement of the facts, without reference to any subsequent combinations. I ask the members of this House to stand up for New England. My friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] says there is no hostility of Portsmouth toward Boston, but my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] intimated that there was. Now, let us have all the information possible gathered and submitted to this House, and then we shall see whether or not Congress will authorize a dry dock, or perhaps two; and I ask the members of the committee to allow this matter regarding New England to stand by itself, so that Congress may get all the facts. Then in the next Congress we will fight it out on the question whether there is money enough in the Treasury to pay the bills for this most-needed part of our naval defense.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to strike out the last word simply for the purpose of saying to the House that I hope they will vote to amend this into the only possible shape in which we can self-respectingly pass it through the House, and then that they will vote the amended proposition down as entirely unnecessary.

Here is a demand for League Island, which is to be the future great fresh-water basin for the laying up of our Navy, in order to economize and save the enormous expenditures of keeping all of our ships in commission all the time, with great crews on board. It is a part of the necessary scheme of our naval establishment to provide a fresh-water basin for the laying up of our ships, and this bill before the House now contains an appropriation of $100,000 to carry on the work of excavation in the back channel at League Island, Pennsylvania, where the ironclads are now laid up in fresh water, to make a place where we can put our great new battle ships into fresh water where they will not corrode. There is need of a dry dock there. There is demand for a dry dock there.

Mr. BINGHAM. We are not pressing it, though.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It comes from the Navy Department. It comes from every source.

Mr. BARRETT. They have got a dry dock there now large enough to dock any of our vessels except one.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, if the gentleman will have the great consideration to remain in his seat long enough for some one else to occupy the floor uninterruptedly for five minutes, he will put me under great obligations. I say nothing about the obligation that he may, possibly inadvertently, perhaps unwillingly, render to the Committee of the Whole. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I decline to be interrupted. A gentleman so full of parliamentary points as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] ought to be able to know enough about usage and parliamentary law to keep his seat once in a while, and this is the once in a while that I desire him to do it.

If any gentleman on this committee thinks that I have erred in being impatient, or in failing to show a proper forbearance to the interruptions of the gentleman, I will try to make amends in some way in the future. I say that to-day there is a strong, pressing demand for a dry dock at League Island, and if the question were before the House and pertinent to the time, I should be desirous of making a strong argument in favor of it. There is no question before this committee as to whether we need dry docks for our ships.

The question, and the only question, before this committee is whether, among the multitudinous items of a great appropriation bill, a bill of greater magnitude than any that has been presented to the House since I have been a member, a bill carrying such large provisions for expenditures that, as I have said before, we have not recommended the needed new ships—the question is whether the Committee on Naval Affairs, who must have obtained some glimmering of knowledge on this subject while they have been groping around in the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], and have not deemed it necessary at this time to recommend the construction of any one of the additional dry docks that undoubtedly will be required in the future, shall be sustained, or whether this committee will encourage any gentleman from any section in forcing a factious obstruction of a great measure like this for the sake, as it finally turns out, of instituting a controversy as to whether a dry dock shall be built at one or another of the four or five points on the coast of the United States where they surely will be built when the exigencies of the case cause Congress to think it wise to make the appropriation. I ask this committee, in the interest of legislation, in the interest of orderly business, of going forward with this appropriation bill at this stage of the session, to vote for the amendment making this a proper kind of investigation, if any is to be had, and then to vote the whole proposition down.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ODELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre, in the Mississippi River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 229) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held at Buffalo.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is my duty to say a few words upon this measure at this time, inasmuch as the navy-yard mentioned in my colleague's remarks is situated in my district. I think his amendment is a very proper one at this time, and one that the House ought to consider with great care. The navy-yard at Charlestown has been established for more than half a century, and its history is known all through the United States to-day. Last evening I was looking over one of the old magazines reading some matter with reference to the grand old frigate Constitution, contained in Niles's Register, August 24, 1833. and I find this reference to the Charlestown Navy-Yard. Speaking of the frigate Constitution, which is lying at Charlestown Navy-Yard, it says:

> As in the course of a few days the above noble ship will be hauled into the new and splendid dry dock which has recently been completed at the navy-yard, in the presence probably of the President of the United States, and many other distinguished officers of the Government, as well as of an immense concourse of our fellow-citizens, and as every circumstance relative to the favorite ship will now be rendered doubly interesting, we propose to offer a brief history of her splendid and glorious career, part of which is from memory, having been present when she was launched, part from official documents, and part we have gleaned from the old newspapers of the day.
> The dry dock into which Old Ironsides is now about to be taken, as well as the one which has recently been completed at Norfolk, is undoubtedly one of the most splendid specimens of stone masonry to be found in the world.
> We have heard it spoken of by intelligent travelers, who have visited most of the naval station depots in Great Britain, France, and Russia, as by far surpassing anything of the sort they had ever before witnessed. Indeed, no expense has been spared by the Government to render these magnificent public works as complete and perfect in every respect as possible. They were planned and have been constructed under the superintending care of Col. Loammi Baldwin, a gentleman who, for skill and science, has no superior in the country.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, what would be the feelings of the writer of that article if he were to visit that navy-yard to-day and gaze on the evidences of decay and neglect that it has received the past quarter of a century.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, in justice to the people of the United States, that some definite action ought to be taken in regard to the Charlestown Navy-Yard. As is well known, it possesses an unrivaled water front and one of the most magnificent plants in the world. It is situated near the best artisans and mechanics in the whole United States, and yet to-day the greater part of this magnificent yard is in idleness and the grass growing within its streets.

I think it is very necessary; I think it very urgent; I think that this Government, in deference to the best interests of all the people of the whole United States, should investigate this matter; and if that plant is of no use to the Government, if the property can be made of no use to the Government, then the millions of dollars which are invested there and without employment should be turned into the Treasury of the United States when the property shall have been sold.

This plant in time of war would be of inestimable value to the Government. The governor and legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts have taken official action in the matter and memorialized Congress time and again to arrange some definite plan in regard to this plant. The Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants' Association, and all the trade organizations of Boston and every city in our Commonwealth have petitioned members of Congress to bring this matter before the House of Representatives and Senate and have something done. I therefore hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered to this bill will be adopted. Although this amendment may not accord with the wishes of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I feel that the committee will recognize the justice of our demands and waive any objection they may have to this amendment. Mr. Chairman, Boston is the second largest port in this country to-day in the volume of business, as determined by her imports and exports, and, with the exception of New York, contributes more money to the revenues of this Government than any other city.

In times of danger from the enemies of the Government or in the hour of distress the people of Boston have been the first to contribute their means and support to the other portions of the Republic. It is not asking too much, then, Mr. Chairman, when the Representatives from that great city in this House plead for fair treatment at the hands of Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to close debate on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the amendment is now closed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The formal amendment of the gentleman from Maine is withdrawn and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], to which a substitute has been offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HILBORN]. The question is first on the substitute.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARRETT. Do I understand that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] intends to preclude all further discussion?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do, under the rules of the House.

Mr. BARRETT. Well, the gentleman having interrupted me repeatedly, will he kindly allow me a moment to make a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted, and the question now is on the substitute offered for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment and the substitute be again read.

The amendment and the proposed substitute were read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the substitute will be adopted. Is it a substitute or an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I hope they will both be voted down.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Maine is going to shut me off from further debate, let him sit down and shut himself off also. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am chairman of the committee, and have certain privileges on this floor.

The question being taken on the substitute of Mr. HILBORN, it was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. BARRETT, the Chairman declared that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARRETT asked for a division, but immediately withdrew the demand, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.: For quay wall, Whitney Basin, $18,000; dredging Wallabout Channel, $30,000; quay wall, Wallabout Channel, $10,000; coal shed for dry dock, $5,000; grading and sewering between dry dock and Clinton avenue, $10,000; grading and paving streets, $5,000; latrines, $18,000; addition to electric plant, $12,000; flushing-culverts in causeway (to be immediately available), $25,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy, after further investigation, shall be satisfied that the proposed plan for improving the sanitary conditions will be practicable and expedient; in all, $133,000.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out on page 18, in lines 10, 11, and 12, the words "flushing-culverts in causeway (to be immediately available), $25,000."

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that that item of $25,000 has been put in by the Committee on Naval Affairs, as I believe I am correctly informed, in order to provide a discharge for the sewage of the city of Brooklyn, and for no naval purpose whatever, and would therefore be subject to a point of order, which I do not propose to raise.

I do, however, wish to take a minute upon this amendment to pay my respects to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. We have had quite a long wrangle here this morning, and the result is that the Committee on Naval Affairs, headed by the eloquent gentleman from Maine, aided by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] has carried its point and prevented any provision looking for a dry dock on the New England coast.

I do not think that when I have stood here yielding with pleasure to every member of the Committee on Naval Affairs who desired to interrupt me—and there were several of them who did interrupt me to ask questions or to make suggestions—when I stood here yielding, as I say, in every case to the members of that committee, not only courteously, but with at least the appearance of being glad to do it, I do think that it was in poor taste for the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, when I wished to ask him a pertinent question, to refuse to yield to me and to move that all debate upon this paragraph be closed, in order to prevent me from making a statement which was essential to a full understanding of the facts.

Of course, I have no objection to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs or any of the older members of this body having their own way in everything. [Laughter.] But I do claim, as a Representative on this floor, when a matter is under discussion in which my State is interested, that I have a right to present the facts in my own way with courtesy to members and to the House. I have always tried to do it agreeably and with proper appreciation of the facts involved, and if I make a mistake I cheerfully acknowledge it.

I wish it might be understood that hereafter, when members on the floor try to conduct themselves in the way I have indicated, no chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs or any other gentleman, even though he may have been a member of this body for fourteen or for sixteen years, will find it either for his own pleasure or advantage to treat new members with less consideration than new members try to show to their experienced associates upon this floor.

The gentleman says he heard that I was going to delay the passage of this bill by making points of order. Now, I state deliberately that there are a great many items in this bill which, under the decisions of chairmen of the Committee of the Whole, are out of order and could not be kept in the bill for a moment—items of new legislation, for new projects, unheard of in any previous appropriation bill, and not in any way authorized by law—but I do not propose to raise points of order against them.

I am a believer in letting the House of Representatives, 357 men met here to represent the people of the United States, do business and make decent and proper appropriations without being throttled by appeals to narrow interpretations of the rules. [Applause.]

Therefore, though believing that this appropriation to complete the sewerage system of the city of Brooklyn is far from being in order on a naval appropriation bill, yet not for a moment wishing it to be understood that I would try to prevent this committee from exercising its judgment on matters of detail, I withdraw the amendment I have just offered, and say to the gentleman from Maine that I have no further objection to make to the passage of this bill. But I will welcome the day, and speed its coming, when this great body, endowed by the Constitution with the sole power of originating appropriation bills, will no longer bind itself down by rules which prevent its deliberate action on public questions.

Now, the members, if they want to really legislate for the country, outside the narrow ruts of routine, have to go to the Senate to get their matters considered on their merits. In that body, whatever its defects, members have retained the right of amendment and of debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will now proceed with the public business.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses, such as advertising, freight, foreign postage, telegrams, telephone service, photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, $1,500,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to cause the necessary repairs and preservation of the U. S. S. Hartford or to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home: Provided further, That the balance of the appropriation under the act of July 26, 1894, "for the repair of the U. S. S. Constitution, now lying at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, in the State of New Hampshire, in order that it may be used as a training ship for the Naval Militia, $8,000," or such part thereof as may be required, is hereby made immediately available for such work as may be necessary for the proper care and preservation of that historic vessel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the provisions of the bill calling for the expenditure of $8,000 for the repair of the old frigate Constitution, so as to prevent her disintegration and decay, will receive the support of this body.

Some six or seven weeks ago I introduced a petition from the Massachusetts Historical Society, calling upon Congress to take some action to preserve this grand old hulk, and since that time I have been in receipt of letters and memorials from all parts of the country, praying that some action be taken by Congress to preserve this grand monument of our naval supremacy in the earlier days of the Republic. It is my privilege to represent in this House the district in which the Constitution was built, and I count among the happiest period of my boyhood the days I spent with my playments in and around Constitution Wharf.

I was thus led from my childhood days, in company with the other boys born and reared in that neighborhood, to have the greatest regard and reverence for Old Ironsides, and it is a source of the greatest pride and satisfaction to me to stand upon the floor of this House as the Representative in Congress from that district and advocate legislation which will put this noble ship into such condition that she may continue for many years to be an inspiration to future generations. I think it may be proper at this time to give a short résumé of the history of this vessel.

The frigate Constitution was launched from Hart's shipyard, now Constitution Wharf, under the supervision of her builder, Colonel Claghorn, Saturday, October 21, 1797, at 15 minutes past 12 o'clock noon. It was a most auspicious occasion. The frigate descended from her ways with ease and dignity amid the booming of her cannon on the shore and the shouts of thousands of citizens assembled to watch the event.

She sailed on her first cruise Sunday, July 22, 1798, commanded by Capt. Samuel Nicholson, perfect in every detail, and manned, with very few exceptions, by native sons of Massachusetts. She was indeed an honor to the grand old Bay State, the embodiment of the strength, vigor, and manliness of the young Republic.

The Constitution returned from the first cruise in November, 1798, without any experiences. This was during the short war with the French Republic. Isaac Hull, who was to achieve such signal triumphs with her later, was a fourth lieutenant on her at this time.

In the war with Tripoli, under the command of the gallant Preble, the Constitution bore the brunt of the fighting, and in a single year, with the aid of noble Decatur and the smaller vessels, humbled the pride of the Barbary States, while the civilized world looked on in wonder, admiration, and respect. She remained in the waters of the Mediterranean till the commencement of the second war with Great Britain, June 18, 1812. In July, as the Constitution left New York for a long cruise, she was discovered and chased by a British squadron of five powerful vessels, under the command of Commodore Brooke. It was only by the most dauntless spirit and skillful maneuvering of the frigate that she managed to escape. For three days and three nights the squadron gave pursuit, and, had it been successful, the loss of such a fine frigate so early in the war would have had a moral influence impossible to estimate, and would have been an irreparable injury to the American Navy at that time. About a month after her escape the Constitution encountered the British frigate Guerriere, and after a terrific contest of over an hour totally dismasted her and gained a victory unequaled in its results, placing the United States in the front rank of naval powers—the queen of the seas.

It is impossible to describe the feelings of joy and pride that animated the American people when the news of the victory of the Constitution over the Guerrière was known. In Boston particularly the wildest excitement prevailed, and the people were frenzied with delight.

Boston being a shipbuilding town, it was the boast of her mechanics that in the event of war the "wooden walls of Columbia," as these frigates were called, would be the salvation of the Republic; and to think that one of their own Massachusetts vessels, built by Massachusetts shipwrights, manned by Massachusetts sailors, and commanded by a Massachusetts captain should capture and destroy one of the pets of the British navy was indeed a source of unbounded satisfaction.

On Monday, August 30, when the Constitution sailed up Boston Harbor, Captain Hull and his crew were accorded a magnificent ovation. The citizens, as in fact the whole country were wild with joy. A banquet was tendered to Captain Hull and his crew in historic Faneuil Hall. Speeches of a patriotic nature were made and a sword presented to Captain Hull. The other cities of the country also recognized the great victory in a public manner.

It is impossible at this late day to convey the great moral effect produced in America by this victory. So much had been written about British supremacy upon the seas that public opinion believed her invincible on that element. The world, in fact, accorded to England this high position. The victory can, in some measure, be appreciated by this statement, and the confidence which it inspired understood.

It is hardly necessary for me to go into further details of victories attained by Old Ironsides; how, under command of Capt. William Bainbridge, she captured the frigate Java, and with Capt. Charles Stewart she captured the Pictou and three others; and under Capt. William B. Shubrick she captured the Cyane and the Levant, or recount the numerous merchantmen she captured. Suffice is it to state that exclusive of merchant vessels sent back by her to the United States, Old Ironsides in her actions with armed vessels of the English navy took 154 guns and upward of 900 prisoners, and killed or wounded 298 of the enemy; and the value of the property captured could not be estimated at less than $1,500,000. Where in the annals of the world can such a record be matched? Where are the achievements worthy of a place with those of the officers and men of Old Ironsides? Is it any wonder that long, loud, and mighty the cry goes up throughout the length and breadth of this fair land to preserve and perpetuate the dear old frigate Constitution?

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I wish to say as a representative of the grand old Commonwealth of Massachusetts that I am proud of the glorious record of this grand old ship, and speaking as one of her sons upon the floor of this House, I feel I voice the sentiments of her people when I express the hope that before another winter shall have dawned she will be resting here at the national capital, to be hereafter preserved as a naval museum for all time.

Massachusetts has occupied a most prominent part in the history of this country, and in every period of her history her sons can point with pride to the record of her achievements.

There is Plymouth Rock and Faneuil Hall, the Old South Church and the Old North Church, Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill, and the stories associated with these historic spots will live forever in the hearts of a grateful people.

Rich as is her soil with the deeds of patriotic citizens and soldiers, no less glory is hers by reason of the eminence attained by her sons in all the walks of life.

As poets she has given to the world Lowell, Longfellow, Holmes, Whittier, and O'Reilly; as historians Prescott, Parkman, Motley, and Bancroft; as writers Emerson and Hawthorne; as liberators Garrison, Phillips, and Andrew; as Revolutionary patriots Hancock, Adams, Otis, and Quincy; as statesmen and scholars Everett, Choate, Burlingame, Sumner, Wilson, and last but not least, the great expounder of the Constitution, one of America's greatest statesmen, Daniel Webster.

The old Constitution, or Old Ironsides, as she is better known, takes her place in this column of Massachusetts celebrities, and right well does she deserve one of the places of honor. In the naval history of the whole world are recorded no more daring deeds and no more worthy exploits than those participated in by the Constitution and her American sailors.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and machinery: On account of the hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, and of the vessels authorized under this act, $5,925,359: Provided, That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," approved August 3, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to correct a typographical error. I move to amend by striking out in lines 23 and 24 the words "and of the vessels authorized under this act." Those words, which should have been struck out, were inadvertently left in by the printer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That in the construction of all naval vessels the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture, and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order against the paragraph just read. It appears to make a radical change in existing law. It proposes to amend a provision of law passed in 1886, prescribing exactly the kind of steel that must be used in the construction of our naval vessels.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I can explain this matter to the gentleman in a moment. In 1886 the act providing for the first steel cruisers was passed, making provision in detail for the letting of contracts, and also with reference to the character of the material, etc. Among other things, in order to insure that the material should be of high quality, it was provided that the steel of which the side plates of these ship was to be constructed should be of certain tensile strength and elongation. The provision was—

That the vessels hereinbefore authorized to be constructed shall be built of steel of domestic manufacture having a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds per square inch and an elongation in 8 inches of not less than 25 per cent.

In order to avoid falling below the requirement of tensile strength, and thereby having their steel rejected, the manufacturers, not being limited except in the minimum direction, made the steel, as a rule, of tensile strength considerably exceeding 60,000 pounds per square inch. The result was that a short time ago—I think at Newport News, where some of the plates have been received—when they were put into the machinery for bending the sharp angles cold, so as to be fitted for the use to which they were to be applied, it was found that the plates showed a tendency to brittleness; they were not sufficiently ductile; there was a tendency to crack on the surface. Examination showed that this was not the result of any failure to come up to the specifications; it was discovered that the requirements as to the quality of steel in regard to tensile strength had been the cause of this extreme brittleness. When the provision now in the law was made, the Dolphin was partially built, but our experience in the building of steel ships was very slight. Since that time it has been demonstrated that the character of the steel ought to vary somewhat with the purposes to which it is applied, and especially that this requirement of tensile strength ought to be modified in order to secure proper ductility. If it could have been kept down to 60,000 pounds to the inch, it probably would have been sufficiently ductile.

I will say right here that these experiences form the basis of one of the roorbacks which from time to time have filled the newspapers about the failure of something or other connected with the new Navy. There was a great hullabaloo made about the plates having been found defective, and it was claimed that that demonstrated that bad material had been put on the Government. The Department determined that the difficulty with those plates was their conformity to the specifications; that in the desire of the steel-plate makers to avoid having the inspectors throw out their product, they had run the maximum up too high and had made the plates brittle. The Secretary of the Navy, in a letter which I hardly think it necessary for me to read, has recommended that, in order to avoid those difficulties, that section may be amended in this form:

That in the construction of all naval vessels the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture—

That is the same as the law now—and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

That seems to me to be a very desirable thing. We know now just what kind of steel we want for the different uses on board the ship, and this will enable the Secretary of the Navy, through the Ordnance Corps, to specify just exactly the qualities that shall be made for the different uses in the construction of a ship.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, with that explanation, it seems to me it is reasonable to make that change in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886; of those authorized by the act of July 19, 1892; of the vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1893; of the three torpedo boats, act of July 26, 1894; of the vessels authorized under the act of March 2, 1895; of the vessels authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, and of the vessel authorized by this act, $7,220,796: Provided, That the total cost of the armor, according to the plans and specifications already prepared, for the three battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, shall not exceed $3,210,000, exclusive of the cost of transportation, ballistic-test plates, and tests: And provided further, That no portion of this armor shall be purchased until it has all been contracted for: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to contract with either or all of the builders of the hulls and machinery of those vessels, or with any one or more bidders, for the furnishing of the entire amount of said armor, if he shall deem it for the best interest of the Government.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask to strike out the words, in line 20, on page 47—

And of the vessel authorized by this act.

Those words were inadvertently left in the copy sent to the Printing Office.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection, and the request was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, in objecting on yesterday to the consideration of this bill without debate, I did so in order to ascertain whether or not the committee had adopted the recommendations made by the Secretary of the Navy in his able and exhaustive report to this Congress relative to the armor of the three vessels now being built, and if they had not done so, to insist upon an amendment. At that time I had not had an opportunity to examine the bill. Since then I have examined it closely, and I find that the committee have acted in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, and by so doing have saved to the Government, in the armor of these three vessels alone, over one and one-quarter millions of dollars. I therefore have no amendment to offer, and shall give the bill my hearty support.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, it was upon this point that I reserved the time yesterday. I wish to indorse the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRISON] with reference to the changes that have been made.

In the Fifty-third Congress, the contracts for the hulls and machinery of the three battle ships now in stock having been made, but no contract having been made for the armor, a resolution was passed instructing the Secretary of the Navy to inquire as to the cost of armor plate. On that he made an exhaustive research and examination. He made investigation in the armor-plate works abroad, and after careful examination he recommended to the Naval Committee of both the House and the Senate that he, the Secretary of the Navy, should be permitted to contract for armor plate at a sum not exceeding $400 per ton. There are altogether 3,025 tons yet to be supplied for the three vessels that are in stock, that were contracted for under the act of June 10, 1896.

Now there is a saving of $162 per ton, which the Secretary of the Navy has effected, to the United States Government. The average price under the old contract was $562 per ton, so that an average of $400 per ton will effect a saving of that amount. On these three vessels, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRISON] states, a saving of over a million and a quarter of dollars will be made.

But there are other clauses in this bill which are equally important, carrying out the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy upon this matter.

After providing, as we do in this bill, that the 3,025 tons shall not cost to exceed the sum of $3,210,000, which is at the rate of $400 a ton, there is this further provision:

And provided further, That no portion of this armor shall be purchased until it has all been contracted for.

That gives additional power to the Secretary of the Navy, so as to prevent a contract being made for a part, and then the Government being forced to pay a higher price for the balance. Then there is this still further provision:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to contract with either or all of the builders of the hulls and machinery of those vessels, or with any one or more bidders, for the furnishing of the entire amount of said armor, if he shall deem it for the best interest of the Government.

That permits the shipbuilder to contract for the construction of the ship and the armor plate when it is to the best interest of the country. I did not feel like letting this pass without stating that it shows upon the part of the Secretary of the Navy indefatigable work that has saved to the country as much as a million and a quarter on these three ships, and saved probably a greater amount in the future. I have no further remarks to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his point of order against the provision on pages 15 and 16; and, without objection, those sections will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what is the amount of the outstanding liabilities, the contract liabilities, or the liabilities yet to be contracted for on account of the new Navy which have not yet been appropriated for?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I will state, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, that the committee have prepared the most comprehensive table on that point that has ever been published, and it will be found attached to the report.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10386, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments and with a favorable recommendation.

The amendments were read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. These are simply clerical errors, and I ask that the amendments be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If no demand is made for a separate vote, the Chair will put the question on the amendments generally.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask for the previous question on the bill as amended to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 9647, "An act to authorize the extension of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same, amended so that the bill will read as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and required, within six months from the date of the approval of this act, to extend the lines of its underground electric railroad from the intersection of Connecticut and Florida avenues northward along Columbia road to a point on the west line of Eighteenth street extended: Provided, That the said company is hereby authorized to issue and sell such an amount of its capital stock as will, at the market value thereof, cover the cost of constructing and equipment of the extension herein provided for."

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
J. H. GALLINGER,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is a statement in connection with the report. I ask that the Clerk read the statement.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Statement to accompany the report of the conferees on the part of the House on House bill No. 9647.

The effect of the amendments agreed upon by the conferees to the bill as it passed the House are as follows:

First. To provide that the stock issued for the construction of the extension as provided in the bill shall be sold at its market value.

Second. To eliminate entirely from the bill the provision for the issue of stock to take up $250,000 of outstanding certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

WIDOW OF LATE SAMUEL F. MILLER, JUSTICE OF SUPREME COURT.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1582) to pay to the widow of the late Samuel F. Miller, a justice of the Supreme Court, a sum equal to the balance of his salary for the year in which he died.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the report in this case is very short, and I ask to have it read.

Mr DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. This bill contemplates the inauguration of a civil pension list, Mr. Speaker, and, although I do so with great regret, I shall be compelled to interpose an objection.

Mr. POWERS. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection until the report is read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no objection to the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

MONTGOMERY, HAYNEVILLE AND CAMDEN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3718) to authorize the Montgomery, Hayneville and Camden Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River between Lower Peachtree and Prairie Bluff, Alabama, which is identical with the House bill.

The House bill was read at length.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical with the Senate bill. The House bill has already been favorably reported by the committee, and I ask that the House bill lie on the table and the Senate bill pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take up the bill S. 3718, which has been read in substance, although the House bill has been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia.

HIRAM SANTAS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2877) granting a pension to Hiram Santas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Hiram Santas, late a private of Company G, Nineteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension roll at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having had under consideration Senate bill 2877, adopt as their own the following language, which they quote from the Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"This soldier served from January 30, 1864, to the end of the war, being discharged on the 16th of May, 1865. He served in the Army of the Potomac, and there contracted sickness which sent him for a time to hospital. The Pension Office rejected his claim on the ground that he had no ratable disability. Notwithstanding, the examining surgeons have several times found disability, and so reported. He suffers somewhat from deafness, shown to be the result of the trouble contracted in the service. He has also plainly shown distinct rheumatic disorders, rated by the surgeons as four-eighteenths. Also from a broken arm, having motion but two-thirds normal. He has lost three fingers from the hand, and from both these causes is rated as disabled by the board.

"The committee find his disabilities clearly proved; that he served meritoriously, and is entitled to recognition."

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, that is a very meager report. I would like to hear a statement from the gentleman presenting the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in reference to this bill that it passed the Senate some time ago, and has since been considered and favorably reported by the House committee. It is the Senate report that has just been read. The bill as originally introduced gave $20 a month, but as the report states, the amount has been reduced to $8, and the report sets forth the record of the soldier.

Mr. MILES. The report states that his application was rejected at the Pension Office; when was that?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am unable to give the date.

Mr. MILES. The report also fails to state this man's service in the late war.

Mr. BABCOCK. I beg pardon; the report states that fully.

Mr. MILES. I think it does not state how long he served.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; from the beginning of 1864 to the close of the war. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the bill (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CAROLINE WILKINSON.

Mr. ELLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk (H. R. 1513) granting a pension to Caroline Wilkinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline Wilkinson, of Chesterfield County, Va., the daughter of John Spears, a soldier in the Revolutionary war, who enlisted from Virginia, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1513) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Caroline Wilkinson," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

The claimant is the daughter of John Spears, who served as a private for fifteen months in the regiment commanded by Colonel Goode, Virginia Line, war of the Revolution. The service is a matter of record, and he was a pensioner on account of same until his death, in 1842. His widow, Susanna Spears, was also a pensioner until her death.

Mrs. Wilkinson, the claimant, is a widow 75 years old, in indigent circumstances, and dependent upon others for support.

The relationship of the claimant to the soldier is shown by the sworn statements of John S. Sims, William Phaup, and other aged citizens of Chesterfield County, Va.

The claimant resides at Pilkinton, Chesterfield County, Va.

There are several precedents for the proposed legislation, and in view of the claimant's great age and dependent circumstances, your committee believe that such precedents may very properly be followed in this case.

Mr. BLUE. Do I understand that this "dependent daughter" is 75 years of age, and that her father died in 1842? If so, I object.

BENJAMIN F. HOWLAND.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1565) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin F. Howland, late of the whale ship Edward, Mexican war.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, let us have the report in that case.

The Senate report (by Mr. SHOUP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1565) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howland, have examined the same and report:

The claimant made application for pension under the Mexican war service pension act of January 29, 1887, alleging that he enlisted in the United States service at St. Joseph, Gulf of California, in 1846, as a sailor on the ship Edward, commanded by Capt. John S. Barker. His claim was rejected in the Pension Bureau on the ground that the records fail to show that he was enlisted in the naval or military service of the United States.

The beneficiary is one of the survivors of the crew of the ship Edward, several of whom have been pensioned by special act of Congress, notably Charles H. Perry, June 20, 1890, and George James, February 28, 1891; and the widow of Charles Peirce, August 9, 1894.

The following extract from the report of the Committee on Pensions in the House of Representatives, Fifty-first Congress, first session, in the case of Charles H. Perry, above mentioned, contains the data relative to the service rendered the Government by the crew of the ship Edward:

"The claimant made application to the Pension Bureau March 24, 1887, for a pension under the Mexican war service act of January 29, 1887, declaring that while serving as fourth mate on the United States whaling ship Edward, commanded by Capt. John S. Barker, the ship touched the shores of Mexico, at a place called San Joseph, where they were spoken by a trading sloop to go to the rescue of the garrison at said place, which was in the possession of our American troops (28 men), but which was surrounded by several hundred Mexicans, cutting off the water front.

"The whaling ship Magnolia dropped anchor near the Edward, and at the request of the garrison the forces of the two ships were combined, making a force of about sixty men, who landed, drove the enemy back, and remained there until the U. S. ship Relief relieved them. In order to perform the service above named, the ships Edward and Magnolia were left in charge of two men each, and the landing force marched 1½ miles to reach the garrison. After relief came, the ship Edward took dispatches to Commodore Shubrick, who was stationed at Matzland with the squadron. Commodore Shubrick returned thanks in behalf of the Government for the service rendered by the Edward on that occasion, and at his request the Edward carried fixed ammunition, shells, etc., back to the garrison.

"The official report of the United States Fish Commission for 1875-76 contains, at the bottom of page 113, the following statement:

"'The London Mercantile Gazette of October 22, 1852, said: "The number of American ships engaged in the Southern whale fisheries alone would of themselves be nearly sufficient to man any ordinary fleet of ships of war which that country might require to send to sea. Instances are not wanting, indeed, where whalemen have undertaken yeoman service for their country. Thus in November, 1846, Captain Simmons, of the Magnolia, and Capt. John E. Barker, of the Edward, both of New Bedford, hearing that the garrison of San Jose, Lower California, was in imminent danger, landed their crews and marched to its relief, etc."'

"On page 421 of the same volume a table showing returns of whaling vessels sailing from American ports has a marginal note mentioning the fact that Captain Barker, of the Edward, marched with his crew to the relief of the garrison of San Jose in 1846.

"Your committee believe, however, that, in view of the service rendered by which the garrison of San Jose and the lives of more than a score of men were probably saved to the Government, the claim is an exceptionally meritorious one, and should be so recognized by the passage of the bill."

In a letter from the collector of customs at the port of New Bedford, Mass., he states: "Upon examination of the original crew list of bark Edward, of this port, which cleared July 14, 1845, on a whaling voyage, the name of Benjamin F. Howland appears, and is thus described: 'Benjamin F. Howland, born in New Bedford, Mass.; aged 17 years; 5 feet 5 inches in height; light complexion; brown hair.'"

The claimant is 68 years of age, and from the affidavits of two of his neighbors it appears that he is suffering from rheumatism and disease of the kidneys and bowels.

In view of the precedents established by pensioning the survivors above referred to, and pensioning the widow of a member of the crew, your committee believe that the relief prayed for should be granted, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that report to say there is no record in the War Department of this man's service?

The SPEAKER. That is what the report says.

Mr. MILES. I object.

COL. JAMES LINDSAY.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3331) to pension Col. James Lindsay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause the name of Col. James Lindsay to be placed upon the pension roll of the United States, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, to date from the filing of his application No. 833897.

Mr. TRACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read; and I state that I am satisfied that if the report is listened to attentively it will be found to set out the facts of this case fully and clearly, so that every member can understand them.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3331) to pension Col. James Lindsay, having carefully examined and considered the facts presented, respectfully report:

At the outbreak of the war of the rebellion Col. James Lindsay took an active part in recruiting the First, Sixth, and Eighth Missouri Infantry Volunteers, and early in 1862 recruited and organized the Sixty-eighth Enrolled Missouri Militia, of which he was appointed colonel, and served as such during the years 1862 and 1863. He had manufactured, bought, and paid $874.35 for a battery of three guns, which were used with his regiment, the equipments being furnished by Colonel Lindsay at his own expense, and these were turned over to the Government and were afterwards paid for by special act of Congress. In 1864 he was stripped of nearly his entire worldly possessions, amounting to about $20,000, by Confederates under Gen. Sterling Price.

On July 22, 1890, he filed claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890 (No. 833897), and in the medical examination had by the Pension Bureau he was rated at twelve-thirtieths for old age and six-eighteenths for catarrh, and the board say "is totally disabled from pensionable and other causes."

Colonel Lindsay was 82 years of age on January 14, 1896; was a good soldier during the war, participated in several engagements, captured a large number of the enemy, with horses, arms, ammunition, and stores at Bloomfield, Mo., on January 27, 1863, and lost his property by reason of his affiliation with and support of the Union cause, and now, in his old age, is left feeble and destitute; and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill after being amended by striking out the word "cause," in line 4, and inserting the word "place" in lieu thereof; also by striking out the words "to be placed," following the word "Lindsay," in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "late of the Sixty-eighth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia," and by striking out all of the printed bill after the word "month," in line 7.

Mr. TRACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the general order of General Carr, which I send to the desk, may be read.

The order was read, as follows:

[General Orders, No. 4.]

HEADQUARTERS, ST. LOUIS, DISTRICT OF MISSOURI,
St. Louis, February 2, 1863.

The brigadier-general commanding the district has heard with pleasure of the affair of the 27th ultimo, in which Colonel Lindsay, Sixty-eighth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, with about 250 of his men and 2 small pieces of artillery, provided at private expense, dashed into the town of Bloomfield, Mo., capturing a large number of the enemy, with their horses, equipments arms, and stores, thus completely routing and breaking up the troublesome band of guerrillas which have for a long time infested that neighborhood.

The officers and men of the Sixty-eighth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia engaged in this affair have the thanks of the brigadier-general commanding, and he hopes their example, when occasion requires, will be emulated not only by the Enrolled Missouri Militia, but by all the troops in his command.

By command Brigadier-General Carr.

R. M. ELLIOTT,
Lieutenant and Acting Aid-de-Camp.

Col. JAMES LINDSAY,
615 New Jersey Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, was the beneficiary of this bill wounded in any engagement?

Mr. TRACEY. I do not know that he was.

Mr. BAILEY. He seems not to have been regularly in the service.

Mr. TRACEY. The beneficiary of this bill is now in his eighty-fourth year. He was not in the regular service of the United States in the sense of having been mustered into the Volunteer Union Army, but he and his regiment did two years' hard, active service in the State of Missouri, as hard and as efficient as that of any of the soldiers of the Union Army.

Mr. BAILEY. In one engagement?

Mr. TRACEY. Oh, no; he was in many engagements. I have called attention to this particular one because there is an order of the commanding general, which has just been read, not only approving but commending the conduct of this colonel and his regiment on that particular occasion. Colonel Lindsay was in constant active service, however, for a period of two years, besides having assisted very materially in organizing three regiments of infantry.

Mr. BAILEY. How much does the bill involve?

Mr. TRACEY. Thirty dollars a month.

Mr. BAILEY. For how long a period—from this time on?

Mr. TRACEY. From this time on—simply from the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is too much for a militiaman, but——

Mr. ELLETT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BLUE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The Chair will lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The business on the Speaker's table having been finished, the Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. PAYNE moved that the House adjourn, but withdrew the motion.

The Clerk then proceeded with the call of committees.

APPOINTMENT OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Mr. BRODERICK (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 10155) amending section 1858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1858. In any of the Territories, whenever a vacancy happens from death, resignation, or removal, during the recess of the legislative council, in any office which, under the organic act and laws of any Territory, is to be filled by appointment of the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the council, the governor shall fill such vacancy by appointment, and shall grant and issue a commission to the officer so appointed, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the legislative council; and the governor shall have power to remove all officers appointed by him, either when said officers have been appointed by and with the consent of the council or have been appointed during the recess of the legislative council or have been appointed during the recess of the legislative council, as is in this section provided."

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was read, as follows:

On page 2, after the word "him," in line 15, insert "or his predecessors."

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this bill I have this to say: Section 1857 of the Revised Statutes defines the officers who may be appointed by the governor, and excepts from those appointments the district and county officers, leaving to him the appointment of Territorial officers. Section 1858 provides how vacancies caused by death or resignation may be filled, but leaves out of the question the matter of creating a vacancy by removal. Section 1859 defines how officers in the Territories may hold office. I suppose that section intended that the Territorial legislatures might provide for the election of all officers not appointed by the President; but it has not been construed in that way. Therefore in the Territory of Arizona, and, as I understand, in the Territory of New Mexico, a great deal of confusion has arisen concerning the power of the governor to remove Territorial officers appointed by himself or by his predecessor, when a change of administration occurs.

Up to eight years ago no question on this subject had ever arisen in the Territory of Arizona. If a Republican governor were appointed by the President and went to that Territory, and a Democratic legislature was in control, he appointed his officers, the members of his immediate political family, and they were at once confirmed by the council in the same way that the appointees of the President are confirmed by the Senate. But eight years ago some difficulty arose. There was at the time a Democratic incumbent in office. Mr. Harrison was elected President, and the Republican governor not getting there before the legislature lapsed by limitation as alleged, the Democratic incumbent sent to the council appointments and they were not confirmed. After the Republican governor reached there, the legislature having held over, the names of the appointees of the Republican governor were sent to the council and these appointees confirmed. But the Democrats claimed that the legislature having lapsed by limitation, that action was illegal; and although the appointments had been confirmed, the officers previously appointed held over on the ground that the new appointees were confirmed by an illegal body.

Very much litigation and trouble was thus occasioned, and it took two years to effect a change in those Territorial offices, at great expense to the Territory, the result being in some cases double payments for the performance of the same duties, payments being made not only to the de facto officers, but also to the de jure officers. A Democratic legislature coming into power and recognizing the propriety of the chief executive naming the members of his own political family, passed immediately an act giving the governor the power of removal; a Republican governor signed that act, and his appointees were confirmed by a Democratic legislature and everything was peacefully settled.

Now the condition is changed. A Democratic legislature is in control; a Democratic governor is in office; and not long ago he sent to the council nominations of all the old appointees, some of them having already held office four years. The council passed an act taking away from the governor the power of removal and fixing the tenure of office arbitrarily at two years; and the council confirmed the appointees of that Democratic governor.

Now, the leading Democratic papers of the Territories are opposed to that action, saying that Democrats can not stand on a record like that, because they corrected the evil in the first place, and to continue it now is against Democratic principles. But the simple fact of the case is that when the governor appointed by the new Administration goes to Arizona to be responsible for the conduct of the government there, he will find himself stripped of even the power of appointing his own political advisers—the attorney-general, the treasurer, the auditor, etc. When the administration changes and the responsibility changes, the access to the books which should be reached by the proper officers of the Territory will be barred by that kind of procedure.

I believe the intent of the statute has always been to confer upon the governor the appointing power, and also the power of removal; and it has been so held by the supreme court in New Mexico. But in order to relieve the existing ambiguity and to forever estop these men from juggling with political offices, and also to secure proper political responsibility in the Territories, it has been deemed best to amend section 1858 of the Revised Statutes, giving the governor the power to remove the officers appointed by him or his immediate predecessor if a change in the administration occurs. That is a plain, simple statement of the case. Some say that the object of this movement is political advantage. That is a misrepresentation. It is to prevent the carrying out of a purpose which seeks to accomplish a partisan advantage by an act of bad faith. This measure does not seek a political advantage; it is in the interest of good government in whatever way we may look at it.

Mr. DOCKERY. What committee has reported this bill?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. The Judiciary Committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. Unanimously?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I do not know.

Mr. BRODERICK. It was understood that certain members of the committee reserved the right to say what they choose and act as they choose when the bill should come before the House.

Mr. BAILEY. Has the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY] concluded?

Mr. BRODERICK. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] desire to say something in opposition to the bill? I should like to fix, if possible, a limit to the discussion.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] desires to be heard.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. This was a legislature elected by the people of Arizona that fixed this rule?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Elected by the people of Arizona?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. And the representatives of the people fixed this rule?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. The members of the legislature, yes; and they fixed the other also.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Is not this a sort of reflection upon the public sentiment of the Territory?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Not necessarily. It is mostly a reflection upon the people who have the loaves and fishes and desire to retain them.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. More a reflection upon the people of the Territory who elected the representatives.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. No, not necessarily.

Mr. BRODERICK. Can we arrange for the closing of the debate?

Mr. BAILEY. As far as I am concerned, I only desire to say a few words, and five or ten minutes will suffice. Did the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] reserve the remainder of his time?

Mr. BRODERICK. I did.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I wish to be recognized in my own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not need to say any more than has been said by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY] in order to indicate to the House that this is purely a partisan measure. The purpose of it is to enable the governor of Arizona, soon to be appointed by the incoming Administration, to remove the Territorial officials, who are entitled under the existing Territorial law to something like two years of further service. It would be well for the House to reflect that this is a proposition to appeal to Congress to supersede a law of the Territory which the Territorial legislature unquestionably had the power to pass.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY] might well restrain the greed of his partisans for two years. They would be appointed for two years, and then for two years again, because their first two years must expire within the first two years of Mr. McKinley's Administration, and then his governor would be permitted, under the regular and orderly procedure, to reappoint them. Therefore, if the incoming Administration respected the Territorial law, as we now ask you to do, your officials under a Republican Administration would hold four years, and under this bill they will only hold four years.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I want to make a statement for the purpose of correcting you there. The majority of these officers have already held for four years, and in holding two years more they will have held for six years, and if the legislature should be antagonistic to the governor, they would hold indefinitely. We want to correct this state of affairs.

Mr. BAILEY. You appeal to Congress against the will of the legislature elected by the people of Arizona.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Not necessarily.

Mr. BAILEY. Why not leave it to them, then?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Why not let it remain as it originally was? The legislature which originally passed it recognized the eminent propriety of conferring the power which they did.

Mr. BAILEY. Then we are justified in saying that the people of Arizona thought they originally made a mistake, and they corrected it, or their representatives did. Now, it may be true enough that there was some partisan advantage sought, but why does not the gentleman from Arizona settle that with his partisan opponents in that Territory?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. It has been settled. This is an extreme and an arbitrary advantage, and the fault lies in the Federal statutes. The Federal jurisdiction is extended over the Territories, and I believe the intent of the statute was to place the power of removal where the responsibility rested, and this is simply to remove the ambiguity of the statute.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman most egregiously errs. The truth is that every intendment of the law ought to be in favor of a man holding for the time for which he has been appointed.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. They have already done that.

Mr. BAILEY. The arbitrary power of removal is a dangerous one, and it will come back to plague any man or any party that constantly invokes it. If you appeal from the people of Arizona to the Congress here, which can have no such interest in it as the people immediately concerned have, then, sir, how do you escape or hope to escape from similar partisan appeals when, in the course of events, your party, having disappointed the country, is driven out, as ours was?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that this was not an issue before the people in the last election. The law at that time permitted removals, and the people had passed upon that issue, and the present officials arbitrarily exercising that power, the people now desire relief.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, the plain answer is that if these men have disregarded the will of the people, and if the matter is important enough to invoke the intervention of Congress, it is important enough to be made an issue in your coming elections, and you can remedy it there.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. After these gentlemen have held six years, when they were only entitled to two.

Mr. BAILEY. Ah! but the gentleman is mistaken. They are entitled to serve two years from their last appointment.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. But they have already served four years.

Mr. BAILEY. They did that under the law, and your law-making power says that the governor's appointees shall serve two years thereafter without the power to remove them. It makes no difference whether the governor has appointed the same gentlemen who formerly filled those offices or whether he has appointed different gentlemen. His appointees under the law are entitled to undisturbed service for two years. You admit that without the passage of this law they will serve two years, and it is the sole and only purpose of this bill to enable the new appointee of the incoming President to remove these gentlemen, and you boldly avow that.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. And will not you boldly support the proposition that there has been an arbitrary change of law to retain them there?

Mr. BAILEY. I support the proposition of obeying the law and leaving it to the properly constituted authorities to correct whatever injustice has been practiced.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. And Congress is that authority.

Mr. BAILEY. I can not suffer the gentleman to inject a sentence at the conclusion of every one of mine. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the Republicans. The 4th of March brings them face to face with 350,000 office seekers and with less than 60,000 offices to fill. Four years ago we knew something about that kind of a trouble ourselves. You, being secure from its vexations, laughed at our embarrassment. It is our time to laugh at yours. You have no more opportunity to escape the wrath of the disappointed office seekers in the next Congressional elections than we had to escape the wrath of the American people against the maladministration of the outgoing President.

Mr. STEELE. I understand that you justify that legislature in hogging the offices and the President in extending the civil service to most of the offices. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAILEY. "Hogging" is a good word. I am glad to know that it is to have a place in the RECORD.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not justify that. This is a question, however, that the Republicans of Arizona ought to settle with the Democrats of Arizona. They have the power to elect their legislature and their council, and if their legislature or council betrays a public trust, there is a power of public judgment to which they may appeal, and that is the forum in which to settle the matter. What I protest against is that Arizona politics should be brought to Washington, and that from the judgment of the people there an appeal shall be prosecuted to partisan greed here.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I beg your pardon. The issue has not been before the people there.

Mr. BAILEY. Then submit it to the people; and I have confidence enough in the intelligence of the people of Arizona to believe that they will set it right, although I do not blame the gentleman himself for distrusting their intelligence, since they did not have the good judgment to return my friend to Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I was not a candidate for reelection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the gentleman from Texas simply insists upon the right of local self-government.

Mr. BAILEY. Precisely so. It is not a question with me whether they were right or wrong. I propose to leave that question to the people of Arizona themselves. I have no special desire to deprive the Republican party of these few places, and I will say to the gentleman from Arizona that the more patronage his party has the greater will be its embarrassments. Patronage is a disadvantage to parties and to individuals. I have been so deeply impressed with this belief that since I have been a member of this House I have proposed more than once to relieve the members of this House from the distribution of patronage, for I believe there is no greater curse upon Congressional service to-day than the constant annoyance to which we are subjected in seeking offices for our friends and constituents.

I believe, sir, that the Constitution makers were wise when they lodged these appointments in the executive department of the Government, subject only to the advice and consent of the Senate. They provided that as to inferior officers Congress might lodge the appointments in the heads of Departments or in the courts of law, but nowhere was there any suggestion that members of Congress might become responsible for their distribution. Appointment to office is purely an executive function, and ought never to be a part of a legislator's duty. It has been the experience of almost every man in this Hall to see the appointment of a fourth-class postmaster more potent in the renomination and reelection of a member than his position upon a great public question.

You gentlemen can calculate that every post-office appointment in every district in this country where the parties are at all closely divided will cost you not less than from five to ten votes. There are fifty or sixty districts where the normal majority is less than a thousand, and in almost every one of those districts the disappointed applicants for office and their friends will be sufficient to reverse the verdict given in your favor at the last election. For the last eight years, at the Congressional election succeeding the election of a President, the party in power has met defeat. You will not escape it next year, and it would be to our advantage to multiply these offices, because the more of them there are the more bitter will be your struggle and disappointment over them. I know that patronage is not to your advantage. On the contrary, I know, and every gentleman who sits within the sound of my voice knows, that it is to your disadvantage. First, it is a disadvantage to you gentlemen in your Congressional primaries, and, next, it is a disadvantage to your party in the Congressional elections.

Mr. Speaker, I have never been able to see any reason why members of this House should desire to control these offices. It either breeds a sense of dependence on the part of the Representative toward the Administration, or, if it does not do that, it constantly provokes conflicts, for there is nothing more certain than that whoever has influence with the Administration must permit the Administration to have influence with him. Whenever a self-respecting Representative defies the Administration, he will find in the nature of things the Administration discriminating against his friends. I undertake to say that, with the rare exception of bitter divisions on great public questions, more animosities have been engendered between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government by controversies growing out of the single question of patronage than by all other questions combined.

It was a quarrel over the distribution of patronage that drove from the Senate the most brilliant man who has occupied a seat in that body from the great State of New York in thirty years. It was the heat of that quarrel that inflamed the mind of a madman to shoot down a great President. Members of this body have been alienated from personal friends in their own State delegations by controversies growing out of the question as to who should control appointments. These offices are a very apple of discord, and if we sought party advantage we would multiply these appointments, because we would thus aggravate the divisions among you and render it the more certain that the Democratic party will displace, in the next Congressional election, the Republican majority that now dominates this House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, the Territory of New Mexico is not situated exactly the same as the Territory of Arizona in regard to the effect of this bill. The law in the Territory of New Mexico has been that the governor has the power, under the organic act of the Territory, to make certain appointments, and, under the laws of the Territory, he has power to make certain other appointments with the provision that his appointees shall hold their positions until their successors are appointed and qualified. One would have supposed, considering the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon that subject, that no governor would have the power to remove; but the governor of the Territory of New Mexico has found that, in certain contingencies and for certain reasons—strained contingencies and strained reasons, as he has assigned them—he has the power to remove. But the governor of New Mexico and the governor of every other Territory are appointed by the President. The supreme court and all the judges of the nisi prius courts are appointed by the President. The secretary of the Territory is appointed by the President. The people have no hearing. They have no privilege to select their officers, except the begging privilege to ask for certain appointments.

It has been suggested here that the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BAILEY] is in favor of local self-government. Give us local self-government and we will be satisfied. It is because the governor, in the appointment of whom we have no voice; it is because the secretary, in the appointment of whom we have no voice; it is because the judges, in the appointment of whom we have no voice, are appointed without our consent and frequently from outside, that we complain. Men have been sent there contrary to the declarations of principle of both political parties—men who are residents of the various States. Both parties have declared in favor of local self-government as far as possible, yet the President of the United States—not only the one now in the White House, but his predecessor, and the predecessor of that one, have, each of them, violated the principle laid down by their political parties and have sent men to govern us who had no connection with the Territory, who were brought from beyond the limits of the Territory, or who were appointed contrary to our wish. If we could have local self-government in New Mexico we would be satisfied.

At the last election, although the Republican Delegate was not returned, a majority of the people voted for a majority of Republicans and elected them to the legislature. In the lower house there was a majority, in the upper house a tie. The governor of the Territory of New Mexico has a tie in the present legislature. Two years ago the Republican party elected a two-thirds majority in each one of those bodies. But the secretary of the Territory (who had been appointed by the present Executive of the Federal Government), taking advantage of the power given by Congress to him, and to him alone, to administer the oath of office to members of the legislative assembly, swore in a majority of Democrats in each branch of the legislature, regardless of the certificates of election, regardless of Territorial law, and regardless of the rights of those people. You tell us that we must leave these matters to the people, and then you send a man there backed by a law which takes away from us the power to control these matters. Had we possessed the control of that legislature, there would have been no complaint here, because they never would have passed certain laws which are now on the statutes.

We ask that the present bill may pass in order that the governors of the various Territories may appoint their own executive officers, the officers who are to assist them in administering the law. By the organic act it is provided that the governor of each Territory shall see that the laws are executed. How is he to see that the laws are executed if you take away from him the right to designate the persons who are to execute the law under him? In our Territory we have a majority of the legislature on joint ballot, but there is a tie in the council; so that we are not able to control the appointees of the governor. Consequently his appointees will hold over. They have succeeded in getting appointed there a court which sustains him in making removals throughout that Territory. We Republicans did not believe he had the power; but the Democratic supreme court of that Territory says that he does possess it; that he may exercise the power of removal. And so far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we will in that Territory of New Mexico avail ourselves of the construction which the Democratic supreme court has placed upon our laws, if we can get a governor who will appoint his own friends, and of proper capacity to fill the offices.

We ask the passage of this bill, however, because it is right. We do not want any forced construction of the statutes of that Territory or the statutes of the United States. We want such a construction placed upon them as we can stand by from year to year. But if you send there as judges only men who are appointed for political reasons—broken-down political hacks—persons who reside in the State of Virginia or the State of New York or any other State, and who are sent among us simply for political reasons, you must expect them to carry out the law for political purposes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN].

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] with a great deal of admiration. I am candid in saying that I believe it is the most wonderful appeal he has made to this House since I have had the honor of being a member. But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this appeal comes a little too late. If votes have been curtailed from certain gentlemen in certain districts during the last four years, I can account in a large measure for a part of what we now see. In my Territory alone there have been "carpetbaggers" enough sent in to hold the offices, who, had they voted in the districts from which they were sent, would doubtless have helped to swell the Democratic majorities. In the Territory of Oklahoma the President, after having sent in all the importations, has placed the civil-service law over—whom? Over assistant laundresses in Indian schools who draw $12 a month for the purpose, I presume, of ironing low-neck dresses for the squaws [laughter], and Indian farmers sent from Southern States to teach the Indians how to cultivate the soil; and I have in mind one of them who never in his life saw a reaping machine or a self-binder until he was sent out there to teach the Indians how to operate such machinery.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me say this: The governor of Oklahoma, although a Democrat, has, as far as is possible for a Democrat, been an able and an efficient officer. [Laughter.] I would say nothing unkind against him. But I desire, in fairness and frankness toward the Democratic side of this House, to ask one question. You now have, for the first time since the Territorial organization of Oklahoma, control of both branches of the legislature. We have always had it heretofore. We have always heretofore had the governor. We turned over to you the offices and the law, so that you, when you had your governor, could fill those offices with men of your own selection and your own party. We were honest; we were honorable. And is it unfair now to come here to those of you who are not members of the party that was successful in the last campaign, and ask you in fairness and honor, as between man and man, to be as fair to those people as the Republicans were when they had control of affairs there?

Why should a Democratic governor, who has had his appointees for four years, be authorized to reappoint for two years or four years longer when he is about to step down and out? Why should the incoming governor be deprived of the right of removal and the right to have his own counselors? Why should the incoming governor of any Territory, no matter who he may be, be prohibited from having his own Territorial treasurer to investigate the Territorial funds, his own attorney-general to counsel and advise him, his own cabinet, as it were, whereby he may administer the Territory in the interest of those by whom the people of the Territory expect to be governed? You may say there is some politics in this. Suppose there is. Personally, if I had my way, I would wipe out the civil service and fill every office with a Republican within twenty-four hours. [Applause.] That is the way that I regard it. Now all the offices have been filled. I do hope when the new Administration comes in that one of the bright deeds of which it will be accused by the Democrats will be the sending of the carpetbaggers who are under civil-service rules in Oklahoma back to the States from which they came, so that men who are familiar with the country, with the climate, with the conditions and the soil, may be allowed there in peace and quiet to conduct the affairs of their own people in their own Territory. I believe this will be done. Whoever may be appointed governor in any of these Territories should have the control of his own appointments. The Democrats have had that authority. Now, why should not the Republicans have it? That is about all there is in this question, as far as I am concerned. I believe that to the victors belong the spoils. That may not suit certain gentlemen who have got these offices already filled.

Mr. LITTLE. You are getting Democratic.

Mr. FLYNN. If that is Democracy, I shall expect you to vote for this bill. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the House, I appeal to the Democratic members of the House, there is nothing asked for in this bill that you did not have the authority to do until the recent legislatures were elected. You say, Let the people have the choice. You have not got any Democratic party in Oklahoma. You did not run one last fall, so that you can not be hurt by this. Why should you object to the party that is coming in controlling the affairs of the Government? We will control them, as far as we are concerned. Do not be at all uneasy about that. But the unfair part of the law with reference to Arizona is that it specifies that the governor shall not be authorized to remove until after the judge of some court has, in final adjudication, certified to him that a removal is necessary. Many of you are lawyers and know that nowadays it is not a very hard matter to keep a question in court for four years.

Mr. BRODERICK. If there is no gentleman on the other side who wishes to discuss this question, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to remark that in view of the appeal for home rule made by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY], the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN], the House ought to be reminded that the object of this bill is to give Territorial offices to Republicans; and yet in every one of these three Territories the Republican party met with an overwhelming defeat last fall, so that if the people's will is to be respected they ought not to have Republican officials.

Mr. BRODERICK. The object of the bill is to give the governors of the Territories the same rights as to appointive officers that the governors of the States have and have always had. That right has never been questioned in the States. We believe that they should have this right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, is it not the policy of the present law governing the civil service of the country to prevent all officers of all degrees from appointing their subordinates? Is it not a fact that the gentlemen who pay out millions upon millions of dollars for pensions are forbidden to remove or to appoint their own chief clerks, the very men who sign the names of their principals to checks? Is it not true that under the growth of this distinguished system the collectors of internal revenue over the country will be unable to appoint their own deputies and will be compelled to submit the transaction of the mighty business of their departments to men whom they can neither appoint nor remove? Is it not a fact that the President of the United States can not secure a stenographer or a typewriter or a messenger for the White House on his own motion? Is it not a fact that this Government has been surrendered to a bureau in this city to govern it? Why should a Territorial governor, therefore, have any better status than the President of the United States has?

Mr. STEELE. We should correct both evils.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And yet I am for this bill. It is a step in the direction of the tide that is going to rise and teach bureaucracy that the young men of the country propose to have something to do with the administration of the Government. [Applause.] And Congressmen who are afraid of their popularity at home, so that they dare not discriminate among the young men of their districts as to whom they should recommend for office, will have an opportunity to stay at home.

Mr. BAILEY. Is this an intimation that the present civil-service law is to be repealed?

Mr. BRODERICK. I am reminded that the coroner has more authority in the matter of patronage now than the President of the United States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is true, and yet we have had Presidents of the United States who could not have passed the civil-service examination for a fourth-class clerkship.

Mr. BRODERICK. I call for the previous question.

Mr. BROSIUS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. BRODERICK. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to that, but I would have reserved my time except that I thought we were going to have a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time will be reserved.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, I only ask this short period of time for the purpose of correcting a misapprehension on the part of my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I know he has, as we all know he has, a lodged hate against what we call the merit system.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman must not misrepresent me. I am in favor of the merit system, and that is the reason I am opposed to the present system.

Mr. BROSIUS. The correction I desire to make is that the President has the right to select his private secretary; every collector in the United States has the right to appoint, without consulting anybody, his private secretary and his cashier. Now, my friend did not mean to misrepresent the facts, but I understand he desired to convey the idea that the civil service as now conducted puts more severe limitations upon the power of officers and heads of departments than is warranted by the fact. He seeks also to convey the idea that a great injustice is done the young men of this country by the merit system in the executive service of this country. The fact is quite the reverse. The civil service of the United States has a high regard for the rights and the privileges of the young men of this country, and gives them the right to aspire to places in the civil service without subjecting themselves to the degradation of becoming the servile tools of politicians and bosses anywhere in the country. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. They may "aspire," but can not get in.

Mr. BROSIUS. It gives them the right to seek employment in the civil service of the country without the humiliation of becoming beggars at the feet of the bosses who have the power to bestow these places. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. They can seek, but not find.

Mr. BROSIUS. They can find them, and more of the bright young men of my district find civic places under this Government under the civil service than they could in any other way. [Great laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. How?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is that the secret?

Mr. BROSIUS. By the only way that any man can be admitted into the service now—by a competitive examination, where merit, and merit alone, is the paramount test of his right to have the place he seeks.

Mr. BRODERICK. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BROSIUS. Well, I have but a minute.

Mr. BRODERICK. I will give you two minutes.

Mr. BROSIUS. Then I yield.

Mr. BRODERICK. The proposition here is to allow the governors of the Territories the same power as to the appointment of officials that are provided for by the organic act of the Territories that the governors in the States have. Do you see any objection to the bill with that feature in it?

Mr. BROSIUS. I do not care anything about the bill. [Laughter.] I think I will support the bill [renewed laughter and applause on the Republican side], because you say it is all right; but I have given it no attention at all. I only rose to reply to some statements of my friend from Ohio, and now I would like to have it distinctly understood that I am a practical civil-service man. I believe in the merit system as the system which should be applied wherever it can be suitably applied, and where it can not be applied, I am opposed to it. Nobody objects to the civil service to-day so far as it covers admissions to the public office, but the scandal that has come upon the executive service of this country is because the spoils system has continued within the service all these years. I want the merit system established within the service as potentially and as effectively as it has been practiced in admission to the service, and after that is done, my word for it, no man who admits upon this floor that he is in favor of the merit system in the executive service of the country will complain. The system stands upon four strong legs.

The first one is that the public good is the supreme law, and it ought to be in this country [applause]; and that merit, competency, and qualification to perform the duties of the offices are the only tests of the right to fill them. It holds the doctrine that it is a demoralizing use of official power to appoint to office on the ground of personal or party favor without regard to fitness. It holds that public office is a public trust, not to be bestowed as spoils of politics, and to do so is detrimental to the public service and ought not to be tolerated in a country like ours. The merit system stands upon these principles.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BROSIUS. And I want it to remain there. I want it to be administered practically, so we can get from it the largest amount of the best with the least amount of the worst results. Whatever in it is right and beneficent and useful to the Government I do uphold, but whatever is wrong in it I unite with my friend in condemning. When any man assails the abuses of the system that have been practiced under this Administration, he does not harm me. I am glad to see gentlemen rise here with zeal in a good cause that would do credit to the Apostle of the Gentiles and storm against the abuses in the civil service resulting from the retention in the interior of the service of the spoils system, which every patriot and every intelligent statesman of this day ought to condemn. I remember that when Professor Huxley was in this country many years ago he attended a dinner in New York, and he asked Senator Conkling what he thought of the civil service. The Senator occupied about the same attitude toward the merit system that is occupied now by my friend from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR, and he launched into a most eloquent philippic against civil-service reform. Professor Huxley was asked by a friend what he thought of Mr. Conkling's remarks, and he replied that it was the most eloquent defense he had ever heard of an utterly indefensible proposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have heard my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] make some eloquent remarks in defense of what I regard as an utterly indefensible proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to contribute at least a sentence to this very interesting discussion of civil-service reform. The position of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], both in his party and in his relation to the incoming President, entitles anything he says to great weight, and when I hear him denounce with such severity the existing civil-service law I feel warranted in assuming that the next Administration intends to propose the repeal of that law; and from the great applause with which the gentleman's statement was greeted, I assume that a large majority of Republicans in this House stand ready to vote for that repeal.

Mr. STEELE. What do you think of it yourself?

Mr. BAILEY. I think it is a colossal humbug, sir. [Laughter and applause.] But the Republicans on this floor who applaud with such earnestness and vociferousness this assault upon the civil-service law are confronted with the declaration in their platform approving it.

Mr. FARIS. Why did not your party repeal it when they were in power?

Mr. BAILEY. We did not have sense enough then, but we shall know better hereafter. [Laughter.] This, Mr. Speaker, is the declaration of the Republican platform:

> The civil-service law was placed on the statute book by the Republican party, which has always sustained it, and we renew our repeated declarations that it shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable.

"Extended wherever practicable." They must have had in mind the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], who avows himself a practical civil-service reformer, and judging from his support of this bill I conclude that his idea of a practical civil service is a civil service which keeps Republicans in and puts Democrats out. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, my idea of a civil-service system is to give every man a tenure of years and then require him, at the expiration of that time, to come up again for appointment, just as we must come up again for election. I believe it does no hurt to take men out of the body of the people and, at the end of every four years, to send them back. They may not be as good citizens as they would have been if they had never entered the civil service, but I pledge myself that they will be better citizens than they will be if they are kept here the balance of their lives. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I subscribe to nearly all the gentleman from Texas has said on the subject of the civil service. I did not put my question for the purpose of embarrassing him, and I take this opportunity to say that I was one of forty-six who voted against the proposition when it was before Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the gentleman for his approval, and I trust that with the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in the forefront of this battle we are near the end of this "snivel-service" reform. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas had been present in the Fifty-first Congress or in the Fiftieth Congress, he would now remember that the first contest I ever had on this floor in opposition to the fraudulent practices and un-American conspiracy known and denominated here by its adherents as the "merit system" was with the gentleman from Ohio, Hon. William McKinley, then a member of this House, he advocating one side of the question and I the other. So far as I have heard, he lost no confidence in my Republicanism on that account, and I lost no confidence in his statesmanship and ultimate good sense. [Laughter and applause.] From that time to this I have tried to point out the encroachments of this sinuous, infamous conspiracy while it has been fastening itself upon this Government, until it constitutes to-day the greatest power of the spoilsman—far greater than any other enactment ever made by the United States of America. Talk about this as a "merit system." Why, the gentleman himself, Mr. BROSIUS, has been compelled, in obedience to a condition that has grown out of this system, to introduce here a bill to pension the incompetents who are kept in office because of the existence of this law. We are to have as a concomitant of this system a civil pension list, and it may be said that no government has ever adhered for any considerable length of time to this system, which is denominated the "merit system," without ultimately being compelled to establish a civil pension list. That is one of the necessary consequences to the existence of the system, and one that we saw the dawning of when the gentleman from Pennsylvania introduced his bill here in the House. Will the people of this country have that? Will they permit a bureau to run this Government, first, by prescribing rules of admission to the civil service, and then, when hundreds of thousands of young, able-bodied men are willing to take those places and perform those duties and yield them up again to their successors, wear out these old employed people until they are compelled to be pensioned? Will the people do that?

Mr. BROSIUS. Will you allow me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will allow you the same as you allowed me.

Mr. BROSIUS. Did you interrupt me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I tried to do so, but you would not let me. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROSIUS. You do not mean to misrepresent me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; you have had two or three hours on this question. I have a stack of manuscript about that high [indicating] that you made when there was no question pending. Now there is one pending.

Mr. BROSIUS. I can not compel you to yield. I only wanted to correct a misstatement you were making.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is said that I mistook the facts when I stated that the chief of the pension pay agents of the country was not permitted to appoint or remove his deputies and had nothing to do with their selection. I reiterate the statement upon the declaration made by Colonel Wilson himself. I stated that the deputy collectors who travel about the country and gather the money for the collectors of internal revenue are strangers to the collectors. I say so now.

Several MEMBERS. That is true.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Everybody knows it is true. But let us see what else we have under this system. We have a board of pension examiners in every county of the United States, and in some of them three or four. They come into immediate contact with the old soldiers of the country, examine them for pensions, and certify the conditions of the physical evidence. Under Republican administration ex-soldiers of the Army who were efficient and distinguished medical men were always appointed upon those boards. I do not believe that in the State of Ohio there was one board that had not a soldier upon it. If there was, it was because there was no eligible medical man in the locality who had been a soldier. Those boards generally consisted of two Republicans and one Democrat. Upon the incoming of this civil-service-reform Administration—they are all alike, these reformers, all tarred with the same stick of aggrandizement of themselves—they turned out every one of those officers, and in filling up the boards, so far as I know, not one soldier was put in. I do not believe that in the State of Ohio to-day there is a soldier on a pension-examining board.

There may be, but if there are they are very scarce, and yet these men are the men whose duty it is to examine the soldier applicants for pensions in that State. The members of those boards are practically all Democrats and none soldiers, and now by the operation of this civil-service law the President of the United States has fastened in for all time to come these incumbents. They were not put there for merit; they were simply Democrats; that was the sole qualification they had. This is the "merit system," is it not? This is the "merit system" that the gentleman from Pennsylvania boasts of. Was it not the "spoils system" under the hypocritical guise of civil-service reform? Under no other administration on God's earth was such an outrage as that ever perpetrated.

Let me tell the gentleman that this singsong cry of "merit' does not amount to anything in this country any more, for the people are beginning to see through it and to recognize the hypocrisy of it. A Democratic head of one of the great bureaus of this Government boasted, under oath, before one of the committees of this House, that out of 71 men certified to him from the Civil Service Commission he was "enabled" (to use his own language) to get 70 Democrats. Let me tell the gentleman that the "merit" he seeks for is not the merit that makes a good officer of the Government. Under the "merit system," I am just informed by a member of the House, two persons who had received two certificates of service were appointed through the instrumentality of the "merit system" in one of the great Departments of this Government. They each had two certificates, one was a certificate of "merit" in the examination of the civil service, and the other was a certificate of discharge from the penitentiary. [Loud laughter.] How can you help such things happening? It is a question of "merit;" it is a question of percentage; it is a question of who stands highest in the bugologies of the country and the astronomy of the heavens. That is all there is about it. It is not a question of the life character of the young man known to his Congressman—the young man with his ambition aroused and his purposes pure and patriotic; he has perchance been unable to secure so high a degree of excellence in the higher branches of education as his fellow, and he is excluded.

So I say that the young men of this country are deprived of their opportunity to participate in the Government. I say that the declaration that this is a "Government of the people, by the people, for the people" is "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." I say that a bureau that can prescribe rules and regulations has usurped the Government, and that bureau has undertaken to say who shall and who shall not hold office.

Now, my friend from Pennsylvania says—and if he would not get so excited whenever I speak on this subject, I should like to reason with him [laughter]—he says that it is a great "degradation" to young men to come to a member of Congress and say to him, "I would like to participate for a short time in the administration of this Government." A "degradation," is it? Was it any "degradation" to my friend when some years ago in a primary election in the county of Lancaster, which he has so ably represented on this floor, he upset the plans of his predecessor and in a primary vote secured the nomination for the office he now holds? Did he not ask anybody to help him do that? [Laughter.] Is it a "degradation," gentlemen of the House of Representatives, for you to go to the sturdy, active, live young men of your district and say, "Boys, let us put the Republican party into power?" Is that "degradation?" I rejoice in such an opportunity, and there is no crown of my rejoicing brighter than that the young men of my district have always enthusiastically and generously responded to my request. Now, we have triumphed, and yet when they come to me and ask the favor of participating in the Government, having something to do with its machinery, having some insight into the great machinery of the Government, I am compelled to say to them, "You can not be admitted except through the narrow door of a bureau." They come to me and say, "In the hour of the party's peril in 1896 I worked, I rode, I studied, I spoke, I labored to achieve victory. Now that Governor McKinley and his party are coming into power, I would like to have a little experience in the administration of the Government." What am I to tell him? "Get thee behind me, thou spoilsman; it is a degradation for you to come here."

Gentlemen, it is not a degradation in a Government of the people and by the people to give to the young men of the country whom you know at home—you know them better than any commission can ever know them—an opportunity to be something and to have some direct participation in the administration of the Government. For myself, I will never consent that any system shall fill the offices of the country by lifetime tenure, while the efficient young men of my district are excluded from their just share of the offices and emoluments.

Pharisees proclaim that they are better than other people. The honest men of the United States are not afraid of the other honest men of the United States. When was this Government better administered than it was before Pendleton and the Democratic party introduced this patent-medicine machine? [Laughter.] Are the Departments of the Government run more economically? I deny it. Are they run more honestly? Not at all.

I warn you, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, and I speak for myself, and for my dear friend from Texas, I have not merged my independence in my support of any man—I have not forgotten that I stand in a representative capacity to a constituency, and that I answer to my conscience, my constituents, and God alone for my action on this floor, and not to any Administration or the head of an Administration, in a question that appeals to my judgment and my honest conviction of duty.

I say to you that the people of this country are taking warning by the frauds that have been manifested. It took 257 pages to publish the removals and promotions in the Treasury Department alone. Under this civil-service Administration men of long, faithful, and efficient service have been reduced from fourteen and sixteen hundred dollars down to nine hundred, and untrained Democrats, brought here simply because they were Democrats, have been put into places, high places, over the head of the efficient clerks. This is not one case, but it is thousands upon thousands of cases.

Mr. LOW. Under the "merit system?"

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is under the "merit system."

Mr. LOW. And Republicans went down and Democrats went up?

Mr. GROSVENOR. All Republicans went down and all Democrats went up. [Laughter.] And now let me tell you what is being concocted just below the crater of this volcano of ruin. It is the concoction of an Executive order to be made just before the expiration of this term of the Presidency. Oh, if I only had the power that old Joshua had, I would not pray for the sun to turn backward, but I would say to the sun, "Go forward, eight days at a jump, and stop this outrage." An Executive order is being concocted to prevent the righting of the wrongs that have been perpetrated during these last four years by the spoilsmen who have been raging through the public service of the country, armed with a commission from the "merit system." I say to you, the people of this country will not stand it. It is a matter of no personal importance to me, but there is a tide rising, it is rising from ocean to ocean, it is a demand of the people that they shall have something to do with the affairs of their Government. That tide will effect a cure of these wrongs. It is coming as sure as right is right. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, after so much has been said upon one side, I ask the gentleman to give us some time on the other. There has been an hour occupied on that side.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROSIUS. I do not want five minutes.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Give me four minutes. I want to speak on the other side. They have had an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] one minute.

Mr. BAILEY. In the interest of absolute fairness, Mr. Speaker, I will agree to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], too, five minutes, if they will accept that.

Mr. BROSIUS. I shall not need that much time, I think.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be placed in the attitude of defending any of the practices chargeable to the spoils system. I will try to speak with coolness. It is perfectly obvious that all the abuses against which my distinguished friend [Mr. GROSVENOR] animadverts with so much severity have nothing whatever to do with the merit system. They are the spoils system. The spoils system, as I have already stated, has continued to exist in the interior of the civil service of this country since the Pendleton Act was passed.

I am unwilling to pass in silence also the statement of my distinguished friend that the civil-service act was a Democratic measure. It was distinctly a Republican measure, passed by a Republican House, supported by the Republican party, which has, since 1872, vied with the Democratic party of the country in the strength of its expressions of devotion to the merit system in the civil service of the country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROSIUS. My friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] gave me three minutes, and I want that time in order to bring into distinct view——

The SPEAKER. The Chair yields to the request of the gentleman to go on, with the understanding that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] does not object.

Mr. BROSIUS. I only want to read a paragraph. I want to bring this to the attention of the House, and especially those on this side of the House who applauded with so much vigor the address of my distinguished friend who has just taken his seat [Mr. GROSVENOR].

With the knowledge that we already have of the attitude of the Republican party on this question for more than twenty years, with the knowledge that we have of the attitude which the President-elect, a distinguished Republican, sustains to this question, it did seem to me that those who applauded an assault upon the civil-service law were fleshing their swords in the heart of the President-elect of the United States. I will read what the President-elect said in his very last utterance on this subject, and having done that I will not trespass further upon the patience of the House.

Mr. FARIS. That applause was in response to the increased workings of the system.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. McKinley, in his letter of acceptance, said:

The pledge of the Republican national convention that our civil-service laws shall be sustained and "thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable" is in keeping with the position of the party for the past twenty-four years, and will be faithfully observed.

And mark these words; and if I could I would write them in letters of living light over the brow of my distinguished friend from Ohio. [Laughter.] Mr. McKinley's last words upon this subject were:

The Republican party will take no backward step upon this question.

How do you like that? [Laughter.]

It will seek to improve, but never degrade, the civil service of the country.

These are the very last utterances of the great Republican whom the people of the United States have recently placed in the highest office in the gift of the American people. If that is treason, charge it home, sir, to the greatest citizen of your own State. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] That was a burst of patriotism that found expression by the great citizen of the State of Ohio who will be, let me say in conclusion, in entire control of the executive service of the United States, for the administration of the civil-service law of this country is altogether in the executive control; and the President who is just retiring saw fit to extend it widely. His predecessor extended it widely in comparison with what it embraced under the régime of his predecessor. President Harrison included within the service over 15,000 places that were not in it before. So it has by a gradual process of evolution been extended until now it embraces nearly all the offices that can suitably be embraced, and perhaps, I will say, some that ought not to be embraced. But so far as that goes, I do not defend it at all. Now, I trust I have sufficiently explained that I am not to be put in the position of defending anything in the executive service that is wrong, but that which is right in it I uphold.

Mr. BRODERICK. It is impossible to satisfy all the gentlemen who wish to discuss this question; and if I am entitled to do so, I will move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Kansas, if he will permit me to do so, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], and then I will make no further objection.

Mr. BRODERICK. I will do that.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is said that one fact is worth a thousand arguments; and, furthermore, one fact that is within the knowledge of every man of a large assembly like this that I am addressing is doubly valuable. I submit to this House that there are no three men in it who are men of higher integrity, ability, patriotism, and industry, and more self-sacrificing to their country, than the gentleman from Maine, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY], the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], chairman of that committee when the Democrats are in power.

I ask this House to call to mind what has been the action of the last two named under the fatal spell of this vile spoils system of officeholding; what is their testimony in their acts? Only last Saturday, the chairman and ex-chairman of that great committee had to stand on this floor and tell us that this House was wasting one-fourth of the public money, spent on this House in plain robbery of the people, of their money paid in taxes; I make the point that this money was spent corruptly, because whenever a man is employed unnecessarily, wastefully, in the service, as they said one-fourth of them were, then the members of this House did spend the people's money corruptly. And what again have these men done? My dear, noble old friend, General Cogswell, gone to his reward, got into the toils of this spoils system, and if I had been appointed to that committee, Mr. Speaker, as he was a few years ago, I should probably have done the same, and left a legacy to my children of deliberately standing on the floor of this House and saying that we had knowingly done this wrong, as has been done by these two most honorable, honest men. Mr. Speaker, we could better spare any ten men out of this House than either one of those men, and yet they reported a bill here carrying about $25,000 in violation of the law, consciously, deliberately, and doing it to gratify the desire for the spoils of office of us members of Congress under this despicable, nasty, vile spoils system, defended on this floor by honorable men. [Applause.]

Mr. BRODERICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 119, noes 57.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRODERICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

By unanimous consent, Mr. SPERRY obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies thereof, the papers in the case of John H. Hipkins, Fifty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted Mr. JOY, for two days, on account of sickness in family.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to the resolution of inquiry of the 8th of February, 1897, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relating to a treaty with the Navajo Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report and an accompanying letter from Philip C. Garrett, of Philadelphia, Indian commissioner, relating to negotiations concerning the Ogden Land Company and Indian reservations in New York—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CURTIS of New York, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 255) providing for the attendance of the officers and cadets of the United States Military and Naval academies at the inauguration of the President-elect, March 4, 1897, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3012); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10062) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3013); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10210) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey certain Government land to the city of Waukegan, Ill., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3014); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9931) to amend an act providing for the sale of desert lands in certain

States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, and the acts amendatory thereto, and for the relief of persons who have made entries thereunder, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3015); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WELLINGTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10332) to amend an act to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3022); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred House bill No. 9946, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 10350) to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea, accompanied by a report (No. 3029); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHANNON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 206) to construe Senate joint resolution No. 148, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3030); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. POOLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 4640) granting an increase of pension to Ellis P. Phipps, late lieutenant of Company A, Twelfth New Jersey Volunteer Infantry. (Report No. 3016.)

By Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 8905) to pension the widow of Gen. William J. Landram. (Report No. 3017.)

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 2408) granting a pension to John W. Craig. (Report No. 3018.)

By Mr. LAYTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 9204) to pension Mrs. A. J. Bassett. (Report No. 3019.)

By Mr. McCLELLAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 4277) for the relief of Marie Damainville. (Report No. 3020.)

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 3001) granting a pension to Alfred Bigelow, of Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska. (Report No. 3021.)

By Mr. WELLINGTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: The bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Francisco Perna. (Report No. 3023.)

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 480) entitled "An act granting a pension to William B. Matchett." (Report No. 3024.)

By Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (H. R. 3794) for the relief of Frank Dunn. (Report No. 3025.)

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5069) granting a pension to Susan E. Peckham. (Report No. 3026.)

By Mr. LAYTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 6287) granting a pension to Francis Sternberg. (Report No. 3027.)

By Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 10230) granting an increase of pension to Simon Price. (Report No. 3028.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LEISENRING (by request): A bill (H. R. 10347) to provide for an interest bearing bond certificate of deposit—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BULL: A bill (H. R. 10348) to amend section 4965, chapter 8, Title LX of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HOWARD (by request): A bill (H. R. 10349) to make it unlawful for any employer or other person to exact an agreement, either written or verbal, from any employee to join, or not to join, any labor or other organization as a condition of employment by such employer or other person—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HEPBURN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GIBSON: A joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to enforce the rights of American citizens in Cuba—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PAYNE: A concurrent resolution (House Con. Res. No. 70) to print 15,000 copies of the tariff hearings of the Committee on Ways and Means—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A resolution (House Res. No. 552) calling for information as to Cuban affairs—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HADLEY: A memorial of the legislature of the State of Illinois, urging the passage of the bill (H. R. 1) to reclassify railway mail clerks and prescribe their salaries—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, a memorial of the Illinois legislature, urging the passage of Senate bill No. 3058, to increase the salaries of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MONDELL: A memorial of the legislature of the State of Wyoming, asking ratification of the treaty recently made between the United States and the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 10351) granting a pension to Georgianna Eubanks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FARIS: A bill (H. R. 10352) increasing pension of Milton Kinder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10353) to pension Francis H. Churchill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10354) granting an increase of pension to John W. Rollins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Also, petition of Harpham Bros., of Lincoln, Nebr., and A. D. Gustin, of Canton, Ohio, relating to a duty on harness and saddlery, including harness either in sets or in parts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 24, 1897.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

TREASURY VAULT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement as to the condition of vault No. 7 in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, United States Treasury building, Washington, D. C., used for the safe-keeping of bonds held on account of national banks to secure circulation and deposits of public moneys and bonds held on account of the various trust funds, and requesting that an appropriation of $30.000 be made for the construction and erection of a burglar-proof extension and for making the present vault burglar proof; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2729) granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10155) amending section 1858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

LOSS OF REGISTERED MAIL MATTER.

Mr. VILAS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider House bill 4156. It is the bill——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me a minute?

Mr. VILAS. After we have disposed of this matter. It will take but a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. VILAS. It is a bill to amend the postal laws by providing authority to the Postmaster-General to direct——

Mr. BURROWS. Let it be read.

Mr. PEFFER. Is it the bill commonly known as the Loud bill?

Mr. VILAS. Oh, no; it is a bill to authorize the Postmaster-General to provide an indemnity for registered letters not exceeding $10.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 4156) to amend the postal laws providing limited indemnity for the loss of registered mail matter, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next at 2 o'clock p. m. the Senate proceed to vote upon House bill 8110, the bankruptcy bill, and all pending amendments and substitutes thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. VEST. I want to see a proper bankruptcy bill passed, but I can not agree to that request. This bill has not been discussed, and a great many of us really have not had time to examine it. I would not like to give unanimous consent to take it up peremptorily without debate and proceed to vote upon it.

Mr. NELSON. I did not finish my request. I also ask that in the meantime the bill be taken up for debate at all times when appropriation bills are not before the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if this bill is not now the unfinished business before the Senate?

Mr. VEST. Yes, it is.

Mr. NELSON. The object is to bring it to a vote at that time, and then we can debate it in the meantime all that is possible, aside from the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLEN. What date does the Senator fix?

Mr. NELSON. Friday, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BROWN. Of this week?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. BROWN. It seems to me that we should have a longer discussion on the bankruptcy bill. I do not think it is possible to get time at this session properly to consider and pass a bankruptcy bill. I think I must object.

Mr. QUAY. If objection is made, I move——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah objects to the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 9689.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall have to object to the consideration of any of these bills by unanimous consent.

Mr. QUAY. Yesterday——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that this is a very urgent matter and will take but a moment. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. QUAY. I do not think it will take fifteen minutes to dispose of the bill I wish to call up.

Mr. BURROWS. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will yield to the Senator from Michigan if it will not take five minutes and will lead to no debate whatever.

Mr. QUAY. I will not object to the request of the Senator from Michigan after I have disposed of the matter which it was understood yesterday morning should come up this morning.

Mr. BURROWS. This is a private pension bill of a half dozen lines, and can pass in half a minute.

Mr. QUAY. I will withdraw my opposition to it as soon as I get my bill up.

Mr. BURROWS. Very well.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall have to interpose an objection if it leads to any debate whatever. If we propose to pass the appropriation bills before the 4th of March, we shall have to give continuous attention to them. I will yield to the Senator on the condition that it takes no time, practically, and will lead to no debate.

Mr. QUAY. It will take some little time. I shall have to make a statement, of course.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. QUAY. I do not think the Senator ought to object. It will not take fifteen minutes to dispose of it one way or the other.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is a duty imposed upon me, as being in charge of the Indian appropriation bill, which I must recognize.

Mr. QUAY. There is a duty also imposed upon me, and I think the Senator will facilitate the passage of the Indian appropriation bill by permitting me to be heard at present for just a word in this case. This bill, which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] has——

Mr. PETTIGREW. How long will it take?

Mr. QUAY. I do not think it will take over fifteen minutes when the Senator from Wisconsin hears what I have to say.

Mr. CULLOM. He shakes his head.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Wisconsin will probably be able to shake his head more intelligently after he hears what I have to say on the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3609.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to know what the bill is.

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator is asking for unanimous consent——

Mr. QUAY. I am not. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. Then I shall be obliged to call for the yeas and nays, and it will take a good while to consider that bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow the Indian appropriation bill to be proceeded with.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall move immediately to take up the Indian appropriation bill after the Senator from Pennsylvania succeeds. Of course he has the floor, but that will be the motion I shall make if he succeeds.

Mr. CULLOM. If we get into a controversy here and call the yeas and nays, a great deal of time will be consumed.

Mr. QUAY. I wish simply to place this question properly before the Senate. Then, if the Senator from Wisconsin desires to obstruct the measure, of course I will not interfere with the passage of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BERRY. I ask to have the title of the bill read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3690) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin."

Mr. VILAS. On the motion to proceed to the consideration of that bill I shall be compelled to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VEST. Let me make a suggestion. I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania to let us give at least half an hour to morning business. Then he can make his motion, if he sees proper.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection.

Mr. VEST. This proceeding stops the entire business of the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection if the Senator in charge of the Indian appropriation bill consents to it.

Mr. VEST. It is very obvious that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CHANDLER. What does the Senator from Missouri mean by morning business?

Mr. VEST. The introduction of bills and reports from committees, the ordinary routine business of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator did not mean to include the passage of any bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the pending motion. It is that of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read.

Mr. VILAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to withdrawing the motion with the understanding that it will be renewed at the conclusion of the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall object to that. I shall object to anything but the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. QUAY. Let the yeas and nays be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3690.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MARTIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] has not voted, and I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I inquire if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. SMITH. I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allen,	Cameron,	Nelson,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Carter,	Peffer,	Vest.
Berry,	Clark,	Perkins,
Brown,	Frye,	Platt,
Call,	Morgan,	Quay,

NAYS—29.

Allison,	Davis,	Lindsay,	Tillman,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Turpie,
Butler,	Gorman,	Mills,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Gray,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Wetmore.
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Roach,
Cullom,	Hill,	Stewart,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Teller,

NOT VOTING—44.

Aldrich,	Gear,	Lodge,	Pugh,
Baker,	George,	McBride,	Sewell,
Bate,	Gibson,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Martin,	Smith,
Brice,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Squire,
Burrows,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Thurston,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Chilton,	Irby,	Murphy,	Warren,
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	White,
Elkins,	Kenney,	Pritchard,	Wilson,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Proctor,	Wolcott.

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will yield simply for morning business.

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to withdraw the notice which I gave yesterday, that to-morrow, Thursday morning, after the usual routine morning business, I would submit some remarks upon the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations in relation to the recognition of the independence of Cuba. Finding that it would be likely to interfere with the appropriation bills, and that there is some doubt now as to whether it will be possible to get through with all the appropriation bills, I have felt compelled to withdraw the notice that I would make a brief speech to-morrow.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented resolutions of the legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the construction of a dry dock at Charlestown, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In the year 1897. Resolutions relative to the construction of a dry dock at Charlestown.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the general court of Massachusetts, it is desirable that provision be made by Congress for the construction of a dry dock in the Charlestown district of the city of Boston, sufficiently large to accommodate vessels of the largest class, and that the Senators and Representatives from this Commonwealth in Congress are requested to use their best endeavors to secure the passage of legislation providing for the construction of such dock.

Resolved, That properly attested copies of these resolutions be transmitted by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted February 11, 1897.
In senate, adopted, in concurrence, February 16, 1897.
A true copy.

Mr. CALL presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Eustis, Fla., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DANIEL presented the petition of T. Cushing Daniel, of the city of Washington, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1515, to incorporate the Columbian Telephone Company; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of John J. Jamison, grand regent of the Royal Arcanum of Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of R. B. Morgan and sundry other citizens of Virginia, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3605) granting a pension to Grotius N. Udell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4076) for the relief of Abner Abercrombie, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2962) granting a pension to Carrie L. Greig, widow of Theodore W. Greig, brevet major of volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8942) granting a pension to Ann Maria Meinhofer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6792) granting a pension to Hannah R. Quint, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6730) granting a pension to Edward C. Spofford, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VILAS. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3722) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Letcher Stevenson, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report thereon.

General Stevenson was formerly a very distinguished and gallant soldier in the Army of the Tennessee, whom I have myself seen in battle, and who recently died leaving his venerable widow, at the age of 77 years, in circumstances of necessity. I hope the Senate will consent to the immediate passage of this bill, which proposes to give her the usual moderate rate of pension, according to the rule and usage established in the cases of widows of general officers, $50 per month.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6360) to increase pension of Emily M. Tyler, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HILL on the 22d instant, intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CALL on the 19th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. The day before yesterday I reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary favorably, without amendment, a bill (H. R. 3623) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction of the police court of the District of Columbia." I had a pile of bills on my desk at the time, and by mistake a bill without amendment was in the pile. I was directed to report the bill with certain amendments, and I ask leave to withdraw the copy of the bill which I then reported, and to report the bill favorably with amendments, to take the place on the Calendar of the bill I heretofore reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANTLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CANNON on the 22d instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 23d instant, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HAWLEY on the 26th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and, with the accompanying paper, moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2815) for the relief of William Lock and James H. Tinsley, reported it with amendments.

JULIO SANGUILY.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a joint resolution, which I ask may be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. R. 207) demanding the release of Julio Sanguily, an American citizen imprisoned in Cuba, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Government of the United States demands the immediate and unconditional release of Julio Sanguily, a citizen of the United States, from imprisonment and arrest under the charges that are pending and are being prosecuted against him in the military and civil courts of Cuba upon alleged grounds of rebellion and kidnaping, contrary to the treaty rights of each of said Governments and in violation of the laws of nations.

And the President of the United States is requested to communicate this resolution to the Government of Spain, and to demand of that Government such compensation as he shall deem just for the imprisonment and sufferings of Julio Sanguily.

Mr. MORGAN. The committee thought it was their duty to request very early action upon the joint resolution, but inasmuch as one or more members of the committee were absent at the time, who had not the opportunity of understanding the whole subject, it may be better that I should give notice, and I will do so, with the concurrence of the honorable chairman of the committee, if I can get his attention——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama desires the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. MORGAN. I was stating that inasmuch as the committee was not completely full at the moment of the adoption of the joint resolution, I am disposed, instead of insisting upon its present consideration, to give notice that in the morning hour to-morrow the joint resolution will be called up for action. In the meantime, I submit a report with the joint resolution, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. The joint resolution is reported unanimously from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I have no objection at all to letting it lie over until to-morrow, but I hope the Senate will then at once act upon it.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall move its consideration to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Meanwhile, the joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

AMENDMENT OF THE POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit a report of the minority of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads upon the bill (H. R. 4566) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter. I ask that the minority report, with the exhibits, be published, as the majority report was published, in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The views of the minority will be ordered printed in the RECORD, as requested, in the absence of objection.

The views of the minority are as follows:

The attempt to reform the mail service and reduce expenses in the manner proposed by this bill, without any information from the Department or otherwise as to what are the abuses, seems to the undersigned as very inopportune, and is, at least, a leap in the dark, if there are no interested parties promoting the legislation. It will be seen by a letter from the Postmaster-General, attached to this report, that the Department has no information which will enable it to point out what class of matter sent through the mails occasions the deficit. The Department is unable to make any estimate of the cost of carrying newspapers, and particularly the great Sunday dailies, through the mails, and the cost of carrying the literature which is authorized by law. It is stated that the average cost of all mail matter is over 8 cents per pound, or $160 per ton. It seems to the undersigned that a great reduction might be made in the aggregate cost of carrying the mails. It will be observed that the second-class matter pays 1 cent per pound, or $20 per ton, and as this goes in bulk the expense of handling it can not be greatly in excess of the expense of handling ordinary freight. The average distance which this second-class matter would, we should suppose, without accurate information, certainly make the charge more than 1 cent per ton per mile, which is largely in excess of ordinary freight rates. The enormous cost of $160 per ton for carrying the mails, it seems to the undersigned, can not be accounted for by the expense of handling the letter mails and business connected with the first-class mail matter. This amount is certainly many times the cost of the service rendered. Neither the express companies nor private individuals pay any such rate.

Without any means of making an accurate examination ourselves, our attention has been called by various persons professing to be experts to the extravagance of the Department in dealing with the railroad companies. A very able and carefully prepared article on this subject, written by Hon. James L. Cowles, the author of A General Freight and Passenger Post, appeared in the February number of the Outlook. This article proves very clearly that the deficit is caused by the very exorbitant and unreasonable rates which the Government now pays to railroads for carrying the mails. The New York World, among others, published a statement on January 30 showing that a saving could be made of more than the deficiency by proper supervision and contract with the railroads and the enormous amount paid for the leasing of cars, which could be largely saved if the Government owned its own cars. The saving which could be made in this respect alone is estimated by experts to amount to at least $10,000,000 per year. Of course, the undersigned is unable at this time to go into details with regard to these matters, but, on a cursory examination, is thoroughly satisfied that the deficiency in the mails results from—

First, the exorbitant charges paid the railroads for the use of mail cars.

Second, the very liberal contracts which the Government makes with the railroad corporations for carrying the mails. The amount paid per ton is enormously and absurdly high.

Third, the lax supervision which the Government exercises over the performance of the service, and especially with reference to the amount of matter which the railroads profess to haul, and for which the Government is charged.

The statements that the present postal deficit is due to the transportation of second-class postal matter at 1 cent per pound are altogether misleading—I had almost said intentionally misleading. It seems perfectly clear from the facts presented in the articles above referred to that the postal deficit is not due to the 1-cent-a-pound postal rate paid to the Government by the people, but to the 8-cent-a-pound tax levied on the Government by our railway kings, and this, although the service would yield a handsome profit at one-half a cent per pound. The Government pays the railroads for a great deal more weight than the roads really haul. It is the fault of the Government that this is done. Besides, the contract price is entirely too high. During the last twenty years freight rates have been reduced about 40 per cent, yet the Government is now paying about the same rates that it did twenty years ago. Why do not those who are so much concerned about the deficit in the Post-Office Department turn their attention to these big leakages and gross abuses? Let those who profess to favor economy and reform help to correct these abuses.

The method which the Government adopts to ascertain the weight of the matter passed over the various roads is to weigh the mails at certain stated periods, of which the railroads have notice. The weighing, as a rule, is done during one month in every four years. This forces the Government to pay for forty-seven months on the same amount that shall happen to pass through the mails during one month out of the forty-eight. The opportunity to increase the mail matter by what is known as "padding," on the given month, and also for collusion between Government officials and railway officials is as boundless as it is apparent. I submit that under existing law the Postmaster-General might do much to prevent these enormous frauds and reduce the deficiency. Congress has conferred upon the Postmaster-General a discretion and power to weigh the mails not less than thirty successive working days in terms not less than four years, and to verify the result. Under this law he can weigh as often as he sees fit, and then refuse to verify until he is satisfied that an honest weighing had been made. Why has this not been done?

I submit that if the amendments which the minority offer providing for the Government to own its own cars and pay no more to the railroads for hauling them than the express companies now pay the railroads for a like service, that all of these evils and opportunities for evil will be once and for all cured. Then, if the Government would own its own cars, the people could enjoy all the mail facilities they now do, and more, with a surplus in the Treasury each year instead of a deficiency. The friends of this Loud bill, while professing to be chiefly concerned about the deficit in the Post-Office Department, yet offer an amendment to the bill to reduce letter postage from 2 to 1 cent. This is evidently done to catch the ear of the public with the popular cry of "1-cent letter postage," and thus call attention from the very objectionable and dangerous features contained in the bill. How can the deficit be changed to a surplus by reducing letter postage one-half? Under the present high rates paid to the railroads this would make an enormous deficit. I favor 1-cent letter postage, but I do not favor it at the expense of the newspapers and other valuable and important literature that go through the mails at second-class rates. A thousand times better for letter postage to be increased than for the provisions in this bill against second class mail matter to become a law. But if the necessary and business-like reforms which are set forth in the substitute which the minority offer to this bill are adopted, then we can have 1-cent letter postage and retain all the privileges of second-class mail matter which the people now enjoy, and at the same time turn the deficit into a surplus.

But even if we should admit that there is no remedy for the deficit which now exists in the Post-Office Department without cutting off the useful literature which goes through the mails at second-class rates, which enables the masses to have it brought to their doors at low cost, such privileges should not be cut off. They are educational and important, and instead of cutting off this important privilege to the masses the Government could afford, if necessary, to appropriate any amount of money necessary for this very important educational work.

The real purposes of this measure, known as the Loud postal bill, do not appear on its face. Its real purposes, or at least its effects if it should become a law, are far-reaching and dangerous. The gold ring, the monopolies, and trusts already control the avenues and agencies of rapid communication and intelligence. They filter and control the news that appears in the daily press each morning. They now seek through this bill to close up as far as possible the only other avenue left free and open.

We do not question the motives of the advocates of this bill in the two Houses of Congress, but it is well known that most of the great commercial press at least apologize for, if not defend, the trusts and combines; not only this, they openly advocate the single gold standard. It is also well known that economic literature treating of the money question and other vital economic reforms in opposition to monopolies and the theory of the gold standard, is excluded from news stands and from sale on the railroads, and that the only avenue which the people have whereby to study both sides of the great economic issues which are agitating the country is the United States mails. An examination of the bill shows that gold and monopoly literature, no matter how much it loads the mails by means of the great Sunday editions of newspapers, goes through the mails as second-class matter, which is the lowest rate and most favorable terms which the Government gives to any publication. To aggravate this unjust discrimination, and to make it apparent that the object is to give to the great dailies, backed by unlimited capital, a monopoly of communication with the people, sample copies of newspapers are excluded from second-class matter, although the publishers are willing to pay the postage. The great mass of newspapers which oppose the single gold standard are small local papers without any financial backing. It is absolutely necessary to the starting or maintaining of these enterprises that they shall be enabled to send out sample copies in order to advertise their papers and to get subscribers. This privilege, which, at the second-class rates paid, pays the Government more than it ought to cost, is the only instrumentality which interferes with an absolute monopoly of information on the great and vital economic issues which divide the country. It is true that there are a few great dailies which are opposed to monopoly rule, but they are so few in number that their circulation can not reach any considerable number of people in the United States. If this bill had been entitled "A bill to create a newspaper trust in the interest of the gold trust and all other trusts," its effects, if not its real purpose, would have been fully expressed in its title.

The amendments, or rather the substitute, which I offer will correct every real evil complained of, will save to the people the great and important privileges which they now enjoy, and at the same time give us 1-cent letter postage without increasing the cost of the postal system or causing a deficit. In short, the substitute which I offer retains all the benefits we now enjoy from the postal system and extends these benefits, not only without increasing the cost, but really decreases the cost. These are the reforms that are needed.

The letter of the Postmaster-General, the article by Mr. Cowles in the February (1897) number of the Outlook, and the article in the New York World, above referred to, are annexed as exhibits hereto.

MARION BUTLER.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BUTLER to the bill (H. R. 4566) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That, it being the policy of the United States to carry the mails in the railway mail service in cars belonging to the Government and pay to the railroad companies mileage rates for hauling the same, the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to advertise for six months for sealed proposals to furnish to the Government first-class mail cars of the best and most substantial structure, sufficient in numbers to perform the railway mail service of the United States. At the end of such advertisement, the Postmaster-General shall open such bids and award to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders a contract for such cars, to be delivered to the Government within six months thereafter. And upon the purchase and delivery of such cars the United States mails shall be carried in said cars, and shall be hauled over the railway lines of the United States under contract with the Postmaster-General: Provided, That the charge therefor shall not be greater than is paid by express companies and other parties for similar service.

"SEC. 2. That every railroad contracting with the Government to haul its mail cars shall examine and approve the Government's cars as safe and in good condition, and the said company shall be required in the same contract to keep such cars in repair and treat them in all respects as the first-class cars of the said railroad companies shall be treated on its lines, and to be allowed a reasonable compensation therefor, to be fixed in the contract; and any damage which said cars, the persons connected therewith, or the mail matter contained therein may sustain shall be at the risk of the railroad company, for which the Government shall not be responsible. Neither shall the Government be liable for any damage to other cars in the train or to passengers or freight thereon by reason of any defect in the mail car of the United States in such train: and all of these conditions shall be made a part of the contract.

"SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to cause separate accounts to be kept in his Department which shall show the following facts: First, the comparative cost per pound of handling first-class matter, constituting what is known as letter mail, and the second-class matter; second, the difference in the weight of the ordinary week-day editions of the daily newspapers and the aggregate weight of Sunday editions of such newspapers during the ensuing fiscal year; third, the weight of books, pamphlets, and periodicals, other than newspapers, that now pass through the mails at second-class rates.

"And the Postmaster-General shall investigate and report any other matters of reform upon which legislation is needed to decrease the expenses of the Department, without in any way limiting the mail facilities which are now furnished by the Government."

EXHIBIT A.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1897.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 7th instant, I beg leave to state that postmasters are not required to make separate reports of the weight of Sunday editions of daily journals passing in the mails as second-class matter, and therefore I am unable to give you an approximate estimate of the difference between the average daily weight of the week-day and Sunday editions of such papers.

Publishing houses issuing several periodicals, and news agents when sending to other news agents, send miscellaneous packages containing daily and weekly newspapers and magazines and other periodicals, and, consequently, since they are not weighed and mailed separately, it is impossible to give the average weight of weekly newspapers or other periodicals by their classes.

The weight of second-class matter sent through the mails during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, upon which postage was collected at the pound rate was 396,640,351 pounds. The estimated amount of "free county matter" was 52,348,297 pounds, making an aggregate of 348,988,648 pounds, and an average of 953,393 pounds or 476 tons daily. It is impossible to separate the cost of handling second-class mail matter and letters from the cost of handling other mail matter.

In my annual report I give the weight of the several classes of mail matter, with the amount of revenue received therefrom, and also the estimated revenue received from a single pound of each class.

Regretting my inability to furnish the exact information you desire,
I am, sir, very respectfully,

WM. L. WILSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. W. M. STEWART,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

EXHIBIT B.

THE POSTAL DEFICIT AND THE LOUD BILL.

[By James L. Cowles* in the February Outlook.]

In his opening speech in behalf of his bill the chairman of the Post-Office Committee of the House of Representatives spoke as follows: "We all admit that this country is to-day in an unfortunate condition financially. While perhaps we may not all agree as to the remedy for the cure of the existing evil, we do all admit that, from a financial standpoint, this country is in an unfortunate position. Now, this bill presents to this body the opportunity to relieve the country from a deficiency of $10,000,000 already existing in the service of the Post-Office Department and to give to it in addition a revenue of $10,000,000 more. At the lowest calculation there is involved in this bill a saving to the Government of $20,000,000 per annum, and if we may take the figures of Postmaster-General Wanamaker, if we may take his estimate made in 1892, we must come to the conclusion that this iniquity (the carriage of second-class matter in the mails)—I will term it an iniquity—costs our people more than $40,000,000 annually."

Now, I heartily sympathize with every effort made by our public servants at Washington to so reduce illegitimate expenditures and to so increase legitimate revenues that our National Government, the greatest of our public business corporations, may always be in a sound financial condition. Whatever may be the needs of the Government, however, I hope that the Post-Office, the greatest of our public services, will never degenerate into an engine of taxation to be run on the principle of "what the traffic will bear." The common interest clearly demands that our postal rates shall never more than suffice to pay to the Government the cost of the service which it renders to the individual.

Mr. LOUD'S desire to reform abuses in our postal business is most commendable; but in this particular instance the evil may be far better met, I think, by extending to all the privileges now granted to a few, than by restricting those privileges within narrower limits. The exigencies of the situation demand a far more radical reform in the management of the Post-Office than that contemplated in the bill now pending before the Senate.

The postal deficit is not due to the cent-a-pound rate paid to the Government for postage on paper-covered books and on returned newspapers, but to the 8-cents-a-pound tax levied by railway managers for a service that would yield them a handsome profit at one-half a cent a pound.

The report of Postmaster-General Wanamaker of 1889, page 90, makes the average carriage of a piece of postal matter to be 442 miles; 10.4 per cent of the weight of the mails is carried but 25 miles; 24.7 per cent goes on an average 125 miles; 24.4 per cent travels 350 miles; 23.8 per cent is carried 750 miles, and but 17.1 per cent of the weight of the mails is carried an average of 1,500 miles. Nearly 60 per cent of our mail bags travel within zones of 350 miles, and the proportion of short-distance exchanges of heavy matter would undoubtedly be much greater were not the Government underbid by the express companies in this business. "Within a radius (within zones) of 500 miles," says Mr. LOUD, "the express companies to-day are carrying the matter (domicile to domicile) for a fraction under a cent a pound. Beyond the radius of 500 miles they dump it all on the United States Government for transportation.',

*Author of A General Freight and Passenger Post (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York).

It is true that the record on which Mr. Wanamaker based his figures did not include second-class matter; it is also true that the average distance traversed by third and fourth class matter was 558 and 599 miles, respectively, but since the short hauls are taken by the express companies, this is not wonderful. If the same conditions prevail elsewhere that prevail in Connecticut, it is safe to say that the express companies make their short-haul rates on State publications just enough below the postal rates to get the business. I shall show a little later that if the Government paid no more to the railroads than do the express companies it would be a very profitable business to the Government to carry its second, third, and fourth class matter any distance for 1 cent a pound, and there would be a corresponding saving to both our State governments and to individuals.

In any case, it is safe to assume 442 miles as the average haul of postal matter at present; and if the Government received at the hands of our railway rulers the same treatment as the express companies, the average haul for all classes of postal matter would undoubtedly fall to that of letters, 386 miles.

Taking, then, 442 miles, the distance from New York to Buffalo, as the average haul of a mail bag (the average run of a postal car in 1894 was but 170 miles), we find that the railroads tax the Government $160 a ton for a haul that, in the days of the ox cart, cost private individuals but $100.

To the possible criticism that the saving of time ought to be considered, I reply that this is a matter, not of the value of the service of the railroads, but of the cost of that service, and I contend that our railways charge the Government for the transportation of postal matter full sixteen times the cost of the service rendered. In proof of this statement I offer the following evidence:

It is a matter of court record that the Texas Pacific and the Southern Pacific railroads carry foreign hats and caps, boots and shoes, cashmere and laces, cutlery and ordinary hardware, from New Orleans to San Francisco for eight-tenths of a cent a pound, and the business has proved so profitable that, after years of litigation, they have at last secured a decree from the Supreme Court declaring it lawful, and also declaring it lawful for them to levy three or four times as heavy a transport tax for the same service rendered to native-made goods of the same description. Now, if it is profitable for our railroads to carry these foreign-made goods across the continent for eight-tenths of a cent a pound, am I not justified in my contention that it would be profitable to haul our own mail bags average distances of 442 miles for one-half cent a pound?

But we will come closer home. Twenty-five of my little books, A General Freight and Passenger Post, came to me the other day from Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, of New York, and the express, domicile to domicile, was but 35 cents—less than 3 cents a pound, less than 1½ cents a volume.

It costs 9 cents to send off a single volume through the post-office, and as I am expecting to distribute a great many of these little messengers of good tidings, I concluded that it might be worth while to ascertain the regular express rates from New York throughout the country. I therefore wrote to Adams Express Company, and they kindly sent me one of their regular merchandise rate books.

Imagine my surprise on finding that in packages of 60 pounds and upward the regular express rate from New York to New Haven is but one-half a cent a pound, while from New York to Boston the rate in packages of 75 pounds and upward is but 1 cent a pound. From New York to Philadelphia the rate, in packages of 70 pounds and upward, is three-fourths of a cent a pound; in parcels of a hundred pounds and upward, the rate to Cleveland is 1½ cents a pound; to Cincinnati, 2 cents; to Detroit, 2 cents; to Chicago, 2½ cents; to New Orleans, 5 cents, etc. From New York to Elizabeth, Newark, Rahway, and other places in New Jersey the rate on packages of 75 pounds and above is four-tenths of a cent a pound, while between New York and Jersey City the charge is but 25 cents a hundred, these rates in all cases being from domicile to domicile. Remember, too, the statement of Mr. LOUD, that within zones of 500 miles the express rate is a fraction under 1 cent a pound.

Now, how much more than one-half a cent a pound do the express companies pay the railroads for their share in this service?

And why should the Government pay the railroads any more for the transportation of its mail bags than the express companies pay for a much greater service?

A reduction in transportation rates to one-half a cent a pound would save to the Government full $45,000,000 a year, and would enable it to extend the cent-a-pound rate to all classes of products, and yet with a profit to the Government, for what the express companies do with a profit the Post-Office can do with a profit.

If this evidence from the express business fails to be convincing, then please note the following, and please observe that these facts are of court record: Thousands of milk cans are brought every day to New York, 40-quart cans, weighing when filled about 100 pounds, and with them other thousands of crates, each holding 12 quart bottles of milk or cream, the crates weighing when the bottles are filled about 70 pounds, and these cans and crates are returned empty distances up to 396 miles. On a can of cream the charge is one-half a cent a pound; on a hundred-pound can of milk the transport tax is a little less than one-third of a cent a pound. When the cream is carried in bottles—70-pound crates—the tax is less than one-fourth of a cent a pound, and when the bottles contain milk therate is less than one-sixth of a cent a pound.

These rates, please remember, include the return of the empty cans and crates of bottles free. The zone within which these rates prevailed a year ago covered a distance of 320 miles. It is reported to cover 396 miles to-day; and I heard George R. Blanchard, of the Joint Traffic Association, testify before the Interstate Commerce Commission last winter in favor of their extension for distances up to 1,000 miles. The counsel of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad went very much further than Mr. Blanchard, however, and pleaded in favor of the extension of these rates up to any distance within which the milk could be brought to market in fit condition for use, saying that "the cost of the service was in no real sense dependent on the length of the haul." Yes; and these learned counsel admitted that these rates on trains running at passenger speed were so remunerative that their clients were able to make a clear gift of over $50,000 a year out of the profits to their milk contractor, Westcott.

The Hon. Joseph H. Choate, of New York, had a hand in this noted trial of railway managers by the people, and I heard him in court use language to the effect that the enormous profits secured to Westcott by this milk contract with the officials of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad furnished almost conclusive evidence of collusion between Westcott and these railway managers for a division of the spoils.

According to Mr. Choate, these rates, one-half a cent a pound on 40-quart cans of cream, one-third of a cent a pound on 40-quart cans of milk, one-quarter of a cent a pound on crates of bottled cream, and one-sixth of a cent on bottled cream, empties returned, brought profits to the railroads of two to three hundred per cent; one-fifth of a cent a pound on cans and bottles alike, and whether filled with cream or milk, would have yielded an ample return to the railroads.

Now, if this be true, if railway managers can profitably carry filled milk cans and loaded milk crates any distance on passenger trains (for milk trains are practically passenger trains), at a uniform rate of one-fifth of a cent a pound, returning the empties free, why should the Government pay 8 cents a pound, $8 a hundred, $160 a ton, for carrying its mail bags similar distances in similar trains?

But we have yet one more witness to bring forward in this case of "the people versus the railways." In 1887 Postmaster-General Vilas showed that the Government was then paying the railways as much every year for the use of postal cars as it would have cost to build them, and this in addition to the payment made according to weight under the general item of transportation of the mails by the railroads.

The Government would save $1,500,000 a year, said Mr. Vilas, by owning its postal cars. The Government could easily build its cars, and could more than pay for them by the savings of a single year. "Government ownership, moreover, would very much relieve the difficulties of the compensation problem." According to the estimates of Mr. Vilas, if the Government had owned its postal cars in 1894, it would have saved over $2,000,000, and last year the saving would probably have been more than $2,500,000.

The following paragraph occurs in a report concerning the railways of Belgium made by M. Fassieux, the director of the Belgian roads, in 1865: "The working of lines by Government affords perfect facilities for the postal service, as mails can be sent by every train; even when the lines belong to companies, they are carried free by one train per day in each direction." We do not ask that the mails should be carried free on the great steam roads, but we do think that every State should provide for the free carriage of the mails on the trolley lines, and in no case should the Government pay more than the actual cost of the service. To this demand the railway managers will doubtless reply that a very large part of our railway system is already in bankruptcy, and to reduce the rates will ruin the rest.

The case of Westcott and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western road, however, presents another reason than low charges for the failure of railways. In many sections the managers of the railways have for years systematically robbed both the stockholder and the ordinary patron of the railway; in other sections the weight of their exactions has paralyzed industry and involved all classes (except themselves and their favorites) in one common ruin. Is this strong language? It is almost mild in comparison with the recent statements of President Ingalls, of the Big Four, and of President Stickney, of the Chicago and Great Western Railroad, as to the conduct of their associates in the management of the nation's circulating system.

I submit that what we need in the present crisis is not the curtailment but the extension of the sphere of the Post-Office; and not until its beneficent rule has been extended over the whole realm of railway transportation, and the transportation taxes are determined according to the cost of the service rendered, can we hope to see a return of healthful prosperity in this country.

EXHIBIT C.

[New York World, January 31, 1897.]

THE GOVERNMENT ROBBED OF $10,000,000 PER ANNUM—MAILS FRAUDULENTLY PADDED BY RAILROAD MANAGERS—EXCESSIVE RATES IMPOSED FOR THE USE OF RAILWAY POST-OFFICE CARS—RAIL ROUTES DRAW $32,000,000 PER ANNUM—NEW YORK CENTRAL MAIN LINE RECEIVING OVER $3,000 PER MILE, A SUM SUFFICIENT TO PAY INTEREST CHARGES ON THE COST OF A DOUBLE TRACK FROM NEW YORK TO BUFFALO.

The railroads of the United States are defrauding and overcharging the Government to the extent of $10,000,000 per annum, and this public plundering is going on while statesmen and dabsters at Washington are vacantly going about for means whereby they may avoid a deficit of $8,000,000 per annum in running the Post-Office Department.

The frauds are notoriously open and admitted.

Railroads are receiving over $32,000,000 per annum for service, though they are not entitled to more than $22,000,000 on any fair basis of Government allowance.

Railroad managers have stuffed the mails with free postal matter during a period of thirty days every four years when the Government made its quadrennial reweighing, and for the other forty-seven months of the term they have drawn vast sums from the Treasury.

Some feeble vaporings have gone out from Washington that Congress had fixed the method of weighing and that the Department officials were not responsible for these vast expenditures. The officials, therefore, let the subject pass, and no serious steps were taken to stop the frauds or to punish the offender. It is true that complaint was made by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General, but the Attorney-General's Office has done less to stop this form of corporate offense than it has done to check trusts and monopolies. Offenders have been allowed to go free under an absurd and forced interpretation of the laws relative to weighing.

The Seaboard Air Line was caught red-handed in this public thievery, but nothing was done, and the general manager of the line, V. E. McBee, admitting the practices, said, "There is no legal or equitable reason why we should withhold matter from the mails during the weighing period," and then declared that his line had been following the methods which were common upon all other railroads.

In ten years the annual payments by the Government to railroads for mail transportation have increased over $15,000,000. The payments have been as follows:

Date.	Cost per annum.	Date.	Cost per annum.
1881	$11,613,366	1889	$21,639,613
1882	12,753,184	1890	23,395,232
1883	13,887,800	1891	25,183,713
1884	15,012,603	1892	27,126,529
1885	16,027,083	1893	28,910,195
1886	17,336,512	1894	30,358,190
1887	18,056,272	1895	31,205,342
1888	19,524,959	1896	32,405,797

These expenditures relate solely to payments to railroad companies and do not include the pay of railway post-office clerks ($7,954,377) or star routes ($5,884,511) or steamboat routes.

The aggregate expenditures under the supervision of an Assistant Postmaster-General who receives $4,000 annual salary exceed $47,000,000 per annum.

Some few of the railroads of the country are dealing with the Government on a fair and honest basis, but their number is exceedingly small in comparison with those corporations which have padded the mails to enlarge their earnings and to defraud the taxpayers.

The payments to the large railroad systems for the year ending June 30, 1895, were as follows:

	Length of lines.	Pay.
	Miles.
Vanderbilt system: New York Central, Lake Shore, Michigan Central, and Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis	7,246	$3,698,671
Pennsylvania Railroad	8,083	3,578,885
Union Pacific	5,257	1,624,132
Chicago, Burlington and Quincy	7,239	1,539,648
Southern Pacific	7,577	1,509,691
Baltimore and Ohio	3,304	1,108,275
Chicago and Northwestern	7,531	1,105,806
Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul	6,055	1,085,921
Missouri Pacific	4,853	917,008
Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe	6,046	901,491
Southern Railway	4,331	860,226
Illinois Central	3,944	644,690
Louisville and Nashville	3,070	508,783
New York, New Haven and Hartford	1,947	553,568
Northern Pacific	3,915	539,104
Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific	3,450	518,927
Great Northern	4,086	438,952
Wabash	1,930	422,418
Other lines	81,299	9,650,096
Total	171,212	31,205,342

On a reweighing of mails made last year the detailed report of the Postmaster-General shows that the Pennsylvania Railroad was allowed $446,000 for transportation of an average of 30 tons per day from Pittsburg to Chicago, or an average of $40 per ton for that distance, or nearly 9 cents per ton per mile. The speed at which this mail was carried averaged 26 miles per hour, so that the service can not be called a fast train service, or that the Government paid extra for speed. The same rate, at 9 cents per mile, was allowed to the Big Four (Vanderbilt) line from Cleveland to Cincinnati.

This mail matter can not be classed as ordinary freight, but when it is understood that some freight is carried by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for less than three-tenths of a cent per mile, this liberality in paying railroads for mail transportation is beyond comprehension. With such payments to railroads the deficiency of the Post-Office Department exceeded $8,000,000.

On routes carrying mail the whole length of the route Congress allows the following pay per mile per annum:

200 pounds per day	$50	2,000 pounds per day	$150
500 pounds per day	75	3,500 pounds per day	175
1,000 pounds per day	100	5,000 pounds per day	200
1,500 pounds per day	125

Over 2,000 pounds additional, $25 per mile additional.

In 1876 this allowance was reduced 10 per cent and an additional 5 per cent was cut off in 1878, but in eighteen years since then no further reduction has been made in the rate, though the charge for transportation has fallen from 1.35 cents per ton per mile in 1878 to 0.82 in 1895, a decrease of 40 per cent in freight charges. Passenger charges have decreased from 2.447 cents per passenger per mile in 1882 to 2.016 in 1895, a decrease of 18 per cent. But no decrease has been made in eighteen years in the rate of pay for mail matter. Congress has actually fixed the pay for transporting mail in large quantities at $21.38 per ton per mile per annum, or at 6 cents per ton per mile for all matter carried the whole length of the route.

Though these excessive figures for mail transportation have been maintained for years, it is difficult to find any official trace of information given to Congress respecting the character of these rates.

The Post-Office Department has not been powerless in the matter of controlling payments and protecting the Government. The act of Congress (R. S., 4002) expressly conferred upon the Postmaster-General a discretion to weigh the mails for not less than thirty successive working days in terms not less frequently than once in every four years, the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct. If there were frauds, he could weigh as frequently as he thought proper, and he could refuse to verify until an honest weighing had been made. Who can recall any instance except that of Postmaster-General Wilson's attack upon the Seaboard Air Line, where any Postmaster-General has persistently and energetically and earnestly exercised these functions in the interest of the people? When has the attention of Congress been called to the high rates of mail transportation or to the details of the frauds practiced upon the weighers?

A bill has passed the lower House of Congress, known as the Loud bill, which is intended to correct many abuses which have crept into the second-class matter. Postmaster-General Wilson and many intelligent officials have urged this bill as the panacea which shall make the Postal Department self-supporting. The service has been abused by executive departments sending free through the mails such articles as iron safes, roller desks, and similar bulky freight, and abuses have crept in through the sending of serial libraries and reprints of books and sample editions of newspapers issued for advertising purposes. News companies have returned unsold periodicals, fraternal societies circulate publications of a mere advertising character, and similar private enterprises have been carried on at public expense. But the discontinuance of these matters will not be materially felt for two or three years in postal revenues, because of the quadrennial weighings, unless—

First. The Postmaster-General shall exercise his undoubted authority and order an immediate reweighing of mails on all railroads.

Second. Congress must provide severe punishment for schemes to pad the mails during the weighing period.

Third. The excessive rates now paid for mail transportation on the trunk lines must be cut.

Fourth. Franked matter must be excluded from the weighings.

The officers of the Railway Mail Service have not exercised diligence in protecting the interests of the Government.

The act of Congress fixed a rate not exceeding:

$25 per mile per annum for railway post-office cars 40 feet in length.
$30 per mile per annum for railway post-office cars 45 feet in length.
$40 per mile per annum for railway post-office cars 50 feet in length.
$50 per mile per annum for railway post-office cars 55 to 60 feet in length.

Under this law the officials have allowed the maximum limit to be paid. They allowed $3,463,916.70 for 622 railway post-office cars in actual use and for 154 cars in reserve. Assuming that half of the reserve cars were in actual use, then the average pay for each car was $5,000 per annum for wheelage.

It should be noted that the Government had already paid for carrying every pound of mail, and that this maximum allowance was an addition thereto. The figures of the Pullman Company and of the Jackson Sharp Company, of Wilmington, Del., show that a freight car costing $500 has an average life of twelve years; that a passenger coach costing $4,000 has an average life of twenty years. These railway post-office cars cost between $4,500 and $5,000. Some of them have been in service since the Centennial Exposition of 1876, and yet the postal authorities have been paying for the wheelage and care of such cars $5,000 per annum.

They have given more than the full cost of the car for one year's service. In twenty years the Government pays $100,000 for a car costing $4,500.

The New York Central Railroad receives an annual payment of $3,668.09 per mile for transporting mail matter between New York and Buffalo, this payment not including the pay of the railway post-office clerks. In other words, for hauling the mails the Government pays to the New York Central Company a sum exceeding the amount necessary to pay interest on the cost of a complete double-track line from New York to Buffalo.

The Pennsylvania Railroad receives $3,801.53 per mile for its service between New York and Philadelphia, and $2,534.87 for its service from Philadelphia to Pittsburg.

The amount paid by the Government for transporting mail matter is equivalent to the interest of $4,000 per mile on all the railroads of the country.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3727) granting an increase of pension to Thornton S. Crosley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3728) granting a pension to John F. Early; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, which I ask to have printed, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I also submit certain prints, which I desire to have referred to that committee in connection with the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CANNON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS RENDERED.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to report to the Senate under section 11 of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," all judgments rendered in the circuit and district courts of the United States, not heretofore reported at this session, which require an appropriation for their payment.

LIST OF CLAIMS ALLOWED.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of all claims allowed up to and including Saturday, the 27th instant, by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those already transmitted to Congress during the present session; and also a list of judgments of the Court of Claims, requiring an appropriation at the present session, not already transmitted.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN CUBA.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should speedily and effectually protect the lives and liberties of peaceable American citizens residing or sojourning in Cuba, and that he should promptly insist that Spain in her war against her colonists in the Island of Cuba should conduct the same on principles of civilized warfare, eliminating all unusual and unnecessary cruelty and barbarity; and for the enforcement of these reasonable and just requirements United States battle ships should be sent without delay to Cuban waters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear it read once more.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the resolution lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

REPORT ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 800 additional copies of the report of the results of the mission of the Commissioner-General of Immigration to the Italian Government, October, 1896, 300 for the use of the Senate and 500 for the use of the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

IMPRISONMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN CUBA.

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, requested to transmit to the Senate, either in open or secret session, as he may prefer, all the correspondence and reports of the consul-general of the United States at Habana relating to all American citizens now in prison in the Island of Cuba, not previously reported on.

M. A. CHEEK.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, That the President communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public service, all the information in possession of the Department of State relating to the claim of M. A. Cheek against the Siamese Government.

THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. FRYE. I move that Senate Document No. 135, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of the 16th instant, information called for in relation to the Revenue-Cutter Service, be reprinted, with certain corrections to be indicated by the Treasury Department.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10155) amending section 1858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MRS. EMMA WEIR CASEY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2729) granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

At the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. FRYE. General Casey, as is well known, was a faithful officer in war, and of equal fidelity in peace. Indeed, Congress had such implicit confidence in his ability and integrity that from time to time it imposed upon him very arduous and responsible duties entirely outside of his official work. I have no doubt that the anxiety and increased work hastened General Casey's death. He never received a dollar for all of this work performed before his retirement—no pay whatever. The Senate committee reported the bill and the Senate passed it, giving the widow of General Casey $75 a month. He left her a house, but not enough for her support outside. The House has amended the bill by cutting it down to $50. I am informed by friends of General Casey in the House that in these last days of the session unless the Senate agrees to the amendment there is liability that the bill will be lost.

So, as a friend of General Casey and earnestly sympathizing with his widow, I move that the Senate agree to the House amendment, at the same time declaring that I do not regard myself by this action as at all foreclosed from hereafter asking a further increase.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 3603) to extend the time for the completion of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota; and

The joint resolution (S. R. 121) to amend an act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota.

SIOUX RESERVATION IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment inserting the word "only" in the nineteenth line of said bill.

That the Senate concur in the House amendments inserting after the word "in," in the twenty-first line, the words "North Dakota," and after the word "Dakota," in the same line, inserting the words "and Nebraska."

R. F. PETTIGREW,
T. H. CARTER,
J. H. BERRY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN F. LACEY,
WM. R. ELLIS,
THOMAS C. McRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

STATEMENT.

The word "only" was inserted in the nineteenth line of the bill by the House without being considered by any committee of the House, and its retention would repeal the existing law, except in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Nebraska, in relation to commutation of homestead entry after fourteen months' residence thereon.

The words "North Dakota and Nebraska" have been inserted in the twenty-first line of the bill because the Sioux Indian Reservation extends into both the States named.

The report was concurred in.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. QUAY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 and 4 to the bill (H. R. 9638) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

M. S. QUAY,
EUGENE HALE,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
R. WAYNE PARKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments numbered 3 and 4, upon which the conferees were unable to agree.

The motion was agreed to.

FORM OF CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution suggesting the form of certificate of election of Senators to be sent by the executive of any State, in pursuance of section 17 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. What action is proposed upon the resolution? I observe that the Senator from Massachusetts is not in his seat.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits the resolution as coming over from a previous day. It is for the Senate to take what action it desires.

Mr. GRAY. I ask that the resolution be at present considered. It is a very important one and will not create any debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move its reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it should go there, but the Senator from Massachusetts requested that it might remain where it is. I do not think it should be referred in his absence. I am unwilling that it shall be acted upon now, and I hope the Senator from South Dakota will allow it to remain where it is.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw my motion, and ask unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. ALLEN. Some weeks ago I introduced two resolutions, one a Senate resolution and the other a concurrent resolution, respecting the Pacific railroads. My colleague [Mr. THURSTON] debated the resolutions on three or four different days and has not yet concluded his remarks. The resolutions were to be passed over without prejudice from time to time until he concluded his remarks. The remarks have not been concluded, and I have not heard anything from the resolutions for several days. I ask that they be continued without prejudice in their place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company.

REPORT ON PRESERVATION OF FISHERIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State covering the report of the joint commission on behalf of the United States and Great Britain, dated December 31, 1896, relative to the preservation of the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and Canada, as provided by the joint agreement between the United States and Great Britain, dated December 6, 1892.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 24, 1897.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I call for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 16, to insert:

To enable the Attorney-General to employ a special attorney for the Mission Indians of southern California, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, $1,000.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to take the floor upon the pending amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, and I will reach the amendment and the bill by gradual approaches. I wish to explain to the Senate what may seem to be rather improper persistency on my part in the effort to bring up the Duluth Bridge bill, and also to indicate to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] the exact status of the memorial of the Wisconsin legislature to which he refers.

The Senator from Wisconsin and the Senate will remember that I explained yesterday the condition of the bridge. I stated the fact that the Pennsylvania Steel Company, a very large institution in central Pennsylvania, is employed in the construction; that the time for the construction of the bridge expires on the 1st of April, and that all the material for the bridge is at the site and the bridge is about one-third erected. The act of Congress authorizing the construction of the bridge requires its completion by April 28. I stated that that was impossible, owing to the severity of the weather at Duluth during the winter, and an extension of the time to July 1 or August 1 would answer every purpose and furnish every equity desired by the contractors.

The Senator from Wisconsin seemed to think that the bill which I introduced, which only went to the extent of extending the time for the construction of the bridge, was severely antagonized by his constituency, and that the legislature of his State had passed a resolution protesting against it; that is to say, against the bill which I introduced providing merely for the extension of time, there having been another bill pending here which proposes to relieve the bridge company from certain penalties, I believe, and duties imposed upon it. It was my judgment that the legislature of Wisconsin, in its action, had referred to the original bill, with which I believe the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is familiar, which he reported, and which is entirely at variance or entirely different from the one which I introduced. The following passage occurred between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself yesterday. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the memorial of the legislature of Wisconsin refers to this bill, which is a naked extension of time for the benefit of those employed in the construction of the bridge, or to the original bill, which involves a dispute as to certain conditions imposed upon the bridge company when it accepted its charter?

Mr. VILAS. The memorial relates to this bill, and the telegram was in answer to a letter which I sent advising the parties interested of the fact that this bill had been introduced. I conceive that it can make no difference in reality to the company in which the Senator is interested, which is constructing the bridge, whether the bill passes or not.

After the controversy yesterday between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself, I wired to Madison for a copy of the memorial. I have it here, and send it to the desk to be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

MADISON, WIS., February 23, 1897.

To Hon. M. S. QUAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Mr. Payne instructs me to report memorial, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully shows that in the judgment of the legislature the best interests of the people of this State and Minnesota require that the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved on the —— day of ——, 18—, should be amended as follows: First, so as to make said bridge perpetually free of tolls to foot passengers; second, so as to make the said bridge free of tolls to bicycles; third, so as to empower, under proper safeguards, the cities of Superior and Duluth and the counties of St. Louis and Douglas to purchase the said bridge at the actual cost of construction, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, deducting, however, the net receipts which shall have been received by the bridge company up to the date of said purchase; fourth, by striking out the provision of said act making the said bridge free of tolls to street-railway cars in the event the same is purchased by the cities of Duluth and Superior or the counties of Douglas and St. Louis, or any of them; and this memorial respectfully prays that the said amendments may be made accordingly.

Resolved, That the governor is requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing to the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives and to the Members of Congress and Senators from this State.

Offered February 1; amended to strike out second subdivision relating to bicycles; passed both houses 19th; will be presented to governor for signature Wednesday afternoon.

ROBERT LUSCOMBE.

Mr. QUAY. The fact that the resolution will be presented to the governor only on Wednesday, or this afternoon, accounts for the nonreception of the resolution by the Senator from Wisconsin.

What I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senate to is that he is entirely mistaken as to the direction and purport of this memorial. It indicates no antagonism whatever to the extension of time to the bridge company, but is directed to amendments of its charter. The extension of time for the construction of the bridge is not mentioned in the memorial.

Furthermore, the Senator from Wisconsin is mistaken as to the bill to which it refers. The records of the Senate will show that the bill which was pending this morning before the Indian appropriation bill succeeded it was introduced by me on the 15th of February and reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on the 18th. The memorial which the Secretary has just read was introduced in the legislature of Wisconsin on the 1st day of February, two weeks previously, so that it does not in any way relate to or affect this bill.

I wish merely to make that explanation to the Senate and to the Senator from Wisconsin to show him that he is entirely mistaken about the action of his legislature.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I wish to make just as brief a statement of this matter as I can to show the proper relation of the facts to the question.

Three or four years ago, after some two or three years of controversy between two companies competing for the privilege of building this bridge across the St. Louis River, the cities of Duluth and Superior appointed a joint bridge committee, as I think they call it. The citizens of those two cities cooperating in that joint committee finally made an arrangement with this bridge company by which the company undertook certain conditions as the compensation or consideration upon which the bridge committee agreed that they should build the bridge which the two companies sought.

After that was done and the terms of the bill to be passed by Congress according to their agreement were specifically made, a bill was sent here, and the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Washburn, and myself, supposing the bill to be in exact accordance with the terms of the agreement, consented to its passage. It imposed on the bridge company as a condition for the construction of the bridge that they should do a certain amount of dredging, and should thereafter forever maintain the channel of the river at their cost.

About four months afterwards they succeeded in passing a bill which relieved them from the obligation to forever maintain the channel. This year they sent down a bill asking to extend the time which had been rigorously prescribed to them, and also to relieve them from a large share of the dredging which they had agreed to do in the St. Louis River.

Now, the people of those communities insist on correcting a certain mistake, to call it by no harder name, which was made in the passage of that bill, by which, from a change in the language of it as it was agreed to be passed and as it was laid before the then Senator from Minnesota and myself by the bridge company, two injuries were done to the community; one that the bridge, which they agreed to be free to foot passengers, was made subject to toll; the other that the provision which the two cities of Duluth and Superior had stipulated, that they should have the right to buy the bridge at cost and 7 per cent interest, and that thereafter it should be free to wagon travel, they had altered so that thereafter it should be free to street railway travel, thus destroying to a very large degree the advantage which the cities would have acquired by making the purchase of them. They simply ask as a condition for the new amendments the company desire that those stipulations originally agreed to, of which I have abundant evidence in my desk, should be put upon the bill.

Mr. President, that made a considerable controversy over the bill which the Senator from Minnesota introduced. After that bill was introduced, the Senator from Pennsylvania, who represents a State in which there is a company which has undertaken a part of the work in the construction of this bridge—I do not know the full extent of it, and which desires to have the time extended for that construction—introduced a bill providing only for the extension of time. I supposed that there would be much less objection to that bill than to the other, and at once, upon its introduction, I wrote to people interested there to ascertain if there would be objection, or if they would insist upon maintaining the ground which had been taken. In answer to the letter which I wrote to the party a second time upon the point, I received a telegram, dated February 20, stating that—

The legislature of Wisconsin, after full hearing by supporters and objectors, passed memorial to Congress covering everything which has been sent you.

I stated, therefore, yesterday, in reference to it, that I supposed that that memorial related to exactly the subject before us; and, as I understand it, after hearing it read now, I think it does; but I am not willing to take a memorial from the legislature of Wisconsin through telegraphic correspondence of friends of those who have been defeated in the controversy before the legislature. I think I am entitled to have the action of the legislature awaited and regularly laid before Congress in the proper manner.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin is through, I want to say a few words on this matter.

The argument of the Senator is calculated to mislead the Senate and to give the Senate a false impression. He goes back into ancient history, and he states that this law was originally passed in 1894; that there had been a controversy; that finally they came to an understanding, and that he and Senator Washburn procured the passage of the original bridge bill, but that in doing so a mistake had been made in not putting a proviso into the bill that foot passengers should be permitted to pass over the bridge freely.

I know nothing about that matter, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the narrow and simple and plain question involved in this matter. This bridge law was passed in 1894. Under the original law, as well as under the amendatory act which was passed a few months after, the company was required to do a large amount of dredging in connection with building the bridge. During this session a bill was introduced in the other House, passed there, and came here, amending that bridge charter so as to relieve the company from the dredging, and, in addition, extending the time for building the bridge two or three months. Over that bill, which was favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Wisconsin and I have had a controversy. It related to two changes in the original charter, first, to relieve the company from dredging, and second, simply a matter of extending the time three months.

Now, the bill which is pending before the Senate, introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania, disposes of that dredging matter, leaves that untouched, and it is simply a pure and naked bill to extend the time for building this bridge three months. The time will expire in two or three months, and the company ask for an extension of time to August. That is all there is in this bill. I venture as a lawyer to say that, even if this bill should pass, no court would ever declare a forfeiture of the charter if the company fails to complete the bridge by the 1st day of August.

The contention of the Senator from Wisconsin is that because there is a memorial of the legislature of Wisconsin, there may be an inference that the legislature does not want an extension of time, and is opposed to it. It is merely an extension of three months.

I submit to Senators whether, at the instance of a legislature or of anybody else, we ought to stultify ourselves and deny a reasonable request for a mere extension of three months to a company which is putting in a double-track steel bridge between two cities which have not a bridge; and this is a bridge over which they expect to have their street cars run from the city of Duluth to the city of Superior.

It seems to me I might as well speak in plain unvarnished language, and say that such methods partake a little of what we call, outside of this Chamber, a dog-in-the-manger policy.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I desire to say that there is no laches on the part of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, which company has a contract for the entire structure; at least a telegram to me so indicates. The delay occurs on account of the inclement weather during the present winter at Duluth, which is stated in the telegram I submitted to the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I speak as a representative of the State of Minnesota and as a representative of the city of Duluth, a city having 60,000 people, who are interested in the building of this bridge for the purpose of having not only facilities for running railway trains across it, but in order that they may have an opportunity to make street-car connection between that city and the city of Superior. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] represents more directly the steel company engaged in the building of this bridge. Now, shall we stultify ourselves in denying this little favor to the men who put their money and their brains into this enterprise, and not give at least three months more in these hard times, when so many men are struggling and suffering? To do so is the paltriest and the meanest kind of tactics that I can think of.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota stated generally his facts pretty well, but after he had stated the facts, which showed he was all wrong in his position, he dealt, as attorneys for corporations are sometimes wont to do, and assailed those who stood on other grounds while he is demanding favors for his corporation at the hands of the Legislature.

This company undertook to carry out certain provisions. If they will carry out those provisions which they agreed to, they can have their bill in either form to-day, so far as we are concerned, for the House bill can be passed to-day if they will permit it to be amended in accordance with the two features, in respect to which there is no mistake, about the agreement between the corporation and the joint committee of the two cities of Duluth and Superior, and they in Duluth are as desirous of having that agreement executed as they in Superior, and not less are opposing the passage of this bill. There is no dog in the manger about it. They are simply insisting that when this railroad corporation comes in to demand the legislative discharge from the considerations which they undertook to execute as a part of the privilege of this franchise they shall comply with the explicit engagements which they entered into in the others.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I deny emphatically that the people of the city of Duluth are opposed to the passage of this bill now under consideration, introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VILAS. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 15, the Committee on Appropriations report an amendment to insert:

To enable the Attorney-General to employ a special attorney for the Mission Indians of southern California, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of the clause from line 24, on page 66, to line 2, on page 67, as follows:

For repair of present bridge across Big Wind River, on the Shoshone Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, the sum of $3,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to have the words, "to be immediately available," added at the end of line 2, on page 67, so that this bridge can be built or repaired at once, before the spring floods.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 2, on page 67, it is proposed to insert "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

That the mineral lands only in the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, shall be subject to entry under the laws of the United States in relation to the entry of mineral lands: Provided, That lands allotted to the Indians or used by the Government for any purpose or by any school shall not be subject to entry under this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 8, to strike out:

That the clause in section 3 of the act approved February 28, 1891 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 26, page 795), which provides as follows: "That where lands are occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for the same, and which lands are not needed for farming or agricultural purposes, and are not desired for individual allotments, the same may be leased by the authority of the council speaking for such Indians, for a period not to exceed five years for grazing or ten years for mining purposes, in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as the agent in charge of such reservation may recommend, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior," be, and the same is hereby, extended, so far as the same relates to leasing for mining purposes, to the lands embraced in that part of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, not restored to the public domain by the act of June 20, 1892 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, page 63), and still reserved by the Government for the use and occupancy of the Indians thereon, to take effect immediately. For completion of the digest, now being prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of the decisions of the courts and the Interior Department, and of the opinions of the Attorney-General relating to Indian Affairs, as authorized by a clause in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, $2,000. Any person who shall destroy or injure or carry away without authority from the Secretary of the Interior, any aboriginal antiquity on the public lands of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or be imprisoned not more than ninety days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 17, to insert:

For completion of the digest, now being prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of the decisions of the courts and the Interior Department, and of the opinions of the Attorney-General relating to Indian affairs, under authority of the Indian appropriation act approved June 10, 1896, $2,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may authorize said work to be performed by an employee of the Indian Office out of office hours and pay a proper compensation to such clerk therefor. And the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to settle the accounts of Kenneth S. Murchison, allowing him credit for such sums as he has disbursed or may hereafter disburse to himself or to Millard F. Holland, under authority of the Secretary of the Interior, for services heretofore, or that may be hereafter, rendered by them in connection with the preparation of said digest.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope that amendment may go over, so as to allow me an opportunity to examine it to some extent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 69, after line 9, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians, on their requisition or requisitions made therefor by the national treasurer of the Cherokee Nation, or by such other person or persons as said Old Settlers or Western Cherokees may, in special council, appoint for that purpose, the sum of $96,206.53, or so much thereof as remains subject to the order of the Secretary of the Interior and reserved by him out of the amount of $800,386.31, appropriated for the benefit of said Indians for the purpose specified in an act approved August 29, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes."

And insert:

That legal and equitable jurisdiction be, and the same hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to finally hear and determine, without the right of appeal, the claims of all persons upon the remainder of the fund withheld from distribution out of the money derived from 35 per cent of the judgment in favor of the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians and against the United States, in the sum of $800,386.31, alleged to have been set apart for the payment of expenses, and for legal services justly and equitably payable, on account of the prosecution of the claims of said Indians under the act of Congress approved August 23, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes," and again withheld from distribution under the act of Congress approved June 10, 1896, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes. And the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians, for the purposes of the actions hereby authorized, shall be considered a tribe of Indians, with power to contract through their duly authorized commissioner, agent, or attorney, and the operation of sections 2103 and 2104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are otherwise hereby suspended as to said actions, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine said claims and award judgments thereon. Separate actions shall be brought by each of said claimants, or the legal representatives thereof, against the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians and the United States, within sixty days from the passage of this act, by petition of claimants, verified under oath by the petitioning claimant or his attorney. Service of notice of suit upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be sufficient service upon said Indians, and it shall be his duty to see that the rights of the Indians are protected; and the defendants shall answer within sixty days from the filing of the petition in each of said actions whereby issue shall be joined, and the evidence heretofore filed by the claimants to the fund, or either of them, in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, in support of any claim may be considered, with such evidence as may be produced by the claimants or Indians, in said actions, in the discretion of the court, and the aggregate amount of the judgments of the court shall not exceed the amount of the fund withheld from distribution, as hereinbefore set forth, and shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior out of said fund to the person in whose favor the judgment is rendered, and not to his assignee; and said actions shall be as speedily as practicable brought to trial upon joinder of issue, and no action shall be barred or right impaired by reason of any previous award, payment, or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That any assignee of said claimants, or any of them, may maintain his action in his own right: And provided further, That the balance of the fund over the aggregate amount of judgments rendered by the court upon the actions herein provided for, if any there be, shall be awarded by the court to the said Indians: And provided further, That all claims against the said fund not filed in the Court of Claims within the time specified in this act shall be forever barred. The court shall, after issue joined, consolidate the several actions brought hereunder and render a final judgment on all the actions before the court.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what purpose impelled the committee to deny the right of appeal from a judgment of the Court of Claims in the cases alluded to?

Mr. BATE. I propose to move to strike out, in line 5, on page 70, the word "without," and to insert the word "with." so as to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Montana. I can not see why this right should be denied in cases of this kind, and I think there is doubt in regard to it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, my inquiry was directed for the mere purpose of securing information. In the proposition submitted by the committee the phrase occurs, "without appeal." I do not know that the right of appeal exists. If it does not exist, then the language is unnecessary; if it does exist, some reason should be suggested for denying the right.

Mr. BATE. I take it that ordinarily the right of appeal does exist in all such cases; but, by way of putting it beyond dispute, I think the right should be expressed on the face of the statute. Therefore, to that end, I propose to strike out of the fifth line the word "without" and insert "with;" so as to read "with the right of appeal."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, on page 70, before the words "the right of appeal," it is proposed to strike out "without" and insert "with."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I suggest that that amendment had better go over for some further examination later in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will permit the Chair one moment. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that this provision of the bill may go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the amendment been adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been adopted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think we had better dispose of the question now.

Mr. CALL. There is a memorial here from the Cherokee Indians which contains a good deal of matter in regard to this question, and it is better that it should go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Florida that the pending amendment go over for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir; I object, at least for the present. It seems to me that if there is any information bearing upon this amendment, the Senate may as well have it now as at any other time. We ought to understand what the facts in this case are, and I do not see any reason for postponing its consideration for that reason. If, in the examination of the amendment, there should appear to be any reason why it should go over, I should have no objection at that time to it being done. But I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question, which I think can be answered satisfactorily at once. There is no reason I can see why that should be postponed. For that reason, if for no other, I object to the provision being passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill, who doubtless has given careful attention to the construction of this amendment. As I understand it, this is to dispose of a controversy over 35 per cent that was agreed to be paid by the Old Settler Cherokees to a representative they had here, named Byran, I think. The purpose of this provision is to dispose of the remainder of that fund which has not yet been disposed of, is it not?

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is the purpose.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I see on page 70 that provision is made to pay "for legal services justly and equitably payable on account of the prosecution of the claims of said Indians under the act of Congress approved August 23, 1894," and so forth. From this it would seem that the payment of these attorneys must be limited to services rendered in the prosecution of the claim of the Old Settler Cherokees. As I understand, as a matter of fact, after this fund has been ascertained, there were a number of claimants presenting claims against the fund, and certain persons were employed in the defense of this fund against these claims, and, as I understand, one bill has passed through the House of Representatives providing for the compensation of one of those persons, and other bills are now pending. The question I ask the Senator is, Would the claim on the part of those people for defending those suits be included in the provision and be adjudicated by the court at the same time the others are?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not think that question came up with the committee at all, or that it was intended that they should be excluded, but it seems to me the language does exclude them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then, I submit there should be an amendment made to include those as well as the others.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall not object to an amendment allowing them to submit their claims also to the Court of Claims.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from Florida desires the amendment to go over, I have no objection to that being done. In the meantime I shall try to prepare an amendment to that effect.

Mr. CALL. I am a member of the committee having charge of this bill, and do not propose to make any opposition to it. I promised the Indians, however, that I would call the attention of the Senate to their memorial and protest in order that they might at least have a hearing upon the subject.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (to Mr. CALL). Have it read.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the memorial may be read. I think, though, the amendment had better go over to save time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Florida. Is there objection to the request that the amendment go over?

Mr. CALL. I should like to have the memorial read now.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should not object to the amendment going over. I would rather have it go over than to submit to hearing that document read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida insist on the reading of the memorial?

Mr. CALL. I do not. I call attention to it, and ask that the matter go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will go over. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 72, after line 18, to insert:

That the claim of the Fond du Lac band of Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior for compensation arising from the difference in area of the reservation as actually set apart to them and that provided to be set apart, under the fourth subdivision of Article II of the treaty between the United States and the Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, made and concluded at Lapointe, in the State of Wisconsin, on the 30th day of September, in the year 1854, proclaimed January 29, 1855, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on said court, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear and determine the same and to award judgment against the United States for the difference between the area of the reservation actually set apart to said Indians and that provided to be set apart in said treaty, if any, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, the said action to be brought by the said Fond du Lac band of Chippewa Indians against the United States by petition, verified under oath by any duly authorized attorney for said Indians, within thirty days from the passage of this act: Provided, however, That in hearing and determining the said claim of the said Indians, the court shall take into consideration and make due allowance for the fact that said Indians were given a share in the proceeds of the lands sold and disposed of under and pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889. The Attorney-General shall appear and answer said petition within thirty days from the filing thereof, unless the time for pleading be extended by the court for cause shown; and said action shall have precedence in said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 2, to strike out:

Whereas the Seneca Indians in council, January 3, 1893, duly entered into an agreement with William B. Barker, whereby said nation leased to said Barker the Oil Springs, the Cattaraugus, and Allegany reservations, situate in western New York, for the purpose of boring and testing said territory for gas and oil, under certain conditions therein stated, said agreement having been ratified and confirmed by act of Congress; and

Whereas the assignee of said lease has released to the Seneca Indians certain portions of the lands and reservations included or referred to in said lease, and the council of the Seneca Nation of Indians, by a resolution adopted by said council, on or about the 3d day of December, 1896, in all things ratified, confirmed, and extended as to the lessee thereof, and as to the assignees thereof, the said lease, and empowered and authorized them to fulfill the said lease, the same and to the same extent as the original lessee might or could have done, when said lease was executed:

Now therefore, The action aforesaid of the lessee of said lease and of the council of the Seneca Nation is hereby ratified and confirmed as the same has been sanctioned and ratified by the said resolution of the said Seneca Nation.

That hereafter not more than $10,000 shall be paid in any one year for salaries or compensation of employees regularly employed at any one agency, for its conduct and management, and the number and kind of employees at each agency shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and none other shall be employed: Provided, That where two or more Indian agencies have been or may hereafter be consolidated, the expenditure of such consolidated agencies for regular employees shall not exceed $15,000: Provided further, That salaries or compensation of agents, Indians, school employees of every description, and persons temporarily employed, in case of emergency, to prevent loss of life and property, in the erection of buildings, the work of irrigation, and making other permanent improvements, shall not be construed as coming within the limitations fixed by the foregoing paragraphs.

Every Indian agent shall render to the Secretary of the Interior semi-annually a detailed statement under oath of all moneys received by him from all sources for the use of the tribe, or for individual members of the tribe, and he shall place on file at the agency a true copy of such statement, which copy shall be open to the inspection of all persons interested: Provided, That all moneys received by the agent and belonging to the tribe shall be remitted by him to the Secretary of the Interior as required by the rules of the Department, and all moneys received for individual Indians shall be promptly paid by the agent to the respective persons entitled thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 20, to strike out:

That all children born of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs, either by blood or descent, as any other member of the tribe, and no prior act of Congress shall be so construed as to debar such child of such right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to inquire about an amendment of the committee on pages 74 and 75, striking out certain provisions which were inserted by the other House. Were those amendments passed upon?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They were agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I intended to make an observation concerning one or two of those provisions, and I thought they would probably be read. My attention was diverted. They were undoubtedly agreed to without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks they have been agreed to, but will have the record referred to if the Senator desires.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like the privilege of asking a question of the Senator in charge of the bill concerning one or two provisions, and I will try not to occupy much time in the matter.

On pages 74 and 75, for instance, the other House inserted provisions restricting the expenditure of money at the Indian agencies in the matter of salaries and compensation of employees. It seems to me that that was a very just provision, considering what seems to be the somewhat extravagant notions which prevail in regard to this matter of spending the public funds for the support of these Indian tribes. But, more particularly, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the provision commencing in line 16, on page 75, which provides that—

Every Indian agent shall render to the Secretary of the Interior semi-annually a detailed statement under oath of all moneys received by him from all sources for the use of the tribe, or for individual members of the tribe, and he shall place on file at the agency a true copy of such statement, which copy shall be open to the inspection of all persons interested, etc.

I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if that is not a wise and beneficent provision, and why it should be stricken from the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The committee believe that the power is now in the Secretary to require everything that is required in the provision, and to require very much more, and therefore it does not think it necessary to narrow his power and control over these people. I notice that it provides that the agent shall pay this money to the persons entitled thereto. As it is now, without this provision, it is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. The agent will pay it under his direction. The question is whether, under this provision, he could not pay it out without the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. It seemed to the committee that it narrowed the power of the Secretary over the agent, and was entirely unnecessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had intended, before the pending bill is voted upon, to call attention to a report dated January 26, 1897, made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] from the Committee on Indian Affairs, concerning the Osage Indian funds, which includes a report made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] concerning the condition of things existing so far as that tribe of Indians is concerned.

Mr. President, I will now venture to occupy the time of the Senate for a moment to say that if the Senator from Nebraska, who seems to have made a personal investigation of this matter, has stated to the Senate and the country the true condition of things existing so far as the Osage Indians are concerned, there is a scandal existing in the matter of our dealings with the Indians of this country which ought to be taken up by the Congress of the United States and in some way corrected.

It is a blot upon our civilization and our humanity. After more than a century of care for these Indians, recognizing them as the wards of the nation and protecting them in every possible way, expending the public funds for their education, giving them farmers to teach them the art of agriculture, giving them superintendents and teachers to instruct them in letters, it is a reproach upon the nation and upon our legislation if, in the close of the nineteenth century, a condition of affairs exists, so far as this tribe is concerned, such as the Senator from Nebraska has pictured.

I wish to read an extract from the interesting report made by the Senator from Nebraska:

The acting agent of the Osage Indians is Lieut. Col. H. B. Freeman, a regular army officer of over thirty years' continuous service. The agency is located at Pawhuska, the capital of the Osage Nation, and Colonel Freeman has been the acting agent since January 1, 1894. Much friction has grown up and exists between him and certain border traders in Kansas and Oklahoma Territory, principally through restrictions placed on the latter which operate against them and in the interest of the licensed traders. The Indians are fleeced by the licensed traders; the charges for articles sold them are exorbitant in the extreme. An Indian once getting in debt to a licensed trader is never able to pay his indebtedness. An examination of the evidence will show that the Indians are at the mercy of the licensed traders and that no steps are or have been taken to protect their interests.

The Osages receive quarterly $54 per capita and are paid through an open window in the agent's office by means of checks on the subtreasury at St. Louis. Directly across the street from the office, and in plain view of the agent and his clerks, is a small wooden building on wheels, known as the prorate building. It is not to exceed 5 rods from the agent's office, and in this building the licensed traders gather on pay day, having what they call a prorate book, upon which their several accounts against the Indians are entered. The building and the space between it and the agent's office are occupied by the licensed traders and their clerks, and when an Indian receives a check he is taken to the prorate building to make payment to the traders. He knows nothing whatever of the state of his account except as he may be informed by the trader or his clerk, and this information may or may not be correct; but it is quite natural to infer that if the traders would impose on the Indians in prices they might swell their accounts without the Indians being conscious of it. At least, protection should be extended to the Indian debtors in this respect.

The evidence makes it clear that 90 per cent of the Indians are continuously in debt. Some of them exact from the traders, it is true, when surrendering their checks, a small sum of money, but the testimony shows that they are rarely able to pay over 15 per cent of their indebtedness at one payment. The acting agent claims that he has no authority to control the traders in the manner of securing their pay from the Indians; that the Indian is a free moral agent when he receives his money, and that he must look after his own accounts and take care of himself.

One witness testified that two lines of traders and their clerks were formed from the agent's window to the prorate building, between which the Indians were marched to the latter, whether willing or not, and in one instance, or possibly more, it was shown that personal violence had been used to obtain the Indian's check. It would be useless to expand on this matter. It is quite evident that the Interior Department, if it has the power, should suppress this evil and injustice, and if it has not, Congress should immediately enact a law affording debtor Indians protection at their quarterly payments.

The agent seems to think that it is his duty to protect the licensed traders from competition with border traders, and encourage the Indians to trade with the former rather than where they can obtain the best bargains. It is apparent that the Indians can usually buy of the border traders the same goods fully one-half less than they can of the licensed traders; but the former have been restrained from coming on the reservation to collect their debts, and this has had a natural tendency to drive the Indians to the licensed traders. This restriction should be removed, and I know of no better way of doing so than by opening the entire Osage Nation to competitive trade, permitting all persons who are law-abiding and who will comply with the requirements of the just regulations of the Interior Department to trade with the Indians or settlers. An excessive license should not be charged for the privilege, and in any event traders who sell to the Indians at reasonable prices on the borders should have equal access to the reservation in the collection of their debts at all times with the licensed traders.

The Osage full-blood Indians are, as a rule, improvident; they have no adequate conception of value. Many of the mixed bloods are civilized and educated, having adopted civilized habits, and they can not be distinguished in appearance from white men. The mixed bloods, I believe, should be dropped from the tribal rolls, and restrictions should be placed on the tribal authorities in adopting persons into the nation. Many of the mixed bloods are troublesome to the full bloods, taking advantage of them in various ways and in some instances joining disreputable whites in defrauding them.

It appears that about the 12th day of August, 1895, the acting agent, Lieut. Col. H. B. Freeman, suppressed the Wah shah she News by closing up the office, taking possession of the type, press, cases, material, etc., and has remained in charge thereof to this time, and has prohibited the publication of the paper, in consequence of certain articles that had appeared therein criticising his official conduct. The seizure was arbitrary, through the police of the agency, and not by virtue of judicial proceedings, and the conduct of the agent was unlawful and should be condemned. The attention of the Interior Department was called to the matter shortly after it took place, but no action was taken there respecting it. The agent was a trespasser in this seizure of the property of the Wah shah she News and is liable in an action of trespass for the damage sustained by the owners of the property. He had no more right to seize and hold the press and material, and suppress the paper, than he would have to confiscate the property of an Indian, or imprison him, for a criticism that might be offered on his official conduct in a private conversation or in a public speech. This stifling of free speech and the freedom of the press among any class of Americans should not, in my judgment, be tolerated or approved.

Then the Senator from Nebraska, whose report is included in the report made by the Senator from South Dakota, gives a great deal more very interesting testimony on this point, showing the oppressions and the extortions to which these Osage Indians are subjected by the agents of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, if it will not interrupt him, whether Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman admitted the correctness of that statement, whether he was examined, or whether he made any statement in connection with it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not had time to examine the testimony very closely.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Nebraska, who made the report, is present, and I should like to have him make a statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. ALLEN. The report from which the Senator from New Hampshire has been reading is a report made by me as a subcommitteeman to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

It is due to Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman to say that he denied much of the evidence that was introduced against him, but I think the facts are about as I find them in this report. I found this difficulty with Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman, as I have found it with every other regular army officer who has been detailed to conduct an Indian agency. Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman has been in the Regular Army about thirty-five years. He has no conception whatever of stopping to reason with anybody. He has been used to obeying without question the command of his superior officers, and of being obeyed without being questioned by his inferior officers and soldiers, and he seems to think he can carry that kind of conduct into the affairs of civil life. Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman has conceived it to be his duty to protect the licensed traders and to restrain the border traders from going upon the reservation for the collection of their debts. The result has been, of course, to drive the Indians to the licensed traders and to induce the border traders to refuse credit to the Indians, because they can not collect their claims.

Now, let me give an illustration of the exorbitance of the charges of licensed traders upon that reservation. It does not appear in the evidence, but it is a matter that came under my personal observation. I walked down to the bridge right west of the capital, Pawhuska, where the Indians were camped. I went up to an Indian's wagon in which were two small bales of prairie hay. I picked up one of them. It would probably weigh 65 or 70 pounds. He had an ordinary grain sack full of ear corn. Prairie hay in that country is worth nothing except the labor of cutting and baling it, which is a mere bagatelle. The same kind of hay in my country is worth not to exceed 12½ cents a bale. Corn in that country at that time was not worth 15 cents a bushel. The licensed trader charged that Indian for those two bales of hay and the bag of ear corn, which would not shell out to exceed a bushel and a peck or a bushel and a half at the outside, $1.50. All told, they were not worth over 40 cents.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. So the Indian told the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. The man who came with him told me, and I found that that was true.

For instance, the licensed trader in meat there will kill a class of cattle and a class of hogs that no white man could eat. He would not eat the meat. He sells quarters of beef of that kind to Indians for from $14 to $16 a quarter, when you can buy the whole beef for less money than he sells a quarter for. The result is that the Indian is constantly in debt, and he never gets out of debt.

In 1893, in February, I think it was, an extra payment of $300,000 was made to these Indians.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. ALLEN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield with pleasure to the Senator, because he knows more upon this subject than I do, and I take pleasure in listening to him.

Mr. ALLEN. I took the evidence that appears there. In 1893 a report was made to the Interior Department that the Indians were indebted to the extent probably of $250,000 in round numbers, and that if they could only be got out of debt by an extra payment they could keep out of debt and would meet with prosperity after that.

The licensed traders, by what means I do not know, understood three or four weeks before the extra payment was to be made that it was to be made. And between that time and the time of payment, four weeks from that date, they swelled the accounts against the Indians $150,000. They sent to Kansas City and bought old, worn-out horses and brought them down there by the carload. They brought down wagons and buggies and things that no Indian upon the face of the earth wanted or needed. Horses which, placed on the reservation, cost the traders $81 or $82 a head, they sold to the Indians for from $150 to $300 a head; and in sixty days after that payment was made the Indians were as deeply in debt as they were the day it was made.

In February, 1895, an extra payment of $200,000 was made. The accounts were again swollen, and to-day the Indians are hopelessly in debt, and they are constantly kept in that shape. Ninety per cent of them are perpetually in debt, and they are charged extraordinary prices. They know nothing about values. They have no means of keeping their accounts. There is no supervision exercised by the Government or by the agent over the accounts kept against the Indians. They are turned loose absolutely at the mercy of the traders and the traders' clerks, with their checks in their hands, and they are charged just whatever the trader sees fit to enter upon his book against them.

Right across from the agent's office is the little building to which I refer in the report, called the prorate building. It is a little wooden building, about 10 or 12 feet square, put on wheels, so that it can be rolled around like a baby's rocking-chair. That is occupied by the traders and their clerks with their prorate books. Every trader comes in before the day of payment and enters his account upon the book. Then whatever the Indian pays is prorated among those traders. That is within 5 rods of the agent's window when he pays out the checks, and many of the Indians are taken and hustled across there. There is no police force to protect them. They are absolutely at the mercy of the traders and their clerks, and no supervision or restraint is placed upon the traders or their clerks in the collection of these debts.

Mr. GRAY. May I interrupt the Senator from Nebraska to ask him a question respecting the interesting narration that he is making, new to a great many of us?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. The question is whether it would not be possible for the Government, in providing for the Indians upon the reservations, who occupy, as it is sometimes said, in relation to the Government the position of wards, which I suppose more nearly represents the relation between them and the Government than any other term that could be used, to establish commissary stores, or stores on the order of the commissary stores in the Army, in which the salaried agents of the Government would keep those articles that the Indians require and sell them at a given rate above the cost of transportation and production, so that the Indians might avail themselves of the real protection of the Government in the matter of spending the money that the Government owes them or distributes among them? Would it be possible, in the judgment of the Senator from Nebraska, with his greater experience among the Indians and with Indian affairs, to have some such system? Could it be inaugurated by the Government in dealing with these rather defenseless people?

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose that is possible, of course.

Mr. GRAY. Why has it never been tried?

Mr. ALLEN. I think it has been found inexpedient in other localities.

Mr. GRAY. Has it ever been tried?

Mr. ALLEN. I think so. The Senator from Arkansas would know.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My impression is that the agent has a right to regulate the prices at which the traders sell their goods.

Mr. ALLEN. But only as to a few staple articles.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have been waiting for the Senator from Nebraska to get through, in order to enter my protest against the result of his statement here, as it affects the reputation of an army officer who has grown gray in the service of the Government. There are some things in connection with it which I will not comment on now, but I will do so when the Senator from Nebraska finishes his remarks.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want the Senator from Arkansas to take me at any disadvantage. I shall desire to reply to the Senator from Arkansas if any strictures are to be placed upon me for my report, for I have the evidence here to support that report. I have not said one word against that army officer which I will not say to his face at any time and under any circumstances. I have not reflected upon him. I have said in the report that nothing appeared in the evidence to indicate that he was dishonest or in any manner complicated with conditions that would reflect upon his honor, but that in my judgment it would be wise, at least not unwise, to remove him to some other scene of action.

Mr. GRAY. That is rather aside from the inquiry I was making of the Senator from Nebraska with a sincere desire for information. I wish to know whether it is not in the power of the Government and practicable, as demonstrated by the experience of those who come in contact with the Indians, to provide some such system as I have indicated, which would protect the Indians from the extortions of the licensed traders and enable them to purchase with the money they may have articles at a rate sufficient to pay the cost of production and distribution and the salary of the man who has the business in charge?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not doubt that that can be done, but it can be done so much cheaper by opening the territory to competitive trade, letting all persons who observe the law go upon the territory and trade with the Indians. Otherwise, if you establish a system of commissary stores, you will have an army of Government clerks to increase the official roll of the United States unnecessarily, in my judgment. I know of no better way than to permit every person who wants to trade with the Indians to go on the territory and trade with them. I think that would solve the whole question.

There are men along the borders who are struggling to establish little towns and to establish a business; and living there under the best conditions is very difficult. They are selling their goods as cheaply as they possibly can. I do not know why they should not be permitted to sell to the Indians just as they are permitted to sell to a white man and to collect their debts.

Mr. CALL. Those are liquor dealers.

Mr. ALLEN. No; they are not liquor dealers. The Senator from Florida is mistaken about that point. There are liquor dealers who run upon the territory and sell liquor, but they are chased down and chased off, or indicted and punished, as rapidly as the officers can catch them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me for a few minutes?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have nothing to say in criticism of what the Senator from Nebraska has said except his criticism of Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman, and of course the Senator will have full opportunity hereafter to reply to all I may have to say. What I propose to say in this matter I will say in open Senate.

I listened to the reading by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] of the criticism of the conduct of Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman. I have seen Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman but once in my life. I know nothing of him, except that he has the reputation of being an honorable officer in the Army of the United States. He has been in charge of the Osage Agency for a number of years, and I understand that while he has subjected himself to criticism in some respects, his conduct has been indorsed strongly by the Department, and they have unlimited faith in his discretion, integrity, and uprightness.

I understand the traders on the reservations are licensed for the purpose of allowing the Interior Department and the agents in charge of the reservations to regulate their charges and to see to it that they do not rob the Indians by unreasonable and outrageous charges. Whether this power is as large as it should be, whether it is exercised with discretion by the Interior Department, or whether or not the agents do their full duty, I do not know.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas, for the sake of information, whether it is not true that in their licenses the percentage of profit which the traders may charge is regulated?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think so, in every instance. Such is my understanding.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me at this point to state that the duty of the agent to fix the prices at which the licensed traders shall sell applies only to a very few staple articles? But as a matter of fact, he does not fix those prices. The prices have never been fixed, so far as I can ascertain, upon that reservation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My understanding is that the agent and the Department have the power, and it is their duty, to regulate the percentage, and that is fixed, I understand, when the traders are appointed. I believe that is true. If there has been a failure to discharge duty in this respect, it is good ground for criticism; but that is not the purpose for which I rose.

I rose to say that Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman's good name is to him perhaps his greatest possession. He ought not to be attacked; he ought not to be assailed without first having the opportunity to be heard. The Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. ALLEN. Let me ask the Senator from Arkansas to point out where Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman has been assailed. I gave him an opportunity——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the charge read by the Senator from New Hampshire that Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman practically confiscated a printing office because the paper had seen fit to attack him is not an assault, I should like to know what it takes to constitute one.

Mr. ALLEN. It is the result of testimony taken by me upon that reservation, which he does not deny. Suppose that a master in chancery finds certain facts from the evidence. They may be unpleasant facts. Is that an assault upon the person against whom they are found? I was sent there to make an investigation. I did it, and I did it in good faith. I found the facts exactly as the evidence shows them to exist. Can I not make that report to the Senate or to the committee of which I am a member without having some gentleman arraign me for making an assault upon Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman? I never saw him before in my life, and probably never will see him again. I took the evidence. I do not want to interrupt the Senator in his speech.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Go ahead.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to have him point out where I made any assault.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let me finish my statement, and then probably the Senator from Nebraska can reply to it better. If I can have an opportunity, I should like to conclude now the statement I began, and I will only occupy a few moments.

I characterize the reading of this paper in the Senate, under the circumstances, as an assault on Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman; and it seems to me it is such. It certainly would involve the man's good name. But let me call attention to the way in which the paper came here; and that is the gravamen of my complaint. It is the way the paper came before the Senate. It ought not to be here. The report ought not to have been made without Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman having full opportunity to know every charge made against him and an opportunity to reply.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me for just one moment? I know the Senator, of course, will exonerate me from any purpose to make a charge against Colonel Freeman. That was an incident of the point I was attempting to make as to the wrongs the Indians are suffering, in my judgment, at the hands of the licensed traders. It is only a point which I made to emphasize the argument I was making.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire. He had a perfect right to read the report.

Mr. President, I am not proposing to criticise the conduct of either the Senator from Nebraska or the Senator from New Hampshire. It was perfectly legitimate that the Senator from New Hampshire should read a document that he found printed by the Senate in support of any position that he may assume. The Senator from Nebraska visited this Osage Agency and made an examination of a number of things existing there, and he submitted a preliminary report, not intended, as I understood from him, to be a final report, to the Committee on Indian Affairs about what he found in his visit there. The report of the Senator from Nebraska, who was a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, was not considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I respectfully submit, in view of the fact that it contains reflections upon the character of an officer who is distinguished in the service of the United States, it ought not to have been here and printed as a document until it had been first examined by a committee and reported by a committee to this body.

Mr. ALLEN. It was examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be reported.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from Nebraska submitted his report, and the Committee on Indian Affairs read his entire report and much of the testimony; and the committee, by resolution, instructed me, as its chairman, to submit his report with the testimony to the Senate and ask to have it printed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I stand corrected by the statement of the Senator from South Dakota; but I asked the Senator from South Dakota in his seat, after this paper was printed, if it had been ordered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and my recollection is that he told me it had not been.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator misunderstood me if he had any such impression.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I certainly understood that statement from the Senator from South Dakota, and I made the assertion here to-day on the faith of that statement, that the report had been printed without being indorsed by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Now, if the Committee on Indian Affairs did adopt this recommendation and this finding, practically criticising Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman without his having had full opportunity to meet and answer every single charge in that report, the Committee on Indian Affairs did not treat that officer fairly.

Mr. ALLEN. He did have an opportunity, and his evidence is here.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Did he understand that all these charges were made against him?

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator say Colonel Freeman did not have an opportunity? He was upon the stand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Was he informed of the different charges that were brought into this report?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly. Here is the information right here. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Arkansas that when I went to Pawhuska the first thing I did was to send a note to Colonel Freeman, telling him that I was at the hotel for the purpose of hearing these charges and asking him to be present. Now, he was not present for a day or two. It is not necessary for me to say that I had to send off on a hunting excursion to find him, but he finally came around. I asked him to be present at the hearings. He declined to be there, except when he testified himself. When I went to Cleveland, Okla., I asked him to be present there, and told him I thought it would be to his interest to be there, and he declined. I came back to Pawhuska to accommodate him, a distance of 40 miles overland, for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to testify, and he did testify. Then I went further. After I got back to Washington, and before this report was finally made, he wrote me some letters, saying that he understood there was such and such testimony before me that he did not understand at the time, and I incorporated those letters in my report. I received his affidavits in contradiction of certain things and incorporated those in the report. Every conceivable opportunity was given this man to appear before the subcommittee and testify, and he did testify. I think I know something about taking depositions. I afforded him full opportunity.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no doubt that Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman had an opportunity to appear and testify, but what I should like the Senator from Nebraska to state is whether he was notified of the charges made against his good name in the report; whether he was advised that these charges were made and had been received by the subcommittee before he testified, and if he had an opportunity to reply to the charges?

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator ask whether Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman was advised of the report that I would make?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not at all. Was he advised of the charges made against his character as an officer and as a man? Did he know that individuals had made those charges, and what they were?

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Arkansas is through with his remarks, I want to call the attention of the Senate a moment to this report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that it may be proper that I should conclude my remarks, having the floor. However, if the Senator is not going to occupy much time, I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. ALLEN. I respectfully suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that my report is brought in question here by the Senator from Arkansas, who has never read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Nebraska ought to have the privilege of replying, and I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. I want the privilege of vindicating it. I want to make serious objection to the statement of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. While the Senator is making his statement I should be glad if he would state whether Colonel Freeman was confronted with the witnesses against him and who were making the charges that it was claimed would seriously affect his reputation as a man and his reputation as an officer. Was he notified of what they were saying, and did he have an opportunity to see and to confront the charges made by those men?

Mr. ALLEN. I will explain everything to the ample satisfaction of the Senator from Arkansas, if he can be satisfied. Let me state to the Senator from Arkansas, without any undue egotism upon my part, that I know what taking depositions and making reports means. I know what is due to a witness, what is due to a party, and I know it quite as well as the Senator from Arkansas; and I have had as many years' experience in doing this kind of work as he has.

When I went to the reservation, as I said, the first thing I did was to send to Colonel Freeman a polite note telling him that I was there for the purpose of making this investigation, stating when I would begin the investigation, and notifying him to be present. I did not subpœna him. He was an officer, and I thought that courtesy due to his position would not permit me to send out a subpœna in the first instance. Therefore I notified him. Colonel Freeman came into Pawhuska. He was not in the city that evening. He came in the next day or the next evening. He was present in the room where the evidence was taken. He was invited to be present during the entire time, but he declined to be there, although his office was within a block and a half of the hotel where the testimony was taken.

I took this evidence, sending subpœnas for the witnesses and bringing them in and examining them just as they would be examined in a chancery case or in the taking of ordinary depositions. Every moment of the time I was engaged in this work in Pawhuska Colonel Freeman was informed of the fact, was repeatedly urged by me to be present and look after his interests, and he was there a portion of the time; but a very small portion. When I got through taking the depositions or testimony at Pawhuska, it was necessary for me to go thirty-odd miles south into Oklahoma Territory proper, across the Arkansas River, and take the evidence of some witnesses at Cleveland. I informed Colonel Freeman of the fact that I would hold a session of the subcommittee at the hotel at Cleveland, a little village of 150 people, and I went to the extent of urging upon him to be present there, either in person or by some representative, to care for his interests, for I did not want anything said against Colonel Freeman by any witness that he would not have a fair and full opportunity to answer. He declined to go; he refused to go. I went upon my mission, and took the evidence. Then I came back, and I want the Senator from Arkansas to hear this statement——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am listening.

Mr. ALLEN. I came back to Pawhuska. I sent word to Colonel Freeman to come to the hotel where I had taken the testimony before, and where I proposed to continue it, and as far as I could recapitulate the substance of the evidence against him without turning to it and reading it—it was voluminous—I did so. I called his attention to the various parts, and he answered them. I called his attention to this very point of suppressing that paper. That was the first point. He did suppress the paper. Here is the evidence of John F. Palmer, one of the proprietors, on page 25:

Q. You may state your name, age, and place of residence.
A. John F. Palmer; age, 34 years; residence, Pawhuska; occupation, farmer.
Q. You formerly edited a newspaper at this place, I believe?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You may give the name of the paper.
A. Wah shah she News.
Q. How long was that paper published?
A. I could not say just how long.
Q. About how long?
A. I think about a year and a half.
Q. Was it printed in the English language?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it a weekly paper?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who was the paper owned by?
A. The paper was owned, I think, at first by T. J. Lahey and S. J. Seedina. Seedina was a member of the tribe here. Lahey was, I think, a commissioner at the time. He was a white man, and not a member of the tribe.
Q. Where are these men now?
A. Mr. Lahey lives in town; Mr. Seedina lives on the reservation.
Q. You say Mr. Seedina is a member of the tribe?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are also a member of the tribe?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you a graduate of any school?
A. No, sir.
Q. Where did you obtain your education?
A. At Osage Mission, in Kansas.
Q. You edited this paper at one time, did you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you ever have an interest in the paper?
A. I was to have an interest in the profits.
Q. You never had an interest in the material, type, press, etc., then?
A. No, sir.
Q. What was the circulation of the paper while you were editing it?
A. About 1,100.
Q. Principally in the nation here?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many English-speaking people, including Indians who speak and read the English language, have you on the reservation?
A. Do you mean counting the white persons and all?
Q. All white persons and Indians who would be able to read a newspaper?
A. I should judge there were about 800.

Now, I call the attention of the Senator to the following:

Q. What became of the paper?
A. Colonel Freeman confiscated it.
Q. What do you mean by confiscating it?
A. He confiscated the press. I was not there at the time, although I was in town. He just took charge of it.
Q. That is, he came to the office where the paper was being published, and the type, press, and cases were kept, and took charge of them?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who did he take with him to take charge of it?
A. He went there by himself first.
Q. Did he drive out those who were there?
A. I was not there in person. I watched him.
Q. You watched him then?
A. Yes, I was not in the office, though.
Q. You may state if he put any police force there.
A. I understand he put police there to look after it.
Q. Did he permit the paper to be published after that?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you ever have any talk with him regarding his action?
A. Yes, sir; before it was done.
Q. Did he say to you that he intended doing so?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What reason did he give for threatening to suppress the paper?
A. He said that if the paper continued to criticise his official acts he would stop its publication, and informed me so, as one of the editors. I told him that so long as I had anything to do with the paper I would try to see that nothing was published in it that was not true, but I did not care to refrain from criticising his official acts when I thought they were wrong, and that if he wanted to stop the publication he could, but I would not stop criticising what I believed to be wrong in his administration.
Q. Did he deny any of the charges you made against him?
A. Yes, sir; he asserted that some of the criticisms were unjust and untrue, and, on the other hand, I believed them to be true.
Q. You may state if you offered him the use of the columns of your paper to explain any of the charges or criticisms that had been made.
A. I did.
Q. Did he avail himself of the opportunity to use the paper?
A. At first he said he would not have anything to do with such a dirty little sheet as that paper.
Q. What was the size of your paper?
A. I think you would call it a six-column quarto.
Q. Well, what has become of the press, type, cases, etc., belonging to the printing office?
A. Since Colonel Freeman took charge of the office I have not seen them. He has them in his charge.
Q. When did he take charge of it?
A. I do not know what month; our papers would show.
Q. Have you ever made a demand on him for the possession of the paper?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or the office?
A. No, sir.
Q. I mean for the material?
A. No, sir.
Q. Has any action ever been taken against him for the possession of the paper?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or for the trespass in the confiscation?
A. No, sir.
Q. What reason did he assign for intending to take charge of the paper and suppress it?
A. He said that the paper was publishing things that were not true and criticising his official acts in such a manner as to cause the people to have less respect for him, etc.

And so the evidence runs on. Now, that is not denied by Colonel Freeman. I turn right here to Colonel Freeman's evidence on page 95 of this report. Colonel Freeman did not hear the evidence of this witness. He had an opportunity, but he refused. The third question I put to him was the following:

It has been stated in the evidence I have taken that you suppressed a newspaper here called the Wah shah she News, something like a year ago, and that you still retain possession of the press, type, cases, and material. You may state if that be true; and, if so, all the facts connected with it.

Now, was not that fair to Colonel Freeman?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think so.

Mr. ALLEN. Then why is the Senator from Arkansas arraigning me here for not giving Colonel Freeman an opportunity to be heard? Colonel Freeman says:

There was a paper running on the reservation by that name; the press was owned by a half-breed named Sylvester Soldani. The newspaper was edited by a man named George E. Tinker, also a half-breed.

And I have Tinker's evidence here, too. Colonel Freeman proceeds:

The conduct and course of the newspaper were not objectionable until the spring of 1894. At that time I became involved in a controversy with Mr. John R. Skinner, who was at that time a licensed trader on the reservation and also the proprietor of a store at a little town called Blackburn, right across the border of the reservation. Rising out of that controversy between Mr. Skinner and myself was a great deal of comment on the part of this paper, reflecting on me in various ways. They were not exactly criticisms of my administration here; they charged nothing against me—no specific facts—except that I was tyrannical and overbearing, and matters of that kind. It grew from bad to worse, and each succeeding copy of the paper more insulting, until it got to the vilest kind of abuse of me. I paid no attention to that, however, but finally they began publishing scandalous articles regarding the school and school services.

I want to say to the Senator from Arkansas that some of those charges in that paper respecting the school and the school service are amply sustained by the evidence, although they were of a character that I did not think fit to embrace in my report. One of the charges was not true, although there was ground for believing it to be true at that time. Colonel Freeman continues as follows:

I then remonstrated with the editor that such reports were injurious to his own people and that it gave to the outside world the impression that the Osage girls and women were usually of a loose character, and I also told him I thought he was making a mistake by abusing the officers of the Government as he had been doing. He then said, "I suppose you do not want me to mention you, except in a complimentary way?" I told him I did not care personally how he regarded me, and I did not care for their praise or blame. So the matter ended at that. They kept on publishing articles about this school, and finally, as the schools were about to open in September, they came out in a series of articles, saying that these schools were not a fit place for the Osages to attend, and advising the people not to put their children in school. I went to the office and told them that the regulation required that these children should attend school; that the school was properly conducted, and that there was no reason why the children should not attend, and I asked the editor to stop writing such articles. He refused to do so, and I told him if he continued I would close up his office. He still refused, and I did close up his office and take possession of the material and press, and have it still.

Now, did not Colonel Freeman have an opportunity to answer, and did he not answer? The Senator from Arkansas has not read one word of this testimony, and I do not believe he has read the report that was made, and still he gets up here and arraigns me for making an assault upon Colonel Freeman.

Mr. President, it would not do for me, and I have not the time, to go into an extended discussion of all this evidence shows. I made as modified a report of the facts as it was possible for me to make. I recast the report two or three times before I submitted it to the Committee on Indian Affairs, so that I might not say anything that I would ever have occasion to regret. I did not find the facts as fully as a court would have found them or as a jury would have found them upon the evidence that was submitted. I said in that report simply two things that bear upon Colonel Freeman's administration. In the first place, Colonel Freeman goes on himself to testify, just as other witnesses testify, that no supervision whatever is placed over the accounts of licensed traders against the Indians. He says he did regard it as his duty to encourage the Indians to trade with the licensed traders, and I think he is honest about it. I do not question his honesty at all. I have no faith, however, in his judgment. We do not necessarily question a man's integrity of purpose because we question his judgment.

These Indians are submitted to the mercy of the traders when they are given their money. They are paid in checks on the subtreasury at St. Louis. They come up to a window where are the agent and his clerk, and sign the roll, take their check, and a swarm of traders and traders' clerks hang around that window to get the check and get them over to the prorate room and get the money divided; and sometimes when the Indian manifests a little disposition to be stubborn, they actually lay hands upon him and take him over to the prorate room, and sometimes they snatch his check out of his hands.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Did Colonel Freeman have knowledge of these transactions?

Mr. ALLEN. My dear sir, he had a chance to testify and did testify respecting it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. He was there, and knew that they coerced the Indians?

Mr. ALLEN. Of course. He was invited to be present and was present. He was urged to be present by me, and his attention was specifically called to this question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. He knew of the practices of these traders?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And he did not stop it, having the power to do so?

Mr. ALLEN. He was the man who made the payments; this condition of affairs existed within 5 feet of where he stood.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator in that connection, as this matter is up, allow me to call his attention to one thing: He does not think that I have read his report, and he thinks I have not read the evidence. The truth is, I have not had time to go through all the evidence in this case, but such is my confidence in the Senator's impartiality and fairness in stating what the evidence shows that I have relied on the report in that respect. Since he has read Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman's statement about the suppression of that paper and has read what that officer stated was the reason for the suppression of the paper, I should like to call his attention to his own rsport in that connection, and ask him if he thinks it was just fair to Colonel Freeman? The Senator from Nebraska says on page 8 of his report:

> It appears that about the 12th day of August, 1895, the acting agent, Lieut. Col. H. B. Freeman, suppressed the Wah shah she News by closing up the office, taking possession of the type, press, cases, material, etc., and has remained in charge thereof to this time, and has prohibited the publication of the paper in consequence of certain articles that had appeared therein criticising his official conduct. The seizure was arbitrary, through the police of the agency, and not by virtue of judicial proceedings, and the conduct of the agent was unlawful and should be condemned. The attention of the Interior Department was called to the matter shortly after it took place, but no action was taken there respecting it. The agent was a trespasser in this seizure of the property of the Wah sha she News and is liable in an action of trespass for the damage sustained by the owners of the property. He had no more right to seize and hold the press and material and suppress the paper than he would have to confiscate the property of an Indian, or imprison him, for a criticism that might be offered on his official conduct in a private conversation or in a public speech.

This is the statement made by the Senator, and yet Colonel Freeman made the statement for himself that the reason of his taking possession of that paper was because it was being used for the purpose of undertaking to prevent the Indians from attending the Government schools. We all know the means that have to be resorted to to compel Indian attendance on public schools. We know that at many agencies they are absolutely arrested by soldiers; that they are taken by force to the agencies, and are put in the schools by force. If it is not an agent's duty to prevent the absolute destruction of the schools, I do not see what they are there for. I certainly think it was fair to Colonel Freeman that in making his report the Senator, who has had such large experience in taking depositions and knows so perfectly well how all these things ought to be done, should have stated the fact that Colonel Freeman claimed to have done this thing in the discharge of his duty in the protection of the schools, in connection with his own conclusions that Colonel Freeman's conduct was arbitrary, and that he was guilty of a trespass.

Mr. ALLEN. That may be the Senator's view of the law. I prefer not to take my law from either the Senator from Arkansas or Colonel Freeman, as much as I respect their judgment upon any question that might be submitted to them. There is not a word in that portion of the report which has been quoted by the Senator from Arkansas that reflects upon anybody. If the Senator from Arkansas will be kind enough to point out to me wherein it reflects upon Colonel Freeman, I shall hold myself a lifelong debtor to him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator think that charging an army officer with being guilty of a trespass is not a charge?

Mr. ALLEN. If the facts warrant the conclusion that he was guilty of conversion, and I say he was guilty of conversion, is that a charge?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator said he was guilty of a trespass.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, guilty of a trespass. There is a bare shadow between them. A conversion is a trespass. Is that a charge? I bring an action against the Senator from Arkansas, charging him with trespassing upon my real estate. Does that reflect upon the Senator from Arkansas? The Senator knows better. He knows that it does not reflect upon him at all.

Now, what did this man do? He was guilty of a trespass in suppressing that paper. He was guilty of a violation of the fundamental law of this country, the freedom of the press, with responsibility for its conduct, for the right to the freedom of the press exists in the Indian Territory as much as it exists in the District of Columbia. When Colonel Freemen took forcible possession of this paper and converted its material to his own use, as he did, and suppressed the issuance of the paper, he did it without any authority of law.

It was not a judicial proceeding; and he was, and he is, in the eyes of the law, a trespasser. I said so, and I have nothing to modify or to take back. You can take the case made by this testimony before any respectable court or jury of this country, and you can mulct Colonel Freeman in damages for the suppression of this paper; and yet, for fear that Colonel Freeman, who has grown gray in the service, as the Senator said, may feel a little injured by what is said in this report, I am to be arraigned here and cajoled into modifying it and saying something to explain away the stain. I do not propose to do it. I did not put the case in as strong language as I ought to have put it. Colonel Freeman admits that he took the property and suppressed the paper, and has presses and type and all the material yet, and he has never suffered that paper to be republished since August, 1894, I think it was; and yet, when it comes to an investigation of his conduct, with all those facts admitted, he wants the subcommittee to modify the language of the report and say that he is not to blame. He is to blame; he is a trespasser, and if I were John F. Palmer and the owner of that paper, I would give him a chance to walk into court and demonstrate whether he had the power to suppress that paper or not. If the Senator from Arkansas, as his distinguished friend, wants to submit the issue to a court in Oklahoma upon that question upon the evidence taken here, he can have an opportunity.

What else did I say about Colonel Freeman? I said that this manner of payment of this tribe of Indians referred to in the report actually takes place at every payment. The Senator from Arkansas does not deny it.

What, in God's name, was I sent there for? To exonerate, to say that a man was not guilty of any of these things without giving the evidence, or to patiently take the testimony and report it with my findings of fact based upon it? If any man supposes that I would go upon an investigating tour with a determination to vindicate a man in advance, or to condemn him in advance, he is mistaken. I am not the man to put upon a committee of that kind.

Colonel Freeman has got himself to blame, not me. He has indulged in this conduct, and still indulges in it, and in my judgment, Mr. President, it is unlawful. He was a trespasser, and is now, and will be until he surrenders this property; and even then he will be liable in damages for the wrong that has already been done. I suppose that Colonel Freeman has been in correspondence with my learned friend from Arkansas, and has probably seen this report, and it does not altogether suit him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me, I believe I have received one letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman, which was something in the nature of a protest against the publication of the report of the Senator from Nebraska, saying, in effect, that he had had no opportunity to meet the charges made here. That is the substance of the letter, as I recollect.

Mr. ALLEN. Why, then, did not the Senator sit down and look this report over and see whether that was true or not?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If I had, I would have been confirmed in it, for in the report you made here you distinctly do not state that Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman took possession of that paper and stopped the publication of it because it undertook to break up the school, but because of personal attacks on him.

That statement was made, and Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman denied it, and yet you made that report.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not make any report of the kind.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The words I read seem to me to mean that.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not say that Colonel Freeman suppressed the paper because it made personal attacks upon him. Now find that in my language if you can. It is very easy to flippantly say that I said so and so, when I did not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I read the language of the Senator's report in the presence of the Senate, and supposed the Senate understood what was said. I stated what I regarded as the substance of it, and I understood that to be about the substance of what was said. There is no necessity for reading the language again, but I can do it if the Senator wants it done.

Mr. ALLEN. There is not one word in my report, properly construed, to bear out the statement of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. You certainly did not intimate that Colonel Freeman did this in defense of the school. There is no such language in the report.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from Arkansas say that there were any circumstances under which that man had a right to suppress that paper without employing legal proceedings?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That man had a right to have his statement of what he claims to be the ground of his action.

Mr. ALLEN. He did have. His evidence was taken in full, and it is stated in the testimony.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But it is not referred to in your report.

Mr. ALLEN. It is referred to in general terms as much as the evidence of any other witness, yet the Senator from Arkansas, a distinguished lawyer of large experience, no doubt, stands in the Senate here to say that an Indian agent has a right to suppress a newspaper without employing judicial proceedings to do it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Where did you find that out?

Mr. ALLEN. I found it out because the Senator from Arkansas said so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not do it.

Mr. ALLEN. Now the Senator denies it, and says he did not do it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have made no such statement, and the Senator can not show in the RECORD a solitary line of that sort. What I contended for was that Lieutenant-Colonel Freeman had the right to be confronted with the charges against him. I have insisted that that should be done; and I called attention to the fact that when the Senator from Nebraska made his report of the facts as to the suppression of this newspaper he studiously avoided stating the reasons which Colonel Freeman gave for such suppression. That is all.

Mr. ALLEN. There was no reason at all. Now, let me put a question directly to the Senator from Arkansas. Did Colonel Freeman have the power to suppress that paper without resorting to judicial proceedings for that purpose?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know anything about that, and I have not expressed an opinion in regard to it, one way or another.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not know anything about it; and I am not surprised at that statement.

Mr. President, Colonel Freeman had no power to suppress this paper, and he was as powerless to do so as one of these little pages, so far as legal right is concerned. He had the machine, the brute force to do it, and he did it, and that is the only excuse he can give for doing it.

It would not do for me to go into the articles which appeared in that paper, some of which are published with this evidence. There was a charge of immorality in that school between certain teachers and employees of that school that was true, and the evidence here taken shows the charge to be true. Arrests followed, escapes from the officers followed, of employees of that school that were spoken of by this paper. Charges were made by the paper, and they were true. Colonel Freeman himself admitted the truthfulness of those charges upon the stand. But, Mr. President, like the old doctrine of scandalum magnatum, the greater the truth the greater the scandal, the greater the libel.

Colonel Freeman went upon the supposition that the truth should not be told by the paper even about the school or about himself. Therefore he walked in one morning deliberately with a police officer, without warrant, without an attachment, without judicial process of any kind, and without pretense of judicial process locked up the office, took the presses and cases and type, and suppressed the paper, and is in possession of them now. Yet the Senator from Arkansas, in his keen legal acumen and large experience in cases of this kind, sees something wrong in my report because I state these facts.

I have nothing in the world against this man. I never knew there was such a man as Colonel Freeman upon the face of the earth until I went there; I never saw him before. I was treated kindly by him, and treated him kindly in return; parted with him kindly; gave him every opportunity possible to make a thorough explanation of this charge, and he did make it; and his explanation is simply no explanation at all.

He had the brute force, the brute power, to suppress the paper, and he did it, and has it suppressed now; and the proprietors of that paper will never do themselves justice until they require him to walk into the courts of Oklahoma or Kansas or some other place and answer for damages done them by the conversion of their property. Now, if I am guilty of some heinous offense in the imagination of my most distinguished and brilliant friend from Arkansas, I shall have on another occasion to beg his pardon.

One word more, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to be put right. The Senator from New Hampshire is yielding to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stands corrected. How long does the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that it concerns the Presiding Officer how long he yields.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not here to be badgered by the Presiding Officer of this Senate; and I hope it will not occur again.

Mr. President, I said another thing respecting Colonel Freeman, which I will read:

> I have found nothing to indicate that the acting agent, Lieut. Col. H. B. Freeman, is dishonest.

There were charges involving his integrity. Charges were rife that he was connected in money-making schemes there with certain persons. I found nothing to justify that charge. I stated so; but I said in that connection:

> There are many things to indicate that he has been indiscreet, in some respects arbitrary, but I attribute this largely to the fact that, being a soldier of many years' service, accustomed to obeying and being obeyed, he does not possess the tact necessary to deal successfully with civilians. There is no doubt of much bitter feeling existing between many of the Indians and the agent, and the border settlers and the agent, and I am not prepared to say that it would be unwise for this agent to be removed to another field of operation.

That is all I have said about Colonel Freeman, and all I expect to say.

Now, with my thanks to the Chair for the courtesies I have received, I yield the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not a very distinct recollection of the point I was making something over an hour ago when I was discussing this question, but I shall endeavor to gather up the scattered threads and finish my remarks, which were not intended to take very much of the time of the Senate.

My attention was drawn to this report somewhat accidentally on yesterday, I having sent to the document room for some publications bearing on this Indian question, and, in glancing over it, I was horrified to find, according to the testimony of the Senator from Nebraska, indorsed by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body, that a condition of things existed in the Osage Nation that was a disgrace and a shame and a reproach to the American Congress and to the American people. I am very glad that calling attention to it, as I did this morning, has resulted in a discussion of this question by Senators who know more about it than I pretend to know.

The facts seem to be—and I will state them very briefly—that the Indians of the Osage Nation are led by some form of influence to accumulate a fund of money to pay attorneys to induce the Government, as they claim, to allow them to draw from their trust funds, which are now in the Treasury, large sums of money at various times, ostensibly for their support and their comfort. Having done that, it seems that licensed traders of the Government of the United States, men for whom we are in a sense, and in a broad sense, responsible, proceed to Kansas City and other places and buy horses, buggies, wagons, harnesses, and other articles by the carload, and ship them to that agency, and then, through those licensed traders, proceed to rob these poor Indians in a manner that would do credit to the veriest highwaymen who ever infested any portion of our country.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator has yielded so much that I trust he will yield to me to say that when he speaks of these poor Indians, they happen to be the richest body of people on the face of the earth. There is no community, state, nation, or body of people which has per capita the amount of property which these Indians have.

Mr. GALLINGER. I used the word "poor" in a different sense from that used by the Senator from Connecticut. I used it in the sense of a class of people who are not competent, apparently, to care for themselves, who are the wards of the Government of the United States, and who are neglected by that Government, and made the prey of unscrupulous and dishonest Indian traders.

Turning to page 3 of this report, I read these words:

The agent seems to think that it is his duty to protect the licensed traders from competition with border traders, and encourage the Indians to trade with the former rather than where they can obtain the best bargains. It is apparent that the Indians can usually buy of the border traders the same goods fully one-half less than they can of the licensed traders; but the former have been restrained from coming on the reservation to collect their debts.

I take it that the recommendation made by the Senator from Nebraska in his very interesting report was called to the attention of the committee of the House of Representatives, and that, acting upon that suggestion, they inserted in this bill a provision that—

Merchants and others doing business with and having accounts against Indians to whom allotment of lands has been made in any reservation in the State of Kansas shall not be prohibited from going upon the reservation, or to any agency in said State, for the purpose of collecting or securing, in an orderly manner, such debts.

When that provision of the bill was reached two or three days ago, I called attention to it, and expressed surprise that the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body should strike from that bill that provision. I was not then aware of the existence of this report. Had I been, I should have insisted, as I think I shall insist in the Senate, on a yea-and-nay vote upon that proposed amendment of the committee.

If these men are robbed under the very eyes of the agents of the Government and at the hands of the licensed traders of this country, if the Indians are compelled to pay two and three and four times as much for articles as they are worth, or as they can purchase them for outside of their agency, they ought to be permitted to go beyond the agency limits, and then the merchants with whom they trade ought to be permitted in an orderly way to go upon that agency and collect their debts. The provision in the bill as it came from the House gives them the right to do that.

I do not know much about the suppression of the newspaper referred to. I read that simply as an incident in connection with the point that I intended to make against these licensed traders in the Osage Nation; but the evidence does seem to show that a newspaper published by these Indians, discussing public questions, as it had a right to do, and criticising, as I presume it did, the man who happens to occupy the position of agent there, and who has occupied that position for a long time, was arbitrarily and illegally suppressed by that agent, precisely as newspapers are suppressed in Russia or in the other countries of this world where freedom of speech and freedom of thought are not permitted. It was unjustifiable. Unless there is some explanation that can be given different from what appears in the testimony submitted by the Committee on Indian Affairs, then the suppression of that paper was an outrage against the rights of those people which ought to be investigated and remedied at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate but a moment longer. I believe that a condition of things exists in this Indian agency—I do not know whether or not it exists in other Indian agencies in the country—that is a disgrace to the American name and the American people, and which calls upon us in some way at some time to remedy it. Matters have been called to my attention within the last twenty-four hours concerning certain things at that agency which I shall not venture even to suggest in this debate, but I will venture to suggest that it is the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body, when they are remedying so many wrongs in the legislation that they are placing upon the statute books, to take at least a glance in that direction and see whether something can not be done to save those people from the wrongs which are being perpetrated upon them by the accredited agents of the United States Government. It is a bad state of things, Mr. President, disgraceful in the extreme, and ought not to be permitted to exist within the domain of our Republic.

I turn to the first page of this report, and I find that this arraignment is not all by the Senator from Nebraska. I find that this great Committee on Indian Affairs, of which my friend the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] is the chairman, has called our attention to this matter. I read what the committee says—not what the Senator from Nebraska says. The committee says:

A serious condition of affairs exists at this agency. It appears from the evidence that the attention of the Interior Department has been called to this matter, and the frauds are so glaring, and yet so easy to remedy, that it is a matter of great surprise to your committee that it has not received the attention of the Department.

If this discussion, which I did not suppose would occupy five minutes when it started, shall have the effect of calling the attention of the Interior Department to the condition of things existing in the Osage Nation, and if it shall have the effect of remedying in the near future this great wrong, which apparently does exist, then the purpose I had in view will be fully and completely subserved.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not care to reply to the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to this matter, but will simply say that there is not an abuse disclosed by the evidence in connection with the Osage Nation which can not be corrected under existing laws by the Secretary of the Interior, if he wishes to correct it. Therefore no legislation is necessary in that direction. It seems to me that if we should undertake in the Indian appropriation bill to correct all the defects of the Administration about to go out of power, we should cover a very large field. It is hardly to be expected that subordinates of this Administration will do their duty when the Executive himself refuses to enforce the laws enacted by Congress, and is engaged in directing the sale of bonds in a manner which, if practiced by the governor of a State or the mayor of a city, would lead certainly to indictment and conviction. Therefore I shall refrain from going into this question further except to say that the report made by the Senator from Nebraska was carefully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, after examining the evidence, I am satisfied Mr. Freeman was treated with great kindness by the committee. He knew of the existence of those transactions; he was the agent at that agency; he was able to suppress those traders, to see that they did not charge exorbitant prices, to see that no fraud was practiced upon the Indians by those engaged in doing business with them. He refrained from doing it, and he is deserving of criticism. If he could not stop the abuses, it was his duty to call the Department's attention to it or refuse to act longer, for he was not forced to act. The War Department would have relieved him from the position if he had desired to be relieved. But so long as he chose to remain there and allowed transactions to be carried on as disclosed by the evidence, he deserves even more severe criticism than that imposed upon him by the committee.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 78, line 11, section 3, after the word "made," to strike out "or for the assistance of such Indians to become farmers, and in aiding such Indians as have taken allotments to build houses and other buildings for residence or improvement of such allotments;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, may use any surplus that may remain in any of the said appropriations herein made for the purchase of subsistence for the several Indian tribes, to an amount not exceeding $25,000 in the aggregate, to supply any subsistence deficiency that may occur: Provided further, That any diversions which shall be made under authority of this section shall be reported in detail, and the reason therefor, to Congress, at the session of Congress next succeeding such diversion: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, may use any sums appropriated in this act for subsistence, and not absolutely necessary for that purpose, for the purchase of stock cattle for the benefit of the tribe for which such appropriation is made, and shall report to Congress, at its next session thereafter, an account of his action under this provision: Provided, That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a discreet person as a commissioner, who shall visit the Chippewa and Christian Indian Reservation in Franklin County, Kans., and make a thorough investigation and full report of the title of the individual members of said bands in and to the several tracts of land therein which have been allotted to said members, for which certificates have been issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as provided in the first article of the treaty of July 16, 1859, with the Swan Creek and Black River Chippewas, and the Munsee or Christian Indians of Kansas.

That said commissioner shall take a census of said Indians, the enrollment to be made upon separate lists; the first to include all of said bands who hold title to land either by original allotment and certificate, by purchase and approved conveyance, or by inheritance, with a description of the land so held or owned by each, and where any tract is claimed by tenants in common, either as heirs of a deceased allottee or otherwise, the interest of each claimant in such tract to be clearly and distinctly stated, the ownership of lands of deceased allottees to be determined under the laws of Kansas relating to descent; and the second list to embrace all of said bands who have not received an allotment of land, but would, if there were sufficient land, be entitled thereto under the treaty.

That upon the approval of said census and the export of said commissioner by the Secretary of the Interior, patents in fee shall issue in favor of those persons found by the Secretary of the Interior to be entitled to the land held by them.

That where there are several heirs, and partition of land is not practicable, upon the joint request of said heirs said land may be appraised and sold as hereinafter directed, and the net proceeds paid to said heirs according to the respective title or share each may have in said land.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent in fee to the Moravian Church, or its constituted authorities, for the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12, of township 17 south, of range 18 east, in Kansas.

That the residue of their lands shall be appraised by a commission consisting of said commissioner, the Indian agent, and a person to be selected by the Indians in open council, who shall report the same to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; that said commission shall place a valuation for purposes hereinafter named on all tracts of land now owned or held by inheritance, and make a separate report thereof.

That upon the approval of said appraisement by the Secretary of the Interior he shall offer said residue of lands, and such other lands, if any, as said heirs may have given their written consent thereto, at the proper land office in Kansas, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem advisable, except that the time for full and complete payment shall not exceed one year, with clause of absolute forfeiture in case of default: And provided, That the same shall be sold to the highest bidder, and at a price not less than the appraised value.

That where an allottee has died leaving no heirs or has abandoned his or her allotment, and has not resided thereon or lived within the said reservation for three consecutive years, the lands and improvements of such allottee shall be appraised and sold in like manner as other lands herein described, as provided in section 7.

That the net proceeds derived from the sale of the lands herein authorized to be sold, after payment of the expenses of appraisal and sale thereof, shall be placed in the Treasury for the benefit of those members of said bands of Indians who have not received any land by allotment, and shall be paid per capita to those entitled to share therein who are of age, and to others as they shall arrive at the age of 21 years, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior, or shall be expended for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interest.

That when a purchaser shall have made full payment for a tract of land, as herein provided, patent shall be issued as in case of public lands under the homestead and preemption laws.

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum shall be reimbursed as follows: All expenses of appraisal and sale out of the proceeds of such sale, and all other expenses out of the funds of said Chippewa and Munsee or Christian Indians, now held for them by the United States, said sum being on the 1st day of January, 1896, $42,560.36.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay over to the said Chippewa and Munsee or Christian Indians the remainder of said funds, after deducting the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act; also, he may, in his discretion, pay to said Indians, the sum of $42,560.36, trust funds now to their credit on the books of the Treasury Department.

That no proceedings shall be taken under this act until the said bands of Indians shall file with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs their consent thereto, expressed in open council.

And insert:

SEC. 9. That hereafter, where funds appropriated in specific terms for a particular object are not sufficient for the object named, any other appropriation, general in its terms, which otherwise would be available may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be used to accomplish the object for which the specific appropriation was made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 10, to insert:

AGREEMENT WITH THE SHOSHONE AND ARAPAHOE TRIBES OF INDIANS IN WYOMING.

SEC. 10. That the following amended agreement with the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians in the State of Wyoming is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed, and shall be binding upon said Indians when they shall in the usual manner agree to the amendment herein made thereto, and as amended is as follows, namely:

Articles of agreement made and entered into at Shoshone Agency, in the State of Wyoming, on the 21st day of April, 1896, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians in the State of Wyoming.

ARTICLE I.

For the consideration hereinafter named the said Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians hereby cede, convey, transfer, relinquish, and surrender forever and absolutely all their right, title, and interest of every kind and character in and to the lands and the water rights appertaining thereunto embraced in the following-described tract of country, embracing the Big Horn Hot Springs in the State of Wyoming:

All that portion of the Shoshone Reservation described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the northeastern corner of the said reservation, where Owl Creek empties into the Big Horn River; thence south 10 miles, following the eastern boundary of the reservation; thence due west 10 miles; thence due north to the middle of the channel of Owl Creek, which forms a portion of the northern boundary of the reservation; thence following the middle of the channel of said Owl Creek to the point of beginning.

ARTICLE II.

In consideration for the lands ceded, sold, relinquished, and conveyed as aforesaid, the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to the said Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians the sum of $60,000, to be expended for the benefit of the said Indians in the manner hereinafter described.

ARTICLE III.

Of the said $60,000 provided for in Article II of this agreement it is hereby agreed that $10,000 shall be available within ninety days after the ratification of this agreement, the same to be distributed per capita, in cash, among the Indians belonging on the reservation. That portion of the aforesaid $10,000 to which the Arapahoes are entitled is, by their unanimous and expressed desire, to be expended, by their agent, in the purchase of stock cattle for distribution among the tribe, and that portion of the before-mentioned $10,000 to which the Shoshones are entitled shall be distributed per capita, in cash, among them: Provided, That in cases where heads of families may so elect, stock cattle to the amount to which they may be entitled may be purchased for them by their agent.

The remaining $50,000 of the aforesaid $60,000 is to be paid in five annual installments of $10,000 each, the money to be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the civilization, industrial education, and subsistence of the Indians; said subsistence to be of bacon, coffee, and sugar, and not to exceed at any time 5 pounds of bacon, 4 pounds of coffee, and 8 pounds of sugar for each 100 rations.

ARTICLE IV.

Nothing in this agreement shall be construed to deprive the Indians of any annuities or benefits to which they are entitled under existing agreements or treaty stipulations.

ARTICLE V.

This agreement shall not be binding upon either party until ratified by the Congress of the United States.

Done at Shoshone Agency, in the State of Wyoming, on the 21st day of April, A. D. 1896.

JAMES McLAUGHLIN, [SEAL.]
United States Indian Inspector.

(Here follow the signatures of Washakie, chief of the Shoshones, Sharp Nose, chief of the Arapahoes, and 271 other male adult Indians over 18 years of age, belonging to the Shoshone Reservation.)

I certify that, at the request of Indian Inspector James McLaughlin, I read the foregoing agreement to the Indians in joint council, and that it was explained to the interpreters, paragraph by paragraph.

JOHN S. LOUD,
Captain Ninth Cavalry, United States Army,
Commanding Fort Washakie, Wyo.

We certify that the foregoing agreement was fully explained in joint council to the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes, that they fully understand the nature of the agreement, and agree to the same.

Missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church to the Indians.

I certify that the Indians, Shoshones and Arapahoes, numbering 279 persons, who have signed the foregoing agreement, constitute a majority of all male Indians over 18 years of age belonging on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo.

RICHARD H. WILSON,
Captain 8th Infty., Acting Ind. Agent.

That for the purpose of making the payment stipulated for in the first paragraph of article 3 of the foregoing agreement, the same to be paid to the Indians belonging on the Shoshone Reservation per capita in cash, or expended for them by their agent in the purchase of stock cattle, as in said article provided, the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That of the lands ceded, sold, relinquished, and conveyed to the United States by the foregoing agreement herein amended, and accepted, ratified, and confirmed, 1 mile square, at and about the principal hot spring thereon contained, is hereby ceded, granted, relinquished, and conveyed unto the State of Wyoming; said mile square to be determined as follows: Commencing at a point one-fourth mile due east from said main spring, running thence one-half mile north, thence 1 mile west, thence 1 mile south, thence 1 mile east, thence one-half mile north to point of beginning, and the remainder of the said lands, ceded, sold, relinquished, and conveyed to the United States, by the agreement herein ratified and confirmed, are hereby declared to be public lands of the United States, subject to entry, however, only under the homestead and town-site laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there are several amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now desire to return to page 24 and to dispose of the amendment which was passed over in relation to a payment to the Pawnee Indians of Indian Territory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, page 24, after the word "dollars," the Committee on Appropriations report an amendment to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Pawnee tribe of Indians in cash, per capita, the sum of $50,000 out of their trust land money on deposit in the United States Treasury.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] to the amendment, which was passed over for the purpose of having read to the Senate the action of the Indian Department and the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject. I send to the clerks' desk the letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 16, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith (in duplicate) a communication, dated the 4th instant, from Agent J. P. Woolsey, of Ponca and Pawnee Agency, Okla., introducing Curley Chief, Ralph J. Weeks, Babtiste Bayhille, and Harry Coons, a Pawnee delegation, in which he states that they are sent here with a petition to the Department, signed by a majority vote of the Pawnee tribe, to secure a payment to them of $100,000 of their trust land moneys on deposit to their credit in the United States Treasury.

The Indians state in their petition that since taking allotments and allowing their surplus lands to be thrown open to settlement and becoming citizens of the United States they find it much harder to make a living than formerly; that citizenship brings with it many responsibilities of which they never dreamed; that they find that in order to in any manner compete successfully with their white neighbors they must have modern agricultural implements and that their farms or allotments must be improved in many respects; that this will take much money—much more than their regular annuity payments, as it takes nearly all of such payments (and in some cases more) to pay their ordinary family expenses; that during the past three years their crops have been very unsatisfactory, and have provided scarcely any revenue.

They state that if their petition is granted they promise that the money will be judiciously expended for the benefit of the tribe and improvement of their homes.

I will state, for the information of the Department and Congress, that these Indians number 702 souls, and that their land fund amounts to $422,418.25, drawing interest at 5 per cent per annum.

Upon a careful consideration of the petition of the Pawnees, I am of the opinion that aid extended to them at this time would be of benefit to the tribe, and I recommend that $50,000 of their land money be paid to them per capita. This can not be done, however, without permission of Congress, and

I submit herewith a draft of a proposed amendment to the Indian bill, soon to be considered in the House of Representatives, requesting that it be forwarded to the Indian Committee of the House.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. CHILTON. Now let the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 18, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication of 16th instant, and accompanying petition of the Pawnee tribe of Indians, Oklahoma, to secure a payment to them of $100,000 of their trust-land moneys on deposit to their credit in the United States Treasury, which amounts to $422,413.25.

The Commissioner states that he has carefully considered the petition of these Indians, and is of the opinion that the aid extended to them at this time would be of benefit to the tribe, and he recommends that $50,000 of their land money be paid to them per capita.

I have talked with the delegation of these Indians, and urged them to retain $400,000 in the Treasury, which would give them $20,000 interest per annum. This they seem unwilling to do, and insist on the per capita payment of $50,000, which is but one-half of the sum asked for.

Having expressed the views and wishes of the Indians, I deem it best for Congress in its wisdom to fix the amount to be paid per capita to them.

Very respectfully,

DAVID R. FRANCIS, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CHILTON. There are two points of view from which this matter ought to be very carefully considered by Congress. The first is the interest of the Indians, and the second is the interest of the taxpayers of the United States. It follows, as a matter of course, that if we permit the trust fund of these Indians to be carved into by degrees, in a few years it will all be gone, and then their support will devolve upon the public Treasury. Many of the other Indians for whom appropriations are made in this very bill are now wholly upon the bounty of the General Government.

Therefore it becomes a very important matter to our taxpayers whether these trust funds shall be conserved or shall be dissipated from year to year. I attach but little importance to the application of the Indians themselves. The motive of cupidity influences them, of course, like it does all the remainder of Adam's race, and from year to year, as their necessities seem to press on them, they come like other improvident persons seeking to fritter away their patrimony. In this case we simply see another exhibition of that universal principle.

An examination of the appropriations to these Indians in the pending bill ought, I think, to satisfy any reasonable man that they are amply provided for. My information is that they constitute about 140 families. What is their present condition? They occupy some of the best lands in Oklahoma. Their allotments are on the Canadian River, in a rather fertile country, and it joins the rich Osage territory, about which we have heard so much this morning. Their lands have been allotted to them in severalty. They have ample farms for all usual purposes. Not only so, but their farms are exempt from taxation, and the Indians are in a situation to be highly prosperous. What do they get? If you turn to the appropriation bill, you will find that there is appropriated to their use $47,100. Add to that sum the annual interest on this trust fund, a part of which they are now seeking to draw down, or about $22,500 annually, and we have an existing provision in their behalf of $69,600 annually.

Take this $69,600 (we will say $70,000 for convenience of calculation) and divide it among 140 families, and you find that there will be distributed to them in the fiscal year $500 a family. How many poor families there are in this country who could subsist on $500.

Independently of the productions of their farms; independently of the exemption from taxation, a provision of $500 a family is made by the Government of the United States already; and it is now proposed to take out of the principal of their trust funds $50,000 more and divide it among these Indians. I insist, sir, that such an appropriation is not a wise and judicious care of these wards of the American nation. They do not need a further aid of $350 a family out of this fund, which ought to be held sacred and intact.

I hope that this appropriation will be voted down. It is proper to say that this matter has been considered in the House of Representatives, and according to my information it was omitted there. I wish to say for one that, while I hesitate to set up my judgment against that of more experienced Senators on this floor, it does seem to me that when the House of Representatives has refused to take the responsibility we should be offered a very conclusive reason before coming to the aid of these Indian applicants, who are continually asking that their trust funds shall be invaded. It seems to me we should vote down the amendment. After giving practically $70,000 a year to this small and inconsiderable tribe, situated in the best part of the Indian country, we should content ourselves and grant no more.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This item was placed in the bill after talking with the representatives of the Pawnee Indians, who are here, and are certainly very intelligent people, and upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which is given in the following language:

Upon a careful consideration of the petition of the Pawnees, I am of the opinion that aid extended to them at this time would be of benefit to the tribe, and I recommend that $50,000 of their land money be paid to them, per capita. This can not be done, however, without permission of Congress.

The committee carefully considered the matter, and thought it was the wisest thing to do to assist these people in securing improvements by which their allotments would be made productive. We believed that if this were done the remainder of the trust funds and the interest upon them would go further toward supporting the Indians in the future than if it were not done. It seems to me the amendment ought to be retained in the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to see the letter of the Secretary of the Interior? I call the attention of Senators on both sides of this Chamber to this matter, because if there is anything which is calculated to interfere with the calm consideration of these questions it is the party spirit which sometimes enters into them. I am addressing myself to this question simply as one of common justice and economy.

The Senator from South Dakota does not attempt to answer the facts I have stated. He does not attempt to answer the main fact that there are only about 140 families of these Indians. He does not attempt to answer the next fact, that they will obtain independently of the proposed appropriation about $500 a family. He does not attempt to deny that they have their lands in severalty, that they are good lands, and that those lands are exempt from taxation.

His only answer is that the committee considered it, and they think this allowance ought to be made. I have the greatest respect for the committee, and ordinarily yield to their judgment in regard to these matters, but this seems to me so plain a case that the Senate should not hesitate to reject the amendment. The Senator from South Dakota referred in general terms to the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends the appropriation. The Secretary of the Interior, however, it seems to me, is very careful not to do so. Here is the close of his letter on the subject:

I have talked with the delegation of these Indians and urged them to retain $400,000 in the Treasury, which would give them $20,000 interest per annum. This they seem unwilling to do, and insist on the per capita payment of $50,000, which is but one-half of the sum asked for.

Having expressed the views and wishes of the Indians, I deem it best for Congress—in its wisdom to fix the amount to be paid per capita to them.

He is careful, it seems to me, to commit to Congress the responsibility for any invasion of this trust fund. So far from its being a recommendation, it seems to me it is a studious attempt on his part not to make a recommendation, but to leave the whole matter to the judgment of the two Houses.

When the $50,000 is turned over to these Indians, it is provided here that it shall be distributed to them per capita. Senators have heard this morning a statement of the way in which the distribution of the funds of the Osages turned out. Senators have heard here that the money was all practically absorbed by speculators, by those who held debts against those untutored Indians and those who made debts against them after the appropriation was passed. I for one think we ought to preserve this trust fund, so that the Indians will be forced, like other prudent persons, to live upon the interest of their permanent investment.

It seems to me we will be doing the proper and fair thing not to vote any further appropriation than this enormous sum which is already provided for by the original text of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask the permission of the Senator having the bill in charge to offer at this time a little amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Minnesota that an amendment is now pending.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that I may be permitted to offer the amendment now, with the consent of the Senator having the bill in charge, because I am obliged to go to the Interior Department on an errand for some of my constituents. It is a small matter, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair hears no objection, the amendment will be considered at this time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendment be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "dollars," in line 21, page 52, the following:

"For supplying electric light for said school, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. NELSON. It is for an Indian school at Pipestone, Minn., a Government school, and the electric light is needed. That is all there is to it. I think there is no opposition to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed also to amend by inserting, after the word "thirty," in line 23, on the same page, the word "one."

Mr. NELSON. That is to make the amendment conform.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee inserting a proviso on page 24.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment. I think it ought not to be passed, and we had just as well have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEFFER. What is the amendment? I ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in lines 6 and 7, on page 24, the committee report to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Pawnee tribe of Indians in cash, per capita, the sum of $50,000 out of their trust land money on deposit in the United States Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], but I have his authority to vote in support of all the committee amendments on the pending bill. Therefore I have voted.

Mr. MORRILL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allen,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Baker,	Davis,	Mantle,	Teller,
Berry,	Elkins,	Morgan,	Thurston,

Cameron,	Gray,	Mitchell of Wis.	Voorhees,
Carter,	Hale,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Clark,	Harris,	Murphy,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Nelson,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The next amendment is on page 70.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 2, insert——

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendment has been read. It relates to the disposition of the controverted attorneys' fees in connection with the Old Settlers' case. The Senator from Florida asked to have it passed over.

Mr. BATE. I understand that an amendment to the amendment moved by me in line 5, to strike out "without" and insert "with," has already been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendment to the amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. BATE. That is what I understand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move at the end of line 18, page 72, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall apply to claims filed against said fund for legal services rendered before the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in defending said fund against claims thereupon, and such claims for services last mentioned shall be tried according to the rules of equity in accordance with the other provisions of this act, and the same shall be first liens on the fund aforesaid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me there ought to be some hesitancy in adopting an amendment creating a first lien on a fund, and that it should not be done without some consideration. I had proposed to let the vote be taken on the amendment and leave the question open for a vote in the Senate; but it seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment, arbitrarily creating a first lien in preference to all other claims, ought not to be adopted hastily.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will modify his amendment to that extent. The purpose is to close up all of these claims and divide the money among all the claimants. There may not be enough to pay in full all that is claimed. The judgment may give some of them more than they can receive, but it is to be distributed so as to settle the whole question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from South Dakota will listen for one moment, I think he will see the absolute fairness of the amendment that I propose. There was and is now a fund, 35 per cent of a certain sum, that was set apart to pay attorneys' fees. The proposition is to divide this 35 per cent among the various claimants. It so happened that after this service was rendered and the 35 per cent was set apart by the Secretary of the Interior there were claims made against that 35 per cent fund by certain parties, and a resistance was made of the claim against the fund. Certain attorneys were employed to resist those claims against the fund. They were employed to defend the fund. They appeared for the fund. The proposition simply is that this same court shall ascertain and find what is fairly due to those lawyers for the defense of the fund, and that their fee—their reasonable fee—ascertained by the court, shall first be paid out of the fund before it is distributed among those who have claims against it. There is not a court in the world, it seems to me, that would not hold that that is perfectly just and right.

Mr. TELLER. If the committee had had their attention called to the fact that there was any necessity for such an amendment, I think they would have allowed it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think so.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think there is any trouble about it. It is the desire of the committee that everybody who has any claim on that fund shall come into the court and have an opportunity to be heard, it does not make any difference what the claim is or how they made it.

Mr. CALL. That is not the proposition. The proposition is that the attorneys who were employed by somebody to contest the claims of other attorneys and agents shall have a first lien.

Mr. TELLER. If the court takes their cases up, I do not think they should have a first lien.

Mr. CALL. That is what the amendment is. That is the point of the objection to it.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas to withdraw that part of his amendment.

Mr. CALL. The amendment proposes to give a first lien to whom, and by whom employed? The proposition is that a contract made by the owners of this fund shall be supplemented by an authority given in this act to create a first lien in preference to the contract rights originally made between the tribe and their agents, approved by the Interior Department and administered by that Department. It is proposed to violate that contract by creating a first lien in favor of somebody not a party to the contract.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I am inclined to the opinion that the amendment as originally proposed is a very wise provision, and I think, in view of that fact, the addition proposed by the Senator from Arkansas is proper, with a single exception. I can not see why in justice the attorneys should have their claims made a prior or first lien upon the funds belonging to the Indians. If there has been any class of men having connection with the Indian business at all who have made themselves safe and got the lion's share of all that has been taken from them, the attorneys are that class. I have lived a long time in the vicinity of the Indian Territory. I know a good deal about the course of proceeding, legal and illegal, and I am aware, as every Senator upon this floor must be aware, that the attorneys have always had their hands in first; they have always been the best paid. The amendment now, without the addition of the first-lien provision, places the attorneys upon the same footing. If they are not satisfied with that, it seems to me that they ought to be cut off entirely.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to have the Senator from Kansas answer a question.

Mr. PEFFER. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are estates to settle, and attorneys are often employed to look after the interests of an estate. The attorney's fee in looking after the interest of an estate is always paid first out of the assets of the estate; it is not subordinated and relegated to the level of claims that accrued before. The service rendered in protecting the estate is always paid for as a first lien against the estate. These people were interested in having this 35 per cent fund protected against certain unjust claims. Attorneys were employed by the agent of the Old Settler Cherokees, the man who had absolute control of it, to defend that fund against what they considered unjust claims. They rendered the service, and, if they did that and protected the fund, there can be no reason, it seems to me, to put them on the level of claimants who have rendered services in the original case and not in this particular case. It seems to me that the Senator misapprehends the facts in the case; otherwise he would not take the position he does.

Mr. PEFFER. I think the presumptions are all against the lawyers. If there has been any connection whatever with the settlement of these Indian claims by attorneys, I think that the connection originated with the lawyers themselves. I do not think I ever heard of a case, or ever knew of a man who had heard of a case, where an attorney was employed for Indians that he had not sought the employment. He is the one who makes the advance. He is the one who guards himself in the beginning. The clientage of an Indian is not like ordinary clientage. The attorney is the one who seeks the employment, whereas ordinarily, among civilized people, the client is the party who seeks the attorney. Unless the attorneys are placed upon the same ground with other claimants, I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. I hope the Senator will see proper to withdraw that part of his amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. While I must insist that the reasoning of the Senator from Kansas is absolutely without any ghost of reason or fairness, I will withdraw that part of the amendment. I will strike out the words "and the same shall be a first lien on the fund aforesaid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as modified to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. On the same page we have been considering, page 72, I move to strike out, beginning at the end of line 5, the following words:

And no action shall be barred or right impaired by reason of any previous award, payment, or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior.

I will state my reason for moving to strike out those words. If anything did transpire before the Secretary of the Interior which would constitute a defense in behalf of these Indians, we ought not to take it away. They have the right to put up any defense that they see fit to this claim. As I understand the scheme of the amendment, it is that the claims against this fund, which we argued last year, shall be referred to the Court of Claims, to be tried there as in any other tribunal. The claimants may bring any proof, any argument, to support their claims that they can; and why should not the defendants, the Indians, have the same right? Is it submitting it to a fair tribunal to say, "We will submit this case to the Court of Claims, but we will shackle the hands of the Indians, and they shall not be permitted to put up the defense that they have, if they have any, or this line of defense we will not permit?"

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Utah indicate the words he proposes to strike out? What line?

Mr. BROWN. I have read them, and I will read them again. Beginning at the end of line 5, page 72, the same page we have been considering, I move to strike out the words:

And no action shall be barred or right impaired by reason of any previous award, payment, or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior.

I do not say that those rulings have been a defense or not a defense. That must depend upon the evidence to be produced concerning them. It might be that there was an award accepted by each of these claimants. If they have been paid and settled with, that is a defense in all the courts of all the world. Why should these poor Indians be deprived of it? Why do we now come and say, "You are to be heard in the tribunal fairly, equitably; only remember that you are an Indian, and if you have a defense we will not give it to you. We will bar you of all the defense you have. We are afraid that there is a defense there that will defeat these claimants, and therefore we beforehand judge that you shall not be permitted to avail yourselves of it." It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is a rank injustice. If it be answered to me that nothing transpired before the Secretary that would be a defense, still I say that you should not put that in. The claimants would have a perfect right to protect themselves if it is a defense, and that right should not be taken away.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This does not seem to affect the defense. It seems to affect the remedy.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know that it affects the remedy; it affects the defense. Let me read it again.

And no action shall be barred or right impaired—

By reason of what?

by reason of any previous award, payment, or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior.

In other words, if the claimant has gone there and been awarded all that he claims, all that he contends for, if he sees fit to claim more, that award and that payment shall not be a defense at all. That is the plain meaning and the plain expression of this language of the bill, that it shall be his defense, which seems to me to be a rank injustice toward a class of people to whom we ought to extend every favor. Instead of taking away defenses, we should extend them in their favor. These claimants are able to take care of their own; they are supposed to be attorneys, or persons interested as attorneys, in procuring this legislation, and therefore capable thoroughly of looking after their own interests. Why should we say to the poor Indian, "You shall not defend yourself against these attorneys?"

Mr. WILSON. With the permission of the Senator from Utah, I should like to ask him a question on the line of his argument. I ask if it is or is not a fact that these poor Indians employed an attorney to protect their interests, and entered into a written contract with him to pay him so much; and, after having received ten months of his services, the Secretary of the Interior decided that there was no law by which he could pay him his fee, as agreed upon between himself and the Indians, and now they are seeking every method—these poor benighted aborigines, who do not know anything and can not protect themselves—and are here protesting against the payment of the very thing they entered into a contract to pay?

Mr. BROWN. I do not so understand it. I had not intended to open up the controversy out of which this matter originated. I do not understand that there was anything due to the person who made this contract. His rights were inquired into, his rights were examined, as I understand, and he was paid, and he passed out of it, and other persons entered into it. As I understand, they have all been paid enormously for everything they have done. We went over that, I know, last year. I repeat, I do not care to enter again into that conflict. If necessary, we can open that door; but the question is, Shall the Indians be precluded from setting up any valid, legal defense that they have in law? That is the question. If my friend is right in the suggestion, in the innuendo that his question carries with it, that this man has not been paid, that the Indians have not complied with their contract, and that there has been no award, no acceptance, and no satisfaction, no disposition of it, then he does not need this clause. The court will enter judgment against the Indian tribe without such a clause. But if the Indians have a defense in the fact that there has been an award and satisfaction, why should it be taken from them, whether they are Indians or whites, or whomsoever they may be? You would not dare to pass an act of Congress prohibiting white defendants in an action in law from setting up an award or satisfaction as a defense? You would not say that a common debtor should not set up that defense. Why should you say with regard to these wards of our nation that they are suspected of having taken advantage in some way of the Secretary of the Interior, and they can not set up the defense that there has been a prior settlement of this whole matter? I do not pretend to say now whether there was or was not a settlement; but if there was a settlement, let the Court of Claims pass upon it.

Mr. WILSON. With the permission of the Senator from Utah——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. I think the Senator misunderstood me. I did not desire to convey any innuendo. The point I wanted to present to the Senator, who is a very distinguished attorney, was this: Suppose I entered into a contract with him, employed his services as an attorney, and agreed to pay him so much money for them. That contract ought to be enforced. Such a contract is of record in this case. Those Indians entered into a contract with a certain attorney to defend these claims. He performed that service, and spent nine months in doing so. It was then ascertained that the Secretary of the Interior had no authority to pay him; and now these benighted gentlemen whom the Senator talks about are standing here protesting against carrying out the very contract that they entered into themselves.

I do not care to thrash over the old straw of last Congress, when we discussed this matter, but it does seem to me fair and just that those Indians should be compelled to pay this sum out of the 35 per cent which was originally set apart, and which they entered into a contract to pay.

Mr. BROWN. I will answer the Senator from Washington. If my friend had entered into a contract with me similar to the one here, in which he promised to pay me eight hundred and odd thousand dollars for getting legislation through Congress, and I sued him for the money, I would not come before Congress and ask Congress to pass a law prohibiting him from setting up as a defense that, while it was true he had promised to pay the money, he had had an accounting with me and settled with me and had paid me every cent that I had claimed, and that I had taken the money and receipted the bill in full. That would be a legitimate defense to an attorney's bill in any court in the world. It would be a legitimate defense to the argument which the Senator has made. Why should it not be a legitimate defense? Why take it away from these defendants, whether they be poor Indians or anybody else? Every defendant in a court of justice has a right to set up those things which are a bar to the claim in law, and I insist upon it in this case as applied to these Indians.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the provision of which the Senator from Utah complains is simply that the court may have complete control of this controversy from beginning to end. These people made contracts with a lawyer, and he made contracts with other lawyers, and the controversy arose between them as to how this division should be made. There was not enough for all, according to the contract he made. We submitted that question to the Secretary of the Interior, without the consent or approval of these people; they had nothing to do with it. We simply said, "The Secretary of the Interior will now decide this thing as he thinks best;" we made him the court. He proceeded. To some of these people he allowed all their claims; to some of them he absolutely declined to allow anything, and I happen to know of one or two instances where men who had rendered considerable and long service to the Indians got nothing at all. Now, the proposition is to take the remainder of the amount, remit it to a court, and let the court distribute it according to the rules of equity; and we simply say that anything which has been heretofore done shall not stand in the way. If a man has received a portion of his claim, that shall, of course, be charged against him; if he has not received anything, he shall not be precluded from making his claim because the Secretary might have said he thought he was not entitled to it.

All of those cases were brought before the Secretary of the Interior simply upon affidavit, and in one or two instances people did not bring their cases at all, because they were not aware that this matter had been submitted in that way.

I have taken a great deal of pains to try to get this provision in a shape where there would be no afterclap to it; where people who had rendered service might be protected; where they should afterwards have no claim against the Government for having misappropriated this fund. The fund was set aside to them, and I have taken particular pains, as did all the committee, to see that every provision was made to protect the fund, and require the Government to see that the fund is properly distributed by a court, as it could not be properly done by the Secretary of the Interior. If this bar is not left in the amendment, when some claimant comes up he will be told that the Secretary has decided that he was not entitled to anything, but the courts may think he is entitled to something, and yet he would be barred out.

This is not a controversy, as the Senator from Utah seems to think, with the Indians. The Indians have parted with this money. If they deal in good faith, they are never to receive any of it. They have had the services of these people. The question simply is how the money shall be divided. Of course we have provided after the claimants have been paid an equitable sum, if there is anything left, it shall be paid to the Indians, as is proper; and we have left to the court the whole question of what is equity in the premises.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. I am not advised with reference to this matter, and I merely ask for information. Is there anything, in the Senator's opinion, in the proposed amendment which would prevent a defendant going into court and pleading satisfaction as a defense?

Mr. TELLER. No, if they can prove that to the satisfaction of the court. We simply say it shall not be a bar. They may bring their suit; it may be heard; and if it can be shown that they have been paid, as it will appear some of them have been paid their contract price, they perhaps will not sue; and if so, that ends the business. They can not get any more than that.

This provision was carefully drawn, and I believe it is best to leave it as it is. When we get through, it will be a complete adjudication, and everybody will be compelled to be satisfied.

If the Senator from Utah had had as much annoyance over this question as I have had, in trying to see that these men, some of whom appeared before me when I was Secretary of the Interior, and who, I know, earned a good deal of money, were fairly treated, I think he would be willing to let this amendment go through, because I believe it will protect everybody if it is allowed to pass.

Mr. VEST. I wish to inquire of the Senator why the committee has not drawn this provision so as to say that the rights of either party shall be protected? Why was this drawn so as to be an ex parte provision? It operates entirely in favor of the Indians and against the claimants.

Mr. TELLER. I had not the slightest idea of making it mean that; but that is exactly what I think it means now. We do not bind the Indian by anything the Secretary of the Interior did, and we do not bind anybody at all; but at the same time, of course, we must consider that they are entitled to be credited for what they have paid.

Mr. VEST. This certainly applies to one party's right of action:

And no action shall be barred or right impaired—

Of course that does not apply to the plaintiff—

by reason of any previous award, payment, or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will listen to me a moment, I think he will see that he is mistaken there. The language is:

And no action shall be barred or right impaired.

I think that cuts both ways. That is the way I understand it. If it does not mean that, I am quite willing to have the language amended as the Senator suggests, because I do not propose to take anything away from the Indians.

Mr. CALL. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Missouri to lines 13, 14, and 15, on page 71, which read:

Service of notice of suit upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be sufficient service upon said Indians, and it shall be his duty to see that the rights of the Indians are protected.

That clearly shows that the jurisdiction of the court is not to be available for the Indians, and that a proper representative shall be appointed to see that they are before the court and their rights protected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. In response to what has been said by the Senator from Florida, I merely desire to say that the bill provides that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall see that the rights of the Indians are protected and properly litigated in court, and the proposition now is to strike that out. Therefore the agent of the Indians can not do that which perhaps in his judgment he ought to do, for after having given him the power to act for these Indians the law intervenes, and says he shall go thus far and no further. It seems to me that this ought to be stricken out and let all the provisions apply to each party, and, if any man has a right to obtain any portion of this money, let him have it, and, if he has not, let the other party show that fact. The provision ought to be stricken out, in my judgment, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] is clearly right about it.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], in response to that, says that it is made the duty of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to look after this matter; but what does that amount to when we tie his hands by the very act itself? I say, therefore, the provision ought to be stricken out.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is entitled to the floor, will pardon me, I ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] or the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] to point out the language which ties the hands of the court or limits its jurisdiction? I should like him to point out the words.

Mr. BATE. On page 73, beginning in line 5, it is provided:

And no action shall be barred or right impaired by reason of any previous award, payment, or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior.

These parties had been engaged in a long litigation and 35 per cent of this vast sum of money was to go to the attorneys or to some other persons who had the management of it, and the question has been before the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior has reported that he has adjudicated the matter and paid, if I understand the matter correctly, $195,000 to these parties in the shape of fees, and these Indians thought that before that award was made they were entitled to be heard, and they made the point, and the Secretary agreed with them and refused to pay out any more. Now, this movement is taken in order to readjudicate that matter. I say that no right to make defense should be taken away from those Indians in any way, the Secretary of the Interior having paid so much upon this litigation. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. CALL. The language used expressly includes the Indians in the power of the court to make such judgment as it sees fit. It says that there shall be no bar to any right of any kind whatever. Then, again, at the beginning of the clause, it is provided—

That legal and equitable jurisdiction be, and the same hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to finally hear and determine, without the right of appeal, the claims of all persons upon the remainder of the fund withheld from distribution.

What does that mean? Suppose that those claimants have not an equitable claim, to whom does this money belong? Certainly to the Indians. That is the necessary judgment of the court.

The legal and equitable jurisdiction is extended, and there are but two parties to it—the Indians upon the one hand holding the reserved right, and the claimants under a contract with the Indians on the other. Now, if you say that the claimant has no right, who has it? Necessarily the other party; and the court in so deciding does and must decide under this language. Then the express duty is imposed upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to see that this right of the Indians is properly represented, argued, and considered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, just a word or two in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. He says that many of these claimants were not present before the Secretary of the Interior. If that is true, they are not bound by the action of the Secretary. My amendment striking it out does not propose to make them bound, if they were not; it proposes to leave it open, to use the language of the Senator from Colorado, to the complete control of the court; leaving the court in absolute possession of the full jurisdiction in every regard; leaving the claimants in every case to make a case under the rules of law; and leaving the defendants all the defense they can make, to use another expression of the Senator from Colorado, according to law and equity. It leaves the whole case absolutely in the hands of the court of equity without these words. If these words are added, however, then we are imposing a code of procedure upon the Court of Claims; we are limiting the inquiry; we are not giving them complete control according to the law and the evidence, but we are saying, "You shall have control, except that this defense will not be allowed." That is the effect of this language, as I understand it, to interfere with the defense. There may or may not be a bar. It does not necessarily follow that there is one because there was an adjudication, but the defendant should never be precluded from an attempt to set that up. If he proves it, well and good, it is a defense; if he does not prove it, this bill leaves it, without this language, entirely in the hands of this court of adjudicature. Putting in this language deprives the court of its entire control, its complete control.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a vague recollection of the discussion which took place on this bill a year ago or thereabouts, and I want to ask the Senator from Utah precisely what services these attorneys rendered; in other words, what were the terms of the contract? What were they to do for their clients?

Mr. BROWN. If I should attempt to answer that question it would open a discussion greatly wider than the present, which would probably take all day. I refer the Senator most earnestly to the discussion of last year. Last year it was stated on the one side that these persons had aided in procuring this legislation. Just what steps they had taken was not stated; I never have heard; I can not state; as the Senator from Colorado says, I know nothing about it. On the one side it was stated that they had done nothing, and on the other side it was stated that they had been interested in getting legislation through Congress by hanging around the purlieus of Congress; but as to the truth of that, I leave it out of the discussion.

Mr. GALLINGER. What amount were they to receive?

Mr. BROWN. What they were to be paid amounted to eight hundred and odd thousand dollars. That has been passed upon and adjudicated by the Secretary of the Interior, and each of these persons who was entitled to receive has received, their receipts were taken, and they have gone about their business. But there is $86,000 left of that fund, and that is now claimed by these claimants over again. The claims may be good or may not be good. I want to leave that to the tribunal to decide.

To answer the Senator from New Hampshire one question further, it has been said here that the Indians had no right to any of this fund whatever; that it is a question between the claimants. I will say, Mr. President, that the Indians think otherwise, and that their rights are not to be precluded by merely saying that they have no rights by this bill. They are entitled to be heard, and, if heard, I believe they are entitled to the $86,000, and every cent of it.

Mr. BATE. May I in that connection say a word?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. It seems that this matter was examined and that some testimony was taken in regard to it. I have never seen it; but anyway the House of Representatives, on the page preceding this, inserted a very different clause to the one we are now considering as an amendment. That clause, on page 69, beginning in line 10, shows that the House believes that this fund all belongs to the Indians, that they are entitled to it, and not these parties.

Mr. BROWN. One word further in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, if he will give me his attention for a moment. I am averse to having that controversy brought into the amendment. Whether the Indians are entitled to this or not is a question to be determined by the court and not by us here. We are leaving it to the court. The only question now before the Senate is, Shall we deprive the Indians of the defense of asserting that they have paid an award that was given? That is all. Whether the claimants have earned the money or not, and whether the Indians have paid it or not, are equally immaterial to the real issue here. The issue here before the Senate is whether the Indians shall have a right to be heard in a court of justice on that subject or not.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BROWN. I will yield the floor presently, or I will yield to the Senator now if he so desires.

Mr. STEWART. As I understand, this proposition is to have an equitable settlement in court. That is what the Senator desires, is it not?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; that is what I suggest.

Mr. STEWART. Is not equity often barred by the statute of limitations?

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator wish me to answer now?

Mr. STEWART. In a moment. Are we not constantly passing laws to remove the bar of the statute, in order that there may be an equitable investigation of claims?

Mr BROWN. In answer allow me to say to the Senator from Nevada, who I know is an old and experienced lawyer, that he knows, as well as I and every other lawyer in this Chamber knows, that equity follows the law, it follows the rule of the law; and when a claim is stale or barred by the statute of limitations there is no equity to take it out of it. When a claim in one court has a legitimate defense, there is no equity to wipe that defense out in another court. The rule of defense in a court of equity is precisely the same as that in a court of law. I will refer to the books and the lawyers of this body in support of that proposition.

Mr. STEWART. I understand what the books say about it.

Mr. BROWN. I am glad the Senator does.

Mr. STEWART. And that is the reason we are legislating in regard to these matters. The United States does not allow the bar of the statute of limitations to be raised against the Government, but nearly all of the statutes allowing claims to be presented have a provision that it shall be done within a certain time, and cases are constantly coming before us where the parties have not had an opportunity, or there is some excuse for their not coming in. Such cases occur almost every day, and we remove that bar of the statute of limitations in order that equity may be done, so that equity may not be cut off by the statute of limitations. I know while that bar of the statute of limitations remains, the courts of equity are bound by it as much as are the courts of law.

Inasmuch as the committee have examined it and have come to the conclusion that equity has not been done, it is proposed to refer the case to the court, that all parties may have a full hearing.

This case was submitted by an act of Congress to the Secretary of the Interior. It is alleged that the hearing was not full; that some who had rendered services did not receive payment, and there is a remainder which has not been distributed. It is very possible that the defense will be set up that the Secretary of the Interior has acted and that the proposed law can not operate on account of the decision he has made. Now, the object of this, it seems to me, is to give full jurisdiction and to let the case be tried on its merits, notwithstanding any decision that has been made by the Secretary of the Interior. That, I believe, is the point involved. It is not taking away any defense on the merits, but it is taking away any technical defense in bar of the action, in bar of the power of the court to do justice, which may have occurred by reason of the case having been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. If the Secretary of the Interior had jurisdiction to pass upon these claims and did pass upon them, ought not that judgment to be binding? If he had not jurisdiction to pass upon them, can his judgment be interposed as a defense?

Mr. STEWART. There are a great many cases, and we are considering them every day, such as Southern war claims, where there is no question about the jurisdiction of the court, but there are circumstances which made it impossible for the parties to present their cases, even when the tribunal had jurisdiction. For instance, the man may be dead, and his heirs did not appear, and the claim was not brought up. Whenever we find that for any reason equity has not been done, that the party has not had his day in court properly and fairly, we remove those technical bars.

Now, in this case it is stated by the Senator from Colorado that some of the parties did not have notice, and while there may have been some publication, some notice, some pretext that they ought to have been there, there may have been difficulty in presenting a case. It seems to me this is usual legislation, where Congress steps in to give a court jurisdiction to dispose of a case finally.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator whether this is really a case where the Indian got away with the lawyer?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no; it is not a case of that kind. As I understand this, it is a case where one lawyer got away with another.

Mr. GALLINGER. The lawyers got away with Congress.

Mr. BROWN. I believe I have the floor. I merely yielded for a question.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a single observation?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. The question of the Senator from California is very easily answered, as is the objection he suggests. There was a provision in the appropriation bill referring the case to the Court of Claims to examine and report and pay such of these claims as it thought proper, but reporting to the Senate at its next session as to the manner in which this had been executed. At that session and before its execution the Senate received that report and approved it as to so much, the residue remaining for further proceeding and action.

Now, there is no jurisdiction in any court as between an Indian tribe and the United States, and this was necessarily within the jurisdiction of Congress, and it has so remained to this day. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that even now and up to this time the case has always remained within the control and discretion of Congress.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say just a word in reply to my friend the Senator from Nevada. I think upon careful reflection he will revise his views. He says it is the daily practice of the Senate to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. To remove the bar between whom? It is competent for the Congress of the United States, by and with the approval of the President, by bill, to remove the bar as to the United States, as it is for any other party to waive the bar of the statute of limitations. But it is not competent for the whole Congress of the United States and all the legislatures of the States thrown into the bargain to remove the bar of the statute of limitations between private individuals. The bar of the statute of limitations, as my friend the Senator from Nevada knows right well, when it has once operated, is a vested right. Legislatures can not take it away. It is the right of a party, the same as any other defense. It is as good a right as payment. The right of award is another equally good right. If they have come before a tribunal that did not have jurisdiction and have agreed upon an award and one party has accepted the result, that is a satisfaction and that is a defense in law.

Now, all I ask in this case is that these parties may submit their case to the court unrestrained by any rule of evidence, unrestrained by any limitation upon any defense. I object to the word "award" as appearing in the sentence not a ground for defense, because it seems to me that it may have an application to an award that has been accepted. As my friend the Senator from California has well said, if the tribunal that acted, the Secretary of the Interior, had no jurisdiction and there was no acceptance of the award, of course it is no defense. It is to be presumed that the Court of Claims know the law and would not create a defense out of that which is not one. I know, as my friend the Senator from Colorado knows right well, that the judge who was recently added to that bench is an able lawyer and will certainly discriminate between those which are proper defenses and those which are not. For the reason I have stated, it seems to me we ought not to limit it in any manner. We ought to leave the jurisdiction open, unquestioned, and untrammeled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. TELLER. I propose to modify the amendment to meet the views of the Senator from Arkansas particularly, as well as those of the Senator from Utah, and I think it will leave the bill in meaning exactly where it was before. But as the Senator thinks it means a little different from what I do, I propose, in line 6, to strike out the words "action shall be barred or," and after the word "right" insert the words "of either party shall be." Then it will read:

And no right of either party shall be impaired by reason of any previous award, etc.

Mr. WALTHALL. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks the word "payment" finds a proper place in that provision?

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I will move to strike out the word "payment" in line 7, if that is satisfactory, as the Senator has called my attention to it.

I wish to say a word about this matter. The Senator from New Hampshire inquired about the origin of this claim. That would take a long time to detail. When the Cherokees were sent from Georgia to the Indian Territory, the Government of the United States agreed to pay certain expenses. It was contended by these Indians for very many years that the Government had not paid them. The expenses belonged not to the whole tribe, if they had not been paid, but to a branch of the tribe, to a certain number of people called the Old Settlers, the first people who went into that section of the country.

In 1881, I think it was, this controversy having been going on for many years, and these Indians coming here and making a claim for so much of the expenses as the Government had failed to pay, Congress provided that a commissioner should be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior who should make a casting of all these accounts, which had been running for some years. Thereupon a commissioner was appointed, who went to work and spent a year in going over these accounts and determining what was due to these Indians. The final determination was that a very large amount of money was due. Before this resolution had been passed and the commissioner provided for, the Indians had agreed with a citizen of the Indian Territory, an Indian by adoption, although a white man by birth, that they would pay him 35 per cent of whatever he could collect. I think he spent about ten or a dozen years here trying to collect something. He had made various contracts previous to this with people who were to assist him in trying to get the money which they said was due.

At or about the time when the commissioner was appointed, this gentleman employed two attorneys in this city. One was an attorney at law and the other a bookkeeper, an accountant. As Secretary of the Interior, I appointed the commissioner. It was the duty of the commissioner, of course, to cast these accounts. They were multifarious and intricate and difficult, and he availed himself of the two attorneys of the Indians, one being a lawyer and the other a bookkeeper. One was a gentleman from Arkansas, who died before the service was fully completed. The other happened to be a citizen of my State, who had been living in this city for some years before that, but had come from my State.

When they got through they rendered an account which amounted to something in the neighborhood of eight hundred and odd thousand dollars. I wish to state that that was largely made up of interest that was allowed these Indians on their old claims. When this account was sent by the Interior Department to Congress and payment asked, it was objected to in the Committee on Appropriations or somewhere else, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims then took it up and went through it; having the advantage of the findings of the commissioner and these attorneys, and rendered a judgment within a few thousand dollars of what the commissioner had found to be due, rendering it on the same principle, but differing a little in the items upon which the interest was allowed. However, I think the whole amount of difference was a few thousand dollars, perhaps ten or fifteen thousand dollars, and that was all.

I had a good deal to do with this accounting. Upon the first report being made to me by the commissioner, before I had an opportunity to look at it or know about it, these attorneys came to me and said there had been a gross error; that the commissioner had evidently mistaken the principle upon which he ought to make the accounting. They asked a hearing before me to make their statement. I made up my mind that the commissioner had made a mistake, and I sent for the commissioner and he returned. I requested him to take the papers back and go over them again and see whether or not they were correct. He returned and admitted that he had made a mistake and that the attorneys were correct. When you count interest and all that, that one transaction saved to the Indians $250,000 and more.

After he had made his second report, the attorneys came again and made another attack upon it and convinced me that he was still in error on another item. Senators must remember that there were a great number of these items running along several years, and there were intricate questions connected with them. I then ordered it back again, and he returned it, and I think the Indians gained forty or fifty thousand dollars by the transaction, as I remember it. I mention that to show that the attorneys were rendering service to the Indians all the time.

About that time one of these attorneys, the attorney at law, Mr. Wilshire, who had been a member of Congress from Arkansas, died, and that left the Indians without proper legal counsel. Then they employed some other people, because they had to go through the courts and all that. If Mr. Wilshire had lived, I suppose the case would probably have been taken through the court by him. It was taken through the court by the late Attorney-General, Mr. Garland, and then Mr. Vale or somebody else, I do not remember whom. Then when they came to the question of settling, the Indians had made a contract with Mr. Bryan to give him 35 per cent of whatever he would get. Mr. Bryan had been here, as I say, for years. He had visited my house, as he had visited the houses of others, again and again, to get something done in this matter long before I was Secretary of the Interior, and long before Congress took any active step toward determining this question.

But when the court had decided, and it came back for settlement, I think I am more reponsible than anybody else for the submission of the question to the Secretary of the Interior. I found that there were a large number of claimants for this fund, and some of the attorneys, at least two other attorneys besides Mr. Wilshire, died after the services had been commenced, and supposing that they were entitled to reasonable compensation, although two of them I had known very little about, I think I induced the proper committee to insert in the bill making appropriations for it a provision that the whole matter should be referred to the Secretary of the Interior to settle.

The Secretary of the Interior took this up—I do not wish to cast any reflection upon the Secretary, because he had to rely upon other people—and in some instances, from my knowledge of the case, I felt that he had grossly misunderstood the rights of the parties. He rendered some judgments that I thought very liberal, and some which I thought were very meager. Some gentlemen who had rendered services beyond question were not in time to get their evidence before him, and some others were, and were not allowed a single cent. There was general complaint. There were still seventy-odd thousand dollars to be paid out. Mr. Bryan claimed it all. Then, later, as the Senator from Utah says, the Indians said, "That is too much for him, and he ought not to have it," and they have been claiming. That is one of the things now to be submitted, whether it belongs to the attorneys or to the Indians.

At the last session of Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs undertook to distribute this sum among the claimants, the committee passing upon and hearing the testimony. When we came in here we found opposition to it. Although it finally passed through the Senate, when it went into conference the conference committee thought it was not fair, and they proposed to send the matter to the Court of Claims. That was objected to by the claimants at the time. They felt that they ought not to be subjected to that expense. Finally it was stricken out in conference, and we put in a provision that the money should not be paid until Congress should further direct.

It has been found since that it would be difficult to pay these people and make a satisfactory division either by any committee or by the Department, and we thought it was the best thing to send it to the Court of Claims, giving the court absolute jurisdiction, removing from the court any restriction that might seem to be upon it, because the Secretary had passed upon some claims and rejected them and allowed some in full. The intention of this amendment is to give the court absolute control, first, to determine whether these folks are entitled to anything, and, secondly, if they are entitled to anything, how much they are entitled to and how the sum shall be equitably distributed.

The House put in a provision that it should be paid to the Indians, because nobody, as I understand, appeared before the House committee at this session for the claimants. If we pay this money to the Indians, we will have the claimants here for the next twenty years insisting that Congress has taken their money and paid it to somebody to whom it did not belong. There is only one thing to do, and that is to send the matter to the court and let the court pass upon the question; and the court should not be barred because of the fact that the Secretary ex parte in many cases and without proper knowledge of the subject has determined that a man was entitled to so much or so little. Two attorneys put in a claim against this fund because they had attempted to cut out some claimants, and I think there were some claimants who were not entitled to anything at all. I have no doubt these attorneys rendered service in keeping out that class of claimants.

I supposed when this amendment was drawn that it was sufficient not only to cover the claimants who have rendered service in securing this fund from the Government, but I thought it was strong enough to recognize the two attorneys who claimed that they were entitled to something equitably and properly because they had protected the fund. But the Senator from Arkansas does not think so, and he has put in an amendment which is entirely in accord with what I think it should be as to that.

Now, I think we ought to make a final disposition of this case by sending it to the court. The court ought not to be trammeled by anything that has been done. If the court is to act in an equitable way, it should take the whole thing, charging the men whatever they have received. If they have received enough, let it say, "That is enough." If they have not received as much as they are entitled to pro rata and in proportion to their services, as I feel very certain some of them have not, then the court will grant the claim. Some of them have not received a cent, and I think they can show that they rendered good service, although in a couple of cases the attorney died before the time. Of course the heirs could only get a pro rata or an equitable amount allowed. I think the court should have the whole thing untrammeled by anything that the Secretary has done, save and except that the court will charge to the parties, whoever they may be, any sum they may have received from the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read for information the provision as modified by the committee.

Mr. TELLER. That is on page 72.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "action shall be barred or;" in the same line, after the word "right," to insert the words "of either party shall be;" and in line 7 to strike out the word "payment;" so that if amended it will read:

And no right of either party shall be impaired by reason of any previous award or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Utah offers an amendment to strike this out?

Mr. BROWN. I do. I do not accept the second amendment or the change, for the reason that so long as the word "award" is there it is liable to be misleading. An award may or may not be a defense, as I said before. If it is one, then I think these defendants ought to have the right to set it up. If, under the circumstances, it is not one, the Court of Claims are amply able to judge of it. The Court of Claims does acquire that full jurisdiction and control of this case according to law and equity without any of this language, and therefore I insist upon my motion to strike out.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I recognize this subject as one that was debated at some length in the last session of Congress. At that time it was proposed to pay these various atttorneys certain fixed sums of money. I opposed that payment, and moved an amendment that the claims should be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication. That amendment was voted down by the friends of the attorneys, and a long struggle took place between the House and the Senate conferees, which came to a final end by the withdrawal by the Senate of the proposition to pay the attorneys.

I am willing now to vote for the proposition made a year ago, that these cases shall be referred to the Court of Claims, but I must confess that I do not like the ingenious way in which this long amendment has been constructed in the interest of the plaintiffs and against the Indians. I would inquire at this point whether or not the words "without the right of appeal," in line 5, on page 70, have been stricken out or are to be stricken out?

Mr. BATE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that that has been already remedied. The right of appeal is retained by an amendment made this afternoon.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the amendment as it stands in the printed bill is altered in that respect.

I do not see why so many limitations upon the Indians should be made. In the first place, the policy of the Government has been to impose obligations upon Indian tribes only after there have been certain formalities observed in the making of contracts by and in behalf of the Indians. The Indians are the wards of the Government, and the Government has undertaken that they shall not be swindled either by attorneys or any other class in the community, and for the purpose of protecting the Indians provisions to be found in sections 2103 and 2104 of the Revised Statutes have been enacted into laws of the United States. It is provided in this clause, on page 71:

And the operation of sections 2103 and 2104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are otherwise hereby suspended as to said actions.

I should like to know, with a perfect disposition to do justice by these claimants, why that defense of the Indians should be stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. As the Senator has the statute before him, if he will read it he will see without any trouble why it is done.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will read it. The provision carefully put into the statute book, without reading the whole of it, but giving the exact substance of it, is that no agreement shall be binding upon tribes of Indians or individual Indians taking money from them unless the agreement shall be in writing, and a duplicate of it delivered to each party. It shall be executed before a judge of a court of record; it shall have the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs indorsed upon it; it shall contain the names of all parties in interest, their residence and occupation; and if made with a tribe by their tribal authorities, the scope of authority and the reason for exercising that authority shall be given specifically.

"Fourth. It shall state the time when and place where made, the particular purpose for which made, the special thing or things to be done under it, and, if for the collection of money, the basis of the claim, the source from which it is to be collected, the disposition to be made of it when collected, the amount or rate per cent of the fee in all cases; and if any contingent matter or condition constitutes a part of the contract or agreement it shall be specifically set forth.

"Fifth. It shall have a fixed limited time to run, which shall be distinctly stated."

Then the statute goes on and makes a contract or agreement not made in accordance with this section null and void.

There is a very carefully drawn, beneficent statute of the United States, made for the protection of the Indians, the wards of the nation, and made especially, as the Senator from Colorado will notice, for the purpose of protecting Indians against exorbitant claims of attorneys, exorbitant claims of agents, collecting agents, agents who represent their peculiar ability to secure moneys for the Indians from the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I wholly fail to see why those sections of the statute should be blotted out. A year ago, when these cases were under discussion, the Senator from South Dakota produced here agreements which were apparently made by these Indians in accordance with the statute; there were certainly the forms of law observed in connection with these contracts; and it was not hinted at that time that there was any desire to have the Indians pay attorneys' fees when the contract to pay those fees was made in violation of these two sections of the statute.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to interrupt him, merely to make a suggestion?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. The provisions of the statute which the Senator has read have nothing to do with this case or with the text of the bill. The agreement was long ago completed in full compliance with every letter and every word of that statute and it was approved by the Interior Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand there is no need of these provisions.

Mr. CALL. The meaning of the provisions is simply that there is no authority to bring suit against a tribe of Indians. They are not recognized in that respect under any of our legislation. It is supposed that we must create a special authority in this act for them to be parties to that suit, and the provisions of that statute which prohibit any agreement being made except in that particular form are suspended so that they may make an agreement to be represented in these cases; and where they do not, the text of the provision imposes the duty upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to represent them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not commented upon the first portion of this clause, which makes the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians a tribe of Indians with power to contract through their duly authorized commissioner, agent, or attorney. I have not objected to that provision. Though I do not quite see why, if they had not the power when these alleged contracts were made, we should undertake to make a provision of law that relates back and creates the power, I have not objected to that portion of the clause. I do not propose to strike it out. I am willing, as I now understand the case, to have the law assert the right of this tribe of Indians to contract. But what I am contending for is that this tribe of Indians, or the individuals composing the tribe, shall not be subjected to the payment of sixty or seventy thousand dollars, more or less, of attorneys' and claim agents' fees, claims presented in behalf of men who have already been paid enormous sums of money, and that, in an express provision sending the cases to the Court of Claims, every one of the safeguards provided by the Revised Statutes shall not be stricken out in behalf of the attorneys, who are the claimants, and in hostility to the Indians, whom we profess an obligation and a desire to protect.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. Does not the Senator see that it is necessarily true that this agreement having been made in writing and having been approved by the Interior Department, to set aside 35 per cent of that money for Bryan and his associates, and the agreement having been affirmed and reaffirmed, and impliedly affirmed in Congress, there could be no such result in submitting the case to the Court of Claims as to deprive these Indians of any rights under that statute, because in the first instance every provision of the statute has been complied with as to a contract in writing to set aside 35 per cent of an unascertained and indefinite sum, which was fixed only after years of decision and negotiation and reference between the tribe and the United States? It could only be done through the executive department. There is no jurisdiction in the courts. Now it is proposed to give to the court full jurisdiction, and not one provision of the statute is affected by it. If the Senator desires to enlarge the scope of the provision, I suppose it will be acceptable to the committee, because I know that there has been no purpose to exclude anyone from any rights.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought the Senator from Florida wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. CALL. I beg the Senator's pardon; I saw he was misinformed as to the law of the case.

Mr. PLATT. I will state why I understand that this provision was inserted. There are some persons who have no claims except under the original written contract with Bryan, who claim that he employed them. Two such parties belong in the State of North Carolina, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] felt that they ought to have a right to bring their suit separately and not have to rely upon their rights for a suit brought in the name of Mr. Bryan. There may be some others in the same situation, but there are especially those two cases.

Mr. CHANDLER. In order to let two or three attorneys bring a suit in their own name we are enacting that claimants can come in and recover these moneys as fees for services rendered the Indians without any written contract whatever, without any of the safeguards which have been provided by this statute being proved to have been thrown around these Indians. I must confess I am suspicious of the provision. I do not see why it should be here. The claim a year ago was distinct and explicit that every one of the contracts in favor of the attorneys whose fees it was sought to pay by direct appropriation had been made in accordance with the statute. The Senator from South Dakota produced here votes of these Indians in which they apparently made themselves liable to the claims of attorneys. Now the proposition is that without any regard whatever to the manner in which the contracts to pay the attorneys may have been made or the obligations to pay the attorneys may have arisen, the claimants may recover in the Court of Claims. I think the language of the first clause of the amendment is broad enough.

That legal and equitable jurisdiction be, and the same hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to finally hear and determine, without the right of appeal, the claims of all persons, etc.

Using in the twelfth line the phrase "for legal services justly and equitably payable," I ask Senators who advocate this amendment why that is not enough; why they want to go on and not only declare that the tribe, as a tribe, shall be deemed to have power to contract, but that any contract which can by any possibility be implied with Bryan or the individual members of the tribe may be resorted to in order to take this remnant of the money away from these Indians and give it to these attorneys? It seems to me that the amendment ought to have been written in about twenty lines. Yet it goes on and contains all these provisions which seem to me to be carefully constructed to dig out from under the Indians every prop that the laws now give them for their protection. I think that the words "and the operation of sections 2103 and 2104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are otherwise hereby suspended as to said actions" should be stricken out, and I certainly think that the words "and no action shall be barred or right impaired by reason of any previous award, payment, or ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior" should be stricken out.

With reference to the last clause, to which attention has been called by the Senator from Utah, what is the need of it? Why should these Indians try this case with their attorneys by any other rule of action than would prevail if the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from South Dakota or the Senator from Utah were sued by their attorneys? A suit is authorized against the United States. There may be a recovery of whatever is justly and equitably due. Why should we go out of the way to say that a particular defense shall not be interposed, that one defense and another defense shall not be interposed?

If the parties had given a release under seal, upon a payment being made to them of all claim whatever, this provision blots out that release and these Indians are to try all over again claims which they have settled once. Mr. President, you would not deal with a white man that way if you were to pass a special law authorizing suit to be brought against him. You might remove the statute of limitations in a case where it would be equitable to do so, but in restoring a claimant to his law, as the old expression used to be, you never would think of enacting that a settlement previously made, that an award previously made, should be wiped out by statute in case suit was brought. I can not conceive why we want to make these Indians try this case with a provision in the statute depriving them of the ordinary rights which belong to every defendant in any suit at law that ever was heard of under the sun.

If those amendments can be made, then the provision, although it is ten times as long as it need be, is in accordance with the plan for settling this matter which I advocated a year ago, and I shall give it my vote. But if these provisions remain so unjust to the Indians as I believe them to be, so unfair, so unbecoming in this great Government of the United States, I shall vote against the amendment. I hope, in that case, it will be voted down by the Senate, and if it is not, and is adopted, I hope the House of Representatives will be just as determined in the maintenance and protection of the fair and equitable rights of these Indians as they were a year ago.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I am entirely satisfied with the first eleven lines of the amendment proposed by the committee. I am dissatisfied with all that remains on that page of the amendment. When the proper time comes, I will move to strike out all after the words "thirty-one cents," in the eleventh line on page 70 and all of the six lines on the seventy-first page to the word "actions."

Now, let us see exactly what this provision is. Surplusage and useless words always involve embarrassment in the discussion of any right. The amendment confers legal and equitable jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to finally hear and determine, without the right of appeal, the claims of all persons upon the remainder of the fund withheld from distribution out of the money derived from 35 per cent of the judgment in favor of the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians and against the United States, in the sum of $800,366.31.

Will the Senator who has charge of the bill please tell me why the following words should be inserted?

Alleged to have been set apart for the payment of expenses, and for legal services justly and equitably payable, on account of the prosecution of the claims of said Indians under the act of Congress approved August 28, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes," and again withheld from distribution under the act of Congress approved June 10, 1896, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Such language is not necessary to identify the fund. The fund is sufficiently identified in the first eleven lines. Its effect will only be to produce confusion and embarrassment. The fund being once sufficiently designated, all has been done in that direction that is possible by the use of language. The further terms of identification which I have read simply embarrass the provision. Then again:

And the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians, for the purposes of the actions hereby authorized, shall be considered a tribe of Indians, with power—

To make contracts. Have the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians now power to make a contract? If they have, why ratify or confer upon them this power? Why create a corporation to be composed of the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians with powers to contract? Is it not the purpose of the amendment to validate contracts that are not now supposed to be valid?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say, as far as the Old Settler Cherokees are concerned, that they are not a tribe; they are not an organization, a corporation. We undertook by this amendment to make provision so that they could get into court and defend their rights, if they had any.

Mr. PALMER. The contract that produced this fund is to-day, as respects the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians, a valid contract or it is not a valid contract. The purpose of the amendment is to give validity to that which is not heretofore valid. It means to create an ex post facto capacity to contract—a power to make a contract long after the alleged contract was made. I will state its effect against the United States, because surely no Senator would claim that a contract between private parties which was not valid at the time it was made could be validated by an act of Congress except as against the United States itself.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PALMER. With pleasure.

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask the honorable Senator how he would get jurisdiction over this part of a tribe of Indians, unrecognized in the laws as a person? I suggest to the Senator that you would have to take every individual Indian. You can not effectuate jurisdiction conferred in that court without giving some kind of corporate existence or authority to somebody to represent this great mass of people.

Mr. PALMER. If that was all there was in this language——

Mr. CALL. That is what it was intended for.

Mr. PALMER. It reads:

And the Old Settler or Western Cherokee Indians, for the purposes of the actions hereby authorized, shall be considered a tribe of Indians, with power to contract through their duly authorized commissioner, agent, or attorney.

Mr. CALL. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois that there is no power to contract with Indians except that created by statute. The other jurisdiction is one that is discretionary with the sovereignty of the United States. In order to give the Indians full power in the court for their protection, language is inserted authorizing the contract for the purposes of the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. PALMER. This is intended to validate a contract.

Mr. CALL. For that action.

Mr. PALMER. It is not intended to confer a power to be exercised in future, a power to contract hereafter. That is not the purpose of it?

Mr. CALL. No.

Mr. PALMER. The purpose is to treat this as a valid subsisting contract, to be enforced now.

Mr. CALL. For that action.

Mr. PALMER. Although these Indians had no power to make a contract at the time they proposed it.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me, his language goes too far. They had no power to make a contract which could be recognized by the courts of the United States, but they had power to make a contract which could be recognized in the executive department of the Government and which would be binding upon the executive department.

Mr. PALMER. Then I understand it is the purpose to give to this contract legal validity.

Mr. CALL. That is true, for that action.

Mr. PALMER. That is, a contract which was before illegal or without the support of law, it is proposed to give the support of law.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no; it was lawful so far as the executive department is concerned, but the Indians not being subject to the judicial authority of the Government, it was not a contract recognizable in the courts without special authority created by act of Congress.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the whole thing looks suspicious to me. This bill proposes to give legal validity to a supposed contract. It is meant to require of the Court of Claims, in the consideration of the alleged claims of various parties, to treat this as a contract made by parties capable of contracting, and for a sufficient consideration, and to give to the Court of Claims the power to enforce it. It changes the rights of these parties for the purposes of this bill.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no.

Mr. PALMER. That which was before a mere equitable contract, or a mere contract in the appreciation of the executive department, is made by the force of this statute a legal, valid contract. It gives to it a quality which it never possessed before, and never will possess until this amendment is adopted. Then—

The operations of sections 2103 and 2104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are otherwise hereby suspended as to said actions.

Then, again, the relation of those Indians to the United States is changed by this proposed amendment. That which was the law, as I understood it when read by the Senator from New Hampshire, required certain formalities, the interposition of certain officers to protect the Indians. The laws are suspended for the purposes of this case.

Mr. CALL. In favor of the Indians.

Mr. PALMER. First, a contract is clothed with legal quality and the law is suspended so that these persons may produce or prove a contract not subject to the provisions of those statutes.
